The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado modifies his amendment as will be stated. What was the first modification?

Mr. TELLER. After the name "Sypher" I wish to insert "his heirs or assigns."

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I wish the Senator would not put in the word "assigns." I do not think Mr. Sypher ought to assign the claim and have it prosecuted by assignees.

Mr. TELLER. I will put in "his legal representatives."

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. "His heirs or legal representatives."

Mr. TELLER. "His heirs or legal representatives."

Mr. CULLOM. That will cover it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado modifies his amendment as will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the amendment the following:

With the right to either party to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. BACON. The amendment has not been printed, and therefore I have not a copy before me. I move to strike out the words:

shall certify the amount found to be due and payable to said Sypher by said nation under said agreement to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall pay the amount found to be due and payable to said Sypher, his heirs or legal representatives, as herein provided, out of any money in the Treasury belonging to the Choctaw Indians, or out of any moneys which may hereafter become due said Indians.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

And shall report the result of their findings to the next session of Congress.

I want to insert it so as not to interfere with the last provision about the appeal.

Mr. TELLER. In that case you will not want any appeal, as it will not be a final judgment.

Mr. STEWART. No; it will not be a final judgment.

Mr. BACON. That is with the Senator. If he prefers to have the provision for an appeal remain in, I will not ask that it be taken out.

But it seems to me this is the proper view to take of this matter. We had a discussion here lasting nearly two days as to how much was properly due Mr. Sypher, and there was very great diversity of opinion among Senators on that point. I take it that if that one matter of difference could have been accommodated the amount would have been voted to Mr. Sypher.

Now, I am perfectly willing that there shall be a provision made by which that amount shall be ascertained by the court in such manner as will be satisfactory to Congress, and that then it shall come to Congress for payment. I believe, whenever that is done, whatever amount the Court of Claims may find to be due to Mr. Sypher will be voted by Congress, to be paid out of the Choctaw fund. But personally, speaking for myself only, and not knowing how other Senators may feel about it, I do not like the idea where we have a trust fund, because it is a trust fund in the highest sense, that we shall entirely dismiss from ourselves all responsibility of this matter and turn it over to a court without any further opportunity for us to consider the propriety of the payment of the amount. I state that in connection with the further statement that I believe whatever amount the Court of Claims may find to be due will be adjudged by Congress as a proper amount to be paid.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia offers an amendment to the amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the words "said agreement" it is proposed to strike out the remainder of the amendment and to insert "and shall report the result of their findings to the next session of Congress."

Mr. CULLOM. Read the first part of it, and let us see what we have left.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The entire amendment will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

That the claim of J. Hale Sypher against the Choctaw Nation for legal and professional services rendered by him to said nation under an agreement made and entered into between the legally authorized commissioners of said nation and said Sypher on the 7th day of November, 1891, is hereby referred to the Court of Claims for adjudication. And jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon said court to hear and determine said claim upon the principles of a quantum meruit, and without regard to the provisions and requirements of section 2103 of the Revised Statutes; and the said court shall ascertain and determine the character, extent, and value of the services rendered by said Sypher to said nation under said agreement; and the court having ascertained and determined the amount justly and equitably due and payable from said nation to said Sypher for services rendered by him under said agreement, shall report the result of their findings to the next session of Congress.

Mr. BACON. I desire to change the phraseology so that it shall read "shall report their findings" instead of "the result of their findings."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER. If the chairman of the committee will turn to page 41, I wish to call his attention to a matter. I move, after the word "allottees," in line 14, page 41, to insert "in the Indian Territory."

Mr. STEWART. There is no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole be concurred in in gross?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I should like to reserve a separate vote on the amendment about the difference between coin and paper with respect to the Delaware Indians.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut asks that the item to which he has referred may be reserved for a separate vote.

Mr. TELLER. Before that is done I wish to offer another amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is in the Senate and the Senator can offer the amendment in the Senate.

Mr. TELLER. It is in the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is in the Senate now.

Mr. TELLER. Then, I will offer it at the present time. I do not know anything about the necessity of the amendment or the propriety of it, but some telegrams have been received here saying it ought to be done, and in order to get an expression of the Senate, one way or the other, I offer it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill the following:

SEC. —. That in addition to the places now provided by law for holding courts in the central judicial district of Indian Territory, court shall be held in the town of Wapanucka; and all laws regulating the holding of courts in the Indian Territory shall be applicable to the court hereby created in the town of Wapanucka.

That the territory described in this section shall be known as "recording district No. 27," commencing at the intersection of the dividing line between townships 1 and 2 north with the range line between ranges 5 and 6 east, and running east on the dividing line between townships 1 and 2 north to its intersection with the range line between ranges 9 and 10 east; thence south on the dividing line between ranges 9 and 10 east to its intersection with the dividing line between townships 2 and 3 south; thence west on the dividing line between townships 2 and 3 south to its intersection with range line between ranges 5 and 6 east; thence north on said range line between ranges 5 and 6 east to the point of beginning. That any territory included within the above-described boundaries now in the central judicial district shall be added to the southern district. The place of recording in district No. 27 shall be at the town of Wapanucka, and the provisions of the act of Congress approved February 19, 1903, shall apply to this district where applicable.

That terms of the United States district court in the central judicial district of Indian Territory shall hereafter be held at the town of Hugo, Choctaw Nation, instead of at Antlers, as at present, and Hugo shall hereafter be the recording place for recording district No. 24. That all court and recording records shall, as soon as practicable, be transferred from Antlers to Hugo, and the clerk of the court now located at Antlers shall continue the clerk of the court to be located at Hugo for a period of four years from the removal of the court to Hugo.

That the judge of the central district is hereby authorized to appoint a United States commissioner for the central judicial district of Indian Territory, who shall be permanently located at Boswell City; and said commissioner is authorized to appoint a constable for his court, who shall receive the same compensation as is paid to similar officers in Indian Territory.

Mr. STEWART. The committee was unable to determine the question as to these courts. There is a great deal of contention down there, and I think it ought to be more fully considered. I hope the Senator from Colorado will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. If it is open to the point of order, I make the point of order. It is general legislation.

Mr. FORAKER. What is this?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It establishes a new court.

Mr. CULLOM. Before the point of order is passed upon I should like to make an inquiry as to whether this proposition in any way relates to the Muscogee region, where there are three separate districts, as I understand, with a judge in each?

I have been getting many letters from that country insisting that there should be some court service there; that there are some 5,000 or more cases on the dockets of those three circuits, with no power on the part of the judges to perform the service necessary to be rendered. It has seemed to me all the time that some committee having the subject in charge ought to report a measure, so that those people might have some relief. I should like to know now, as the subject is up, whether there is any prospect of any judges being created by any bill, so as to give that section of the country relief by having their cases tried.

Mr. STEWART. I will say to the Senator that if it is done at all, it ought to be done by a bill, after hearing all the parties. There are a dozen places which are claiming it, and I do not believe we can legislate intelligently about it on this bill. We did not have time to fix it in committee. We want more time. Let some committee take charge of this matter.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. This does not raise the question of which the Senator from Illinois was speaking.

Mr. CULLOM. I wanted to know whether it does or not.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Not at all.

Mr. TELLER. It provides for the holding of court at a certain place.

Mr. CULLOM. I should like to know, if this is the time to inquire, whether there is any committee which is doing anything in the direction of creating additional judges, so that the cases there may be disposed of; and if this committee has not jurisdiction of the matter, I should like to know whether the Judiciary Committee is doing anything on the subject.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. There have been several bills referred to the Judiciary Committee, and they are receiving as much consideration as they can receive under the circumstances, I suppose. It is very difficult to tell what ought to be done in the Indian Territory about the creation of new courts and the appointment of new judges. It is a very difficult matter, about which there are a variety of opinions; but this amendment does not touch that question. It provides that court shall be held at a certain town of which the committee never heard.

Mr. CULLOM. It is a matter of no great consequence, so far as I know, whether it shall be in one town or another, so that there are courts provided in that country which can discharge the duties. I think some committee, and it would seem to me the Judiciary Committee, should take charge of it.

Mr. STEWART. I raise the point of order that the amendment proposes general legislation and can not be inserted on the pending bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. QUAY. I desire to give notice that after the disposition of the Delaware amendment I will ask to reserve for separate votes the amendment on pages 86 to 90, in relation to Sulphur City, and also the amendment on page 54, as to the sales of lands for cash in the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations, with the right to make the point of order on them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania gives notice that he desires to reserve the amendments on pages 54 and 86 to 90. Shall the votes on the other amendments be taken in gross?

Mr. CULBERSON. If it is necessary, I desire to give notice that I will renew the point of order on the claim of the Chippewa Indians of the State of Minnesota, page 57, and I reserve the point of order on the amendment relating to the Sulphur Springs territory, as well as certain private claims in the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas gives notice of his desire to reserve the amendment on page 57, and the one relating to Sulphur Springs, and of certain private claims. Shall the vote be taken in gross on concurring in the rest of the amendments?

Mr. ALLISON. Has the reservation been made of the Delaware amendment?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has.

Mr. BACON. Has the bill been reported to the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has. It is in the Senate now.

Mr. BACON. In what manner will these various points of order be made, if not now?

Mr. SPOONER. They are reserved.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is asking whether or not the amendments reported to the Senate shall be concurred in in gross, and Senators are asking that certain amendments may be reserved.

Mr. BACON. After that?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes. Shall the rest of the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole be concurred in in gross? The Chair hears no objection.

The amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut asks a separate vote on an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 92, after line 13, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, inserted an amendment, as follows:

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to forthwith ascertain, as nearly as practicable, the difference between the currency value of each payment made to the Delaware Indians residing in the Cherokee Nation under the treaty of August 22, 1860, and the supplemental treaty of July 2, 1861, from 1862 to 1878, both inclusive, and the value of a like amount of coin with which the United States was chargeable under said treaty for said Delaware Indians; and he shall pay to said Delaware tribe of Indians residing in the said Cherokee Nation, in the Indian Territory, as said tribe in council shall direct, the amount so ascertained and found to be due, and the sum of $130,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for said purpose out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Before the amendment is acted upon finally in the Senate I wish to state what I understand to be the facts about this claim. I do not think it is or can be sufficiently ascertained so that we ought to make an appropriation for it, even admitting that there is an equitable liability on the part of the Government to pay anything.

The facts are about as follows: The claim was made by the Delaware Indians that they should be paid the difference between gold and currency arising out of two treaties.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Connecticut allow the Chair to lay before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, in response to a resolution offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY], as to this very point?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I should like to have it laid before the Senate and read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the communication.

The Secretary read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, March 24, 1904.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

SIR: In reply to the Senate resolution of the 23d instant—

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish forthwith to the Senate a statement showing the difference in value between coin and currency on payments made by the United States to the Delaware Indians from and including the year 1862 to and including the year 1878, said payments being set forth in the report of the subcommittee of the Senate on Indian Affairs, dated March 29, 1902"—

I have the honor to state that the difference in value between coin and currency on payments made to the Delaware Indians for the period stated in the resolution was $208,804.50.

Respectfully, H. A. TAYLOR, Acting Secretary.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, the letter simply shows that the Secretary can not ascertain the amount, because the amount heretofore supposed to have been ascertained at the Treasury, it was supposed, would be covered by $130,000. Now, the Treasury Department says it is two hundred and some thousand dollars. To-morrow they will say, probably, that they can not ascertain how much it is.

I think a short statement will show why this trouble arises. The Delawares have claimed for some two or three sessions past that they were entitled to the difference between gold and currency arising under two treaties, one of 1854, I think, and one of 1860. Under the treaty of 1854 they claimed that they had something like a million dollars in the Treasury and that it should have been paid to them in gold, but that it was paid out to them in currency, and under the treaty of 1861 that they were entitled to the difference between gold and currency upon payments of about $286,000.

Mr. QUAY. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Certainly.

Mr. QUAY. In that treaty it was specifically agreed that the Delawares should be paid in gold and silver.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not think so. I will come to that in a minute.

Last year the committee recommended that so much of the claim as arose under the treaty of 1854 should be referred to the Court of Claims for trial and adjustment, but were persuaded to put into the appropriation bill of last year a provision similar to one that is in the bill this year relating to the payments upon this sum of about $286,000, which, it was alleged, had been paid into the Treasury in gold under the treaty of 1860.

Mr. President, there is first a very great doubt existing as to whether any gold was ever paid into the Treasury under the treaty of 1860. I think I may say it is conceded that no actual money was paid into the Treasury under the provisions of that treaty. Indeed, the memorial which the Indians have filed here, I think, admits no money has been paid into the Treasury under that treaty. There was a treaty made between the Delawares and the United States by which it was agreed—

That certain lands in Kansas should be sold to the Leavenworth, Pawnee and Western Railroad Company, to be paid for into the United States Treasury "in gold or silver coin," and that upon such payment to be made at rates therein specified the United States should issue to said railroad company a patent for said lands.

I am reading now from the memorial of the Delawares themselves. They say:

It was further provided that the United States would accept said trust and "that the money resulting from such disposition of the lands shall be disposed of and applied in the manner provided for by the seventh and eighth articles of the Delaware treaty of 6th May, 1854, after expending a sufficient sum to enable them to commence agricultural pursuits under favorable circumstances," and thereby the United States agreed that it, as trustee, should care for said additional moneys so to be procured and invest the same as a permanent fund for the Delawares, pursuant to said article 7 of said treaty of 1854.

It will be observed that the question whether the Government became liable for the payment of the difference between coin and currency under the treaty of 1854 is now in contention in the Court of Claims upon the case referred there. But the fact is that this railroad company purchasing the lands found that it was not able to pay the money into the Treasury, and so in 1861 a new treaty was entered into with these Indians, by which they agreed that they would accept the bonds of this railroad company to the amount specified, $286,000, in lieu of requiring the company to pay the money into the Treasury. That arrangement was carried out under President Lincoln, and bonds were issued for the $286,000 and delivered to the Indians. They ran ten years. They were payable at 6 per cent interest. There was nothing whatever in those bonds saying that they should be paid, either principal or interest, in gold. A copy of the bond is in the treaty. I could refer to it, but I do not wish to make too long an explanation.

So we have here just this situation precisely: The first treaty provided that the railroad company might buy the lands at $1.15 an acre, with the consent of the Indians, and should pay into the Treasury two hundred and eighty-six thousand and odd dollars in gold or silver coin. They never did pay any money into the Treasury at that time. The only way they ever paid any money into the Treasury was by paying their bonds when the ten years had expired.

The Government never stipulated in any treaty that it would invest the money which it received, principal or interest, payable in gold. At least, that is the claim of the Government. The Delawares seek to put a different construction on the seventh article of the treaty of 1854; but, reading that article, I can not find that the Government ever agreed to pay gold, either principal or interest, to these Indians for any of the moneys in their care.

Then, it becoming impossible at the time for the railroad company to pay this money into the Treasury, as I have said, the Indians agreed that that amount might be placed in bonds running ten years, and, those bonds being delivered for their use, the provisions of the treaty which had required payment of gold or silver coin into the Treasury should be considered as complied with.

The fact, then, is there never was any gold paid into the Treasury. There is no evidence as to how the payment of the bonds at the end of ten years was made, but certainly no payment was ever made into the Treasury in money of any kind until the expiration of the bonds in 1871.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. The report of the committee, in dealing with this transaction, says that the bonds, "principal and interest, were payable to or for the benefit of the Delawares in gold and silver and not in depreciated currency." I thought I understood the Senator to say that there was no such provision in the bonds.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I have a copy of the form of the bonds right in the treaty (12 Stat., p. 1182):

Know all men by these presents: That the Leavenworth, Pawnee and Western Railroad Company is held and bound to the United States, as trustee for the Delaware tribe of Indians, in the sum of $10,000, to be paid to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, or bearer, at the office of the assistant treasurer of the United States in the city of New York, in ten years from the date hereof, on the surrender of this bond, with interest on said sum from the same date at 6 per cent per annum, payable annually at the same office, on the surrender, as they severally fall due, of the annexed interest warrants. This bond being one of twenty-nine bonds for sums amounting in the aggregate to $290,560, the payment of which, with the interest warrants attached, is secured by mortgage of even date herewith on 100,000 acres of the land acquired by said company, under the conditions and provisions of the treaty between the United States and the Delaware tribe of Indians of May 30, 1860.

In witness whereof the Leavenworth, Pawnee and Western Railroad Company, by Thomas Ewing, jr., their agent, have signed this obligation, and have attached thereto their corporate seal this 14th day of May, 1861.

The Leavenworth, Pawnee and Western Railroad Company.

[SEAL.] By THOMAS EWING, Jr.,
Their Agent.

There is nothing in the bond stating how the principal or interest should be paid.

Mr. PATTERSON. What is the date of the bond?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The date of the bond is the 14th of May, 1861.

Mr. President, it may be, and I am not going to say it would not be, that if this case went to the Court of Claims, upon a full hearing of it there the Court of Claims might find that there was an equitable claim against the United States for the difference between gold and currency; but I have not been able to see how the United States in any way became liable for that difference.

I want to say that last year, when this matter was under consideration, I, with other members of the Indian Affairs Committee, devoted hours and days, and I do not know but I might say weeks, to the hearing of the parties representing this claim; and that I have studied with a great deal of care all the accounts as furnished us by the Treasury Department, and I have become satisfied that if it were admitted that the Government ought equitably to pay the difference between gold and currency the accounts at the Treasury Department do not specify whether the payments made to the Indians in those accounts were made from the proceeds of those bonds or whether they were from some other source. All that I say about it now is that I have not been able to satisfy myself, in all my investigation, that there is any legal or equitable claim on the Government to pay this difference under the treaties mentioned; but it certainly ought not to be taken for granted here and the appropriation made. If it were a proposition to refer the matter to the Court of Claims I should not object to it.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I believe the Indians have an equity. I am somewhat embarrassed by the consideration that there will be very great difficulty by the Department in ascertaining that equity; but I want the Senate to listen for a moment to a statement of the case.

A railroad company wanted to build through the reservation of the Delawares and wanted a large tract of land. The treaty of 1860 was undoubtedly instigated by the railroad company. They got the treaty made with the Indians, and in that treaty it is provided that the land should be bought by them on an appraisement, provided the appraisement shall not be less than a dollar and a quarter an acre in gold. The railroad company were unable to make the payment. In 1861 they procured another arrangement to be made, which was not a treaty in any very legitimate sense of the term. The railroad company undoubtedly got this order made by President Lincoln, which recites as follows:

Whereas by the treaty of Sarcoxieville, amended by the United States Senate, and finally ratified by the President of the United States on the 22d day of August, 1860, a principal object of both parties was the construction of a certain contemplated railroad therein named, and to that end the Leavenworth, Pawnee and Western Railroad Company were to pay into the United States Treasury, in gold or silver coin a sum of money, afterwards ascertained to be $286,742.15, as the appraised value of certain lands in Kansas belonging to the Delaware tribe of Indians.

Now, the lands were appraised as being worth that sum in gold—which sum of money, after expending a sufficient part of it to enable the Indians to commence agricultural pursuits under favorable circumstances, was to be, by the President, for said Indians, invested in safe and profitable stocks.

The President had the right to invest it in stock. The land was to be appraised and paid for in gold. The minimum price in gold was a dollar and a quarter an acre, and it was so appraised. According to that minimum price, the land they acquired came to $286,742.15. Thus far there is no doubt about their being entitled to payment in gold. Then the order of the President goes on:

It is directed by the President that said railroad company may execute their bonds, with interest warrants or coupons attached, according to the forms hereto annexed, the principal of which bonds shall amount to the aggregate sum of $286,742.15, and deposit the same with Archibald Williams, of Kansas, hereby appointed to receive and receipt for the same.

In that there was no allegation that the form of bond presented, as stated by the Senator from Connecticut, was not a gold bond. Probably in drawing it it might have been overlooked At all events the Indians supposed it was a gold bond. Then it was provided in this order that it should not go into effect until this proclamation of the President was read to the Indians and approved by them and received their certificate. Here is the certificate which the order required:

And I do further certify that I have had before me the chiefs and headmen therein named, as John Connor, Sar cox ie, and Ne con he con, and also James Connor, who was the delegate at large of said tribe, in making the treaty of 1860, and read to them the said paper signed by the President, and fully explained to them the nature and effect of the proposition set forth in said paper; and that, after they had fully discussed the proposition, John Connor, in English, and James Connor, Sar cox ie, and Ne con he con, through the said John Connor and other interpreters, declared that they understood it thoroughly, and each freely assented to the same; and that evidence has been presented to me by John Connor and other chiefs of said tribe by which I am satisfied that Rock a to wha died several months ago, and that no chief has been appointed in his place.

It was read to them in that way, and in reading it to them the first part of it was a recital that it was appraised at so much in coin. I take it for granted that they did not understand what that bond was, because immediately after they commenced paying them in currency the Delawares sent in their protest and stated that it was to be paid in coin. The Department might have paid it in bulk, and there is great difficulty in tracing the money and ascertaining how much they paid from this particular fund. The bonds were deposited with the Secretary of the Interior and the proceeds, as the money was collected, paid over to them. They complained, when the proceeds were paid, that the amount was not sufficient, and I take it they might have fairly understood from the reading of the order to them that there was no change made in the original contract. The original contract required gold. The land had to be appraised in gold, and it could not be appraised at less than a dollar and a quarter an acre. Then the subsequent arrangement recited what had been done, and there is no doubt that if the land was taken it was so much gold due them. Then it goes on and provides for the bonds. That they understood to be a mere extension of time. They did not understand that it was a change of language, but a mere extension of the time of payment.

Now, I do not think the Government of the United States ought to take advantage of it. It was the Government that took it and had it invested. The Indians never had the bonds in their possession at all. They were paid into the Treasury according to that treaty and others, and then the Government paid it out. The money from the sale of this land was paid into the Treasury. Whatever the receipts were, they were all paid into the Treasury according to the treaty of 1854, and also this understanding that it should be paid into the Treasury and held by the Government, and that they should be paid in the money collected. The Government was the trustee for the bonds, and the Indians undoubtedly thought, and had a right to think, that the bonds would give them the amount of money that the appraisement of the lands had yielded them.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PERKINS in the chair). Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. STEWART. Certainly.

Mr. PATTERSON. There was quite a pertinent statement made by the Senator from Connecticut to the effect that no gold was ever paid into the Treasury for these lands.

Mr. STEWART. That is true.

Mr. PATTERSON. But before payment a second treaty was made?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Mr. PATTERSON. And that treaty authorized the Government to receive the bonds of the railway company for the land instead of the gold and silver?

Mr. STEWART. That is the way——

Mr. PATTERSON. Just one moment. The theory of the Senator from Nevada is, as I understand it, that it is likely the Indians did not know what the second treaty was. That is a mere surmise upon the part of the Senator, is it not?

Mr. STEWART. It is very apparent on the face of the papers. The Indians protested immediately after the payment was made.

Mr. PATTERSON. The Senator from Nevada makes the statement that that is to be supposed.

Mr. STEWART. I think it is fair to suppose it.

Mr. PATTERSON. That is what I understood. Now, is it an equitable claim against the Government, if by agreement with the Indians the Government received the bonds of the railway company in lieu of their lands, which were not to be paid in gold, that the Government should pay in gold?

Mr. STEWART. Certainly it is an equitable claim, because the Government agreed that the lands should be appraised, and agreed that the railroad company should pay a dollar and a quarter an acre in gold. They were appraised in gold, and it amounted to this sum.

Mr. ALLISON. Why did they agree to pay a dollar and a quarter in gold?

Mr. STEWART. Because that was the lowest price for which the lands could be appraised.

Mr. ALLISON. Gold and silver?

Mr. STEWART. Gold and silver.

Mr. ALLISON. Gold and silver were of the same value at that time, as they were in 1861. So I think that question was not a burning one at that moment. So it made no difference whether they were to be paid in coin or currency.

Mr. STEWART. Payments were to be made in coin in the Indian treaties from time immemorial. All the money was to be paid in gold or silver. Some of the payments were to be made in silver, and we still make provisions to pay in silver. There are some provisions in this appropriation bill for payment in silver. The reason for that undoubtedly was because there was much currency in the country that was not at par. Banks issued money, and in dealing with the Indians the policy from the beginning was to pay in either gold or silver coin, so that there would be no fluctuation or no change in the agreement with them. The Government was very particular in the treaties that that provision should be made, and we are carrying it out now. There are several items in this bill for payment in silver. When silver is at par it does not make any difference.

Now, this railroad company wanted the land, and the Government agreed in this treaty to sell it to them, or to allow the Indians to let them take it at an appraised value in gold, provided it should not be less than a dollar and a quarter an acre. That amounted to two hundred and eighty-odd thousand dollars. Then the railroad company could not meet the payment, and they got the President to make an order.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. STEWART. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. To what does the Senator from Nevada refer when he says "they got the President to make an order?"

Mr. STEWART. I refer to the order made by the President before the Indians were consulted at all. It was a treaty made in this way. It says the President makes an order.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The treaty is perhaps a little irregular in form, but it was a treaty. It was ratified by the Senate.

Mr. STEWART. It was made here, and the President of the United States said it should not go into effect until it was read to the Indians. It was not an ordinary treaty such as is negotiated with the Indians; it was written here.

Mr. SPOONER. Now, assuming whatever this arrangement was in 1861 to be a treaty——

Mr. STEWART. I do not think it was.

Mr. SPOONER. I say assuming that, does not the Senator think it changed altogether in respect to the matter in dispute the treaty of 1860?

Mr. STEWART. Absolutely.

Mr. SPOONER. So the Senator's contention is that, although it changed that treaty, it was not a treaty to which the Indians agreed.

Mr. STEWART. I do not think they did. It was read to them, but I do not think it was a fair way by reading it to them to negotiate it, and I do not believe the President thought he was changing the contract other than to give them time. The main thing was to give them time. It says:

> Whereas by the treaty of Sarcoxieville, amended by the United States Senate and finally ratified by the President of the United States on the 22d day of August, 1860, a principal object of both parties was the construction of a certain contemplated railroad therein named, and to that end the Leavenworth, Pawnee and Western Railroad Company were to pay into the United States Treasury, in gold or silver coin, a sum of money, afterwards ascertained to be $286,742.15, as the appraised value of certain lands in Kansas belonging to the Delaware tribe of Indians, which sum of money, after expending a sufficient part of it to enable the Indians to commence agricultural pursuits under favorable circumstances, was to be, by the President for said Indians, invested in safe and profitable stocks; and
> Whereas the said railroad company is not able to pay said sum of money within time according to said treaty, etc.

It was a mere extension of time, and in that extension of time they omitted to repeat the word "gold."

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. STEWART. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not think the Senator can maintain that this so-called treaty of 1861 was not a treaty, because it was signed by the Indians.

Mr. STEWART. I do not contend that.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It was submitted to the Senate, amended by the Senate, re-signed by the Indians, and published by the President as a treaty. It may have been a little informal in its character, but those are the facts.

Mr. STEWART. Where is it signed?

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator will look at the statutes, instead of the compilation, he will get the whole business.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. On pages 1183 and 1184.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator will allow me, I wish to say that this compilation of treaties is, as respects the Delawares, wholly insufficient to carry the real purpose, the signatures being omitted.

Mr. STEWART. Senators have got the whole matter before them, and they can do as they please about it. I think the Indians make their claim on the argument that they did not understand the treaty.

Mr. SPOONER. Did the Senator from Nevada ever know an Indian who was satisfied?

Mr. STEWART. They do not complain when they get the full amount they claim; but when they think it is not sufficient they are dissatisfied. I do not believe they understood that "bond" was different from "gold." However, I do not care to say anything further about it.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, this is a question which has bothered the committee considerably. In the last Congress I was appointed one of a subcommittee with the Senator from North Dakota to look into this claim of the Delaware Indians. We made a report, and I think I signed it, that they had a valid claim.

The Indians in 1864, as Senators will observe, protested against receiving their payment in currency, and a treaty was made with them that they should be paid in coin. The Government has had other cases similar to this—not many; four, I think, altogether. We have settled with the Pottawatomies, with the Mackinacs, and in this bill we provide for a settlement with the Chippewas. This is the only other tribe occupying a similar position and the only other tribe with which the Government has not settled.

I will confess that I have modified my views somewhat and am not so firmly convinced regarding it as I was two years ago, because I know more about these railroad bonds; but I am still convinced that the Indians thought they were entitled to payment in gold. As I have said, the Government has settled with the others, and while, under the circumstances, I do not feel like insisting upon the proposition, I believe, at any rate, we ought to give these Indians some chance, and I am willing, so far as I am concerned, to send their claim to the Court of Claims. If Senators will agree to that, I will offer an amendment to that effect.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. DUBOIS. Certainly.

Mr. PATTERSON. I desire to ask the Senator from Idaho whether the other claims to which he has referred had the element of the second treaty of 1861, by which the Indians——

Mr. STEWART. Oh, no.

Mr. DUBOIS. Oh, no; I do not undertake to say that. I simply say that the Government paid the difference between gold and currency to the other Indians.

Mr. PATTERSON. I will ask the Senator from Idaho this question: Speaking of the protest of the Indians, is it because the Indians thought that they were to be paid in gold under the treaty that they made the protest of 1861, or is it because the Indians did not know anything about either the rise or the fall in the value of the greenbacks as compared with gold?

Mr. STEWART. They complained that the greenbacks were a depreciated currency.

Mr. PATTERSON. In other words, they were simply in ignorance of the financial law.

Mr. STEWART. They were until they got the money.

Mr. PATTERSON. It was not, then, a question with them of the violation of an obligation by the Government to them?

Mr. DUBOIS. I should think not. I will read this language, which was probably written by an Indian, but possibly so that a white man could understand it.

Mr. PATTERSON. I have no idea that it was written by an Indian.

Mr. DUBOIS. This is the statement:

> It will occur to you that we are losing money by receiving paper money, which has greatly depreciated.

Mr. PATTERSON. They had learned at that time that there was a depreciation of paper money.

Mr. DUBOIS. In 1864.

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes; that was in 1864.

But, Mr. President, I submit that it was the mere fact that there was a depreciation, that paper money did not buy as much, and that it was suggested to them by some careful friend that the reason it did not buy as much was because it was paper and not gold. I do not think that they presented the claim at all because they believed that the Government had received gold, and therefore should treat it as a special trust and pay them in gold or its equivalent. It is a mere misconception on the part of the Indians, and not any bad faith on the part of the United States.

Mr. DUBOIS. I would suggest to the Senator from Colorado that if the Indians did not understand what they were doing they certainly had some one who did understand, because in the treaty with the Government it was stipulated that they should be paid in coin; and when they were not paid in coin they objected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reserved by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. QUAY. I understand, Mr. President, that an amendment to the amendment has been offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS].

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, striking out, on page 92, from line 14 to and including line 11 on page 93, being the amendment of the committee, and substituting for it what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the amendment of the committee, beginning on line 14 on page 92 and ending on line 11, page 93, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

> That the claim of the Delaware Indians residing in the Cherokee Nation under the treaty of August 22, 1860, and the supplemental treaty of July 2, 1861, from 1862 to 1878, both inclusive, for the payment of the difference between the currency value of each payment made to said Indians and the value of a like amount of coin with which the United States is chargeable under said treaty for said Delaware Indians, is hereby referred to the Court of Claims for adjudication; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon said court to hear and determine said claim, and without regard to the statute of limitations; and the court having ascertained and determined the amount of such difference, shall report their findings to the next session of Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. ALLISON. It seems to me that that will leave us just where we are now, for it does not settle any question as to the obligation to pay in coin. The proposition is simply to ascertain the difference. I do not see that such an adjudication would be worth anything if we want to dispose of this matter.

Mr. STEWART. Let it go in, and we will settle the question of obligation hereafter.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, I will be very sorry if the Senate does not see fit to give the Delawares what are their just dues at once instead of sending them to the Court of Claims. It was to keep this case out of the Court of Claims that I took the responsibility of adding the provision to the Indian appropriation bill. If these Indians are entitled to anything, they ought to have it without lawyers' fees or any such incumbrances as have been spoken of on this floor. If the Senate is determined that the case shall go to the Court of Claims I must submit, but the Senate ought to be a little more indulgent to the Delaware Indians. They are a feeble band now. They were strong once.

There was one singular feature in one treaty between the United States and the Delawares, which I find on the first page of the volume of treaties published by the Committee on Indian Affairs. It contains this clause:

> And it is further agreed on between the contracting parties should it for the future be found conducive for the mutual interest of both parties to invite any other tribes who have been friends to the interest of the United States, to join the present confederation, and to form a State whereof the Delaware Nation shall be the head, and have a representation in Congress: Provided, Nothing contained in this article to be considered as conclusive until it meets with the approbation of Congress.

This is the only case within my knowledge where there was any treaty proposition for enabling Indians to form a State.

I am pretty well acquainted with the Delawares and with their history. My ancestors came in touch with them as long ago as 1712, when they lived near Philadelphia. In all their dealings with the white people they have been cheated, and they were cheated in this one under the treaty which I have just quoted. It is a treaty involving no land, but involving the sending out of a war party of Delawares against the English in behalf of the United States. They scarcely were fairly started on the warpath until their people in Gnadenhutten, in western Ohio, were massacred—Christian Indians. Some of them then, of course, were driven into hostility to the United States.

They lived, as I have said, near Philadelphia. As long ago as 1740 they lived among the whites and were familiar with white customs. They were being educated and civilized.

Then came what was called the "walking purchase" of Mr. Thomas Penn. A perjured witness was produced to say that forty years before he had seen a treaty providing that the Delawares should give the English all the land measured from a base line running up the Delaware River as far as a man could walk in a day. The Delawares held a council, and finally agreed with the whites that they would fulfill this treaty which it was claimed they had executed. When the day came for the execution of the treaty the whites had blazed the trail up the Delaware River, but instead of following the course of the river they struck a bee line inside the river from one bend to another, put men on horseback to help out their walkers, which walkers turned out to be the fastest runners in the neighborhood, and so stole about $6,000,000 worth of land from the Indians. The Delawares had then enough of the kindness and charity of the whites, but they still lived in amity there.

The next year the whites called in the Iroquois. They were the overlords, and of course the whites and the Iroquois combined; the Delawares could not resist. The Iroquois ordered them off. They went, not as a tribe, but as families, and almost night after night, the historian says, in the woods the little flames were seen, and in the morning the houses and homes of the Delawares were found in ashes and the families were gone. The men took their guns and the women their babies and ponies, and they left for the West. Family after family disappeared forever in the gorges of the Alleghanies from their old haunts. The last Delaware woman who lived in Chester County, Pa., where my people were acquainted with these Indians, went off during the Revolution. The neighboring whites said that in the night a strange Indian came and took her away.

They went to Ohio and took part against the whites, and during the French and Indian war they were the most relentless and savage enemies we had. When that was over and the collision came between the colonies and Great Britain, this special band, which is now in the Cherokee Nation, took the part of the United States. The treaty from which I have just quoted was made with them then, and from that day to this, in every war in which this country has engaged, the Delawares have borne arms for the United States.

They first settled on the Muskingum. Their lands were bought from them there; they were told to move on, and they moved on to White River, Indiana. Their lands were wanted there; they were crowded, and their advance parties then crossed to the region which was beyond the Mississippi, which was under Spanish domination. The Spanish enlisted them in their service to fight the Osage and the Missouria Indians, and gave them a large tract of land below St. Louis, near Carondelet. The United States acquired Missouri and the Northwest Territory, and these Indians then moved on to Kansas.

I will not go into any extended remarks on the subject, except to say that they served in the Seminole war, in the Mexican war, and in the war of the rebellion. In the war from 1861 to 1864 every Delaware able to bear arms served in the Union Army. Then came the occasion of this bill here in the Senate to-day. They sold their lands, went down through Kansas and became Cherokee, and they are there now in the Cherokee Nation, with their lands all gone, their money all gone, and are become poor beggars for a little pittance at the hands of this Government which is justly due them.

I do not wish to occupy the time of the Senate longer with these remarks. As the chairman seems impatient to proceed, I have no objection to the vote now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. DUBOIS. I ask leave to withdraw the amendment, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Idaho to the amendment of the committee is withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as it has been amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. An amendment on page 54 was reserved by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. QUAY. I withdraw the reservation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question then is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment at the bottom of page 86, section 10, was also reserved at the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. QUAY. That reservation is also withdrawn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question then is on the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On page 90 there was an amendment reserved by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. QUAY. That is the Sulphur Springs amendment, and the reservation is withdrawn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question then recurs on the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULBERSON. On page 91.

Mr. STEWART. Let us get through with page 57 first.

Mr. CULBERSON. The reservation of the amendment on page 57, Mr. President, was an error on my part. I intended to reserve the amendment on page 91, relating to the Chippewa Indians of Lake Superior and the Mississippi.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment on page 57.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. President, on yesterday or the day before I made the point of order that there was no estimate by any head of a Department for the amendment on page 91, but the Chair ruled that in that case an estimate had been presented and overruled the point of order.

Before I withdraw my point of order I want to say that the report of the committee fails to show that any estimate was made by the head of a Department. The only thing in the shape of an estimate is a report of a subcommittee of the House of Representatives several years ago and some letters written not later than 1902 by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to the Secretary of the Interior.

I simply wanted to make my position clear that neither of these constitutes an estimate by the head of a Department within the meaning of Rule XVI.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair agrees with the Senator.

Mr. CULBERSON. Having made that clear, Mr. President, and having investigated this matter to the effect that the amendment appears meritorious, I withdraw the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator rise to the amendment just agreed to?

Mr. CLAPP. I rise, perhaps, to a privileged question. I want to correct a statement that has been made here. I find that in the Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, the Secretary of the Interior, reviewing this subject as to both items, finally concludes by recommending that the bill be amended to appropriate the sum of $100,373. I regarded that as an estimate, and if, technically, it was not, perhaps it was a mistake to have stated it in those terms. That is what I referred to, but I still think that it was a proper statement to make.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As the Chair understands, all the amendments so far reported from the committee and all amendments offered in the Senate have been agreed to.

Mr. CULBERSON. I desire to make the point of order on the amendment appropriating $25,000 to send Indians to the St. Louis Exposition. I understand that the appropriation is out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Where is that amendment?

Mr. CULBERSON. On page 46. It is general legislation; and I make the point of order upon it, because I think we have spent about as much money for that exposition as we ought to spend, and all others, except Indians, are required to pay their own way to the exposition.

Mr. STEWART. This amount was estimated for in the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, but it was not appropria ed. The committee thought that was a sufficient estimate. The Commissioner was before the committee and explained that it was necessary to carry out what had been undertaken. I do not know whether or not that would be a sufficient estimate, but we took it for granted that it was.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, in that case the Department find themselves short of funds to take care of what they have already done there. They have erected a building and done one thing and another, and the Commissioner substantially said that they would get no benefit of that if they did not get an additional sum.

Mr. STEWART. And an estimate was sent in on the urgent deficiency bill to complete what they had undertaken.

Mr. TELLER. I think it ought to be allowed. If we made any mistake at all, we made it in giving them the first money.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Texas think the amendment is general legislation?

Mr. CULBERSON. That is the point I made.

Mr. TELLER. I do not think you can call an appropriation for a specific purpose like that general legislation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. And one that dies with the bill itself.

Mr. TELLER. And one that dies with the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is very difficult for the presiding officer to determine, as Senators know, what is general legislation and what items shall be included within the term "general legislation." It is the judgment of the Chair in this case rather that it is not general legislation, and that the committee having jurisdiction of the subject had the right to report it as an amendment to this bill, it coming from a standing committee of the Senate. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. CULBERSON. I make the point of order that the amendment on page 12, relating to the Chippewas of North Dakota, is general legislation; that it is not intended to carry out a treaty existing between the Indians and the United States, but that it is an item amending an existing treaty or agreement between the United States and the Indians, and, so far as the bill shows, there is no consent on the part of the Indians that this amendment shall be adopted and no provision that the amendment shall be submitted to the Indians for ratification. I should like to have some information upon that subject.

Mr. STEWART. I make the point of order that it is too late to make the point after the amendment has been agreed to both in Committee of the Whole and in the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been agreed to both in the Committee of the Whole and in the Senate.

Mr. STEWART. So it is too late to make the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair it is too late.

Mr. CULBERSON. Then I desire, Mr. President, to inquire of the Senator if this provision is not an attempt to amend a treaty or agreement with the Indians without their consent and without submitting the amendment adopted to the Indians for their ratification and approval?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I would say, in response to the inquiry of the Senator from Texas, that it has not been customary to resubmit a treaty to the Indians. This treaty was regularly made with the Indians; it comes here exactly as all other treaties come here; it has been passed upon in the regular way by the committee having jurisdiction of the subject, and goes into this bill as all other treaties of that kind have gone into the bill.

Mr. CULBERSON. But the Senator will pardon me for calling his attention to the language. It says this treaty or agreement entered into "on the 22d day of October, 1892, shall be amended to read as follows." Then it proceeds to amend that treaty or agreement without the consent of the Indians, or, as I repeat, without a provision requiring its submission to the Indians for their approval afterwards.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. That is customary, Mr. President. All treaties are amended here after they have been agreed upon.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator allow me to say a word?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. This is in no sense a treaty, or it would not be here. Congress years ago provided that no more treaties should be made with Indians. Since that time we have never made any. We have made what we call agreements, and if we technically call one of them a treaty that makes no difference. There is no authority to make treaties with Indians, and there has not been for thirty years; and those treaties or agreements have been treated as subject to the judgment of Congress. We change them without ever referring them back.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. This agreement is in the usual form.

Mr. TELLER. It is an agreement which absolutely, according to custom and according to law, is under our control.

Mr. CULBERSON. It may be according to law, but I submit that an agreement with the Indians is just as binding in conscience upon the United States as a treaty; in fact, more so, because it has been passed by both Houses of Congress instead of by the Senate alone; and to amend that agreement without reference to the wishes of the Indians who entered into it originally with us is a violation of the faith of the Government.

Mr. CLAPP. If the Senator will yield to me for a moment, the Supreme Court a year ago last January decided that it was not necessary to submit these matters, and since then, and at this session, two or three bills similar to this have passed, and it has become the policy now, instead of submitting these questions, for Congress to either pass a law as a new measure or take one of these treaties and proceed to amend it. There is nothing in violation of law in the matter. The court has sustained that procedure.

Mr. TELLER. It is too late now, I understand, to raise the question as to its regularity. It is absolutely regular. Congress intended by the act of some thirty-odd years ago to prevent any contracts being made, and these agreements have been treated merely as the expression of what the Indians would like to have us enact. That is all there is of it. They have no legal binding character whatever, and Congress never so recognized them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the amendments be engrossed and the bill be read a third time?

Mr. BACON. If there is nothing more in the nature of an amendment, I desire to say a word or two in relation to something which was said in the debate yesterday by the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Is the Senator willing that the bill shall pass to its third reading, or would he prefer to make his remarks now?

Mr. BACON. If the Senator means that I shall make my remarks after the third reading of the bill and upon the question of its passage, I have no choice in the matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the amendments be ordered to be engrossed and the bill be read a third time?

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, in the course of the debate on this bill yesterday, when the subject of civil service came incidentally before the Senate, the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], in the course of his remarks, used language which I will read. I read from page 3568 of the RECORD. The immediate connection had some reference to appointments under the Panama Canal Commission. The Senator from Massachusetts said:

> I suppose everybody will agree that with such public instruments all employees of this sort ought to be fairly divided between the different sections of the country. The Government can not maintain the confidence or the affection or the support of the people unless the people of every part of the country have their fair and full share in it. It would not be just, if you are to appoint a thousand men for this particular public service, to take them all from California or all from Mississippi or all from Massachusetts, even if you got in that way, on the whole, a better set of public employees. Everybody agrees to that. If that is to be done, how is the President or how is an Executive Department to find out who are the best men and the qualities of men in a particular State, except by inquiry of the men whom that State has selected, or men of experience, acquainted with their people at home, whom the State selects as the best examples of its intelligence and capacity and integrity?

Further on the Senator uses this language:

> Why, then, in every instance should Senators not be expected to give any Department such information as they have in this important matter?

Speaking generally of the question of the selection of the officers of the Government in the Executive Departments, and especially of the selection of those officers who are to be located in the several States, I desire to say a word or two, because, sir, it is a matter of very great importance to the section from which I come. I think the utterance of the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, which I have read, is a most notable one, and is substantially a condemnation of the system which now exists in this country, which is practically a disfranchisement of the people of the entire South, constituting one-third of the people of the United States, so far as concerns any real connection on their part with the selection of executive officers who represent the Government and administer the laws of the Government in their midst. That is quite broad language, but it is actually true. It is a system which is an utter and most radical violation of the most fundamental principles of free government.

One of the dearest and most vital and essential principles of a free government is the right of the people to choose those who shall hold the offices necessary to administer the government. There are different ways in which, when that principle is preserved, a people may directly or indirectly choose their officers. It may be through a direct vote of the people in a popular election, or they may be chosen through an intermediary body, such as an electoral college or a legislature, or they may be appointed by the executive with the consent of a senate. Each of these methods, while differing in form and modes of procedure, is but an agency of the popular will through which it finds expression. The governor of a State when he makes an appointment is speaking as the representative of the people, and they are making the appointment through him; not directly, but in the confidence that in making the appointment he is considering their wishes and that no one known to be unacceptable to them will be appointed. The same thing is true of the legislature of a State when it elects an official. The election is in accordance with their will, and the people are acting through the legislature. Each of these methods at last is but the means by which a free people select officers, whose selection is in accord with their will. None of them is designed to be a method by which officers will be selected whom the people do not wish or approve.

Now, I affirm, and I presume it will be conceded, that the selection of the officers of the Federal Government was not intended in the formation of the Federal Government to be a violation of this principle. It was found necessary to have a general government, as well as a State government, and it was found necessary to have officers of the General Government, as well as officers of the State government. But who will say that it was ever designed or dreamed of that the people, in providing for officers of the General Government and in providing the method by which those officers of the General Government should be selected, intended to surrender the right through those chosen methods to practically select their officers of the Federal Government; in other words, that the officers thus chosen through the methods prescribed should be other than those approved by the people and personally acceptable to them? It can not be so contended. I am confident that no Senator will rise in his place and say that in his opinion it is in accordance with the spirit of the Constitution, in accordance with the intention of those who framed the Constitution, or in accordance with the understanding of the States which adopted it that the Federal officers in a State should be selected in utter disregard and in contemptuous indifference to the wishes of the people of that State. If there is a Senator who entertains such an opinion, I trust he will avow it in language not to be misunderstood.

The proposition which I submit is this: That while under our system of local State government the right of the selection of officers and of participation in the selection of officers, so far as State officers are concerned, is preserved, that right should none the less in practical effect exist in the case of the Federal Government, in so far at least that the Federal officers thus selected should be acceptable to the people of the State and representative of their best elements; and it is not to be considered for a moment that it was ever the intention of the framers of the Government or of those who agreed to the adoption of the Constitution that there should be an exception in this regard in the case of the Federal Government, and that there should be in any State or section the denial of the right of the people to be consulted as to the Federal executive offices in their midst, or the denial of their right to have officers who should be personally acceptable to them. Who can believe for a moment, sir, that any State would have surrendered the right to the appointment of officers in its domain if it had been conceived for an instant that the General Government would under any circumstances appoint such officers in utter disregard and violation of the wishes of the people as to who such officers should be?

As a clear presentation of the circumstances under which the States surrendered to the General Government the right to appoint these officers and the care with which they sought to guard for themselves the practical enjoyment of those rights and powers, the practical administration of which they thus surrendered, I will read an extract from an interesting and most instructive article written by the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and which appeared in the November (1903) number of Scribner's Magazine. It sets out very clearly the purpose of the States when framing the Constitution and founding the Government under it to retain to themselves, through the intermediary of the Senate, the right to be consulted and to exercise a controlling influence and even a veto in the selection of Federal officers. It was not designed simply as a protection of the country at large against unlimited Executive power in making appointments, but was particularly designed for the protection in this regard of the people of each State that the officers thus selected should be acceptable to them; in other words, that it never was the expectation that the Federal Government, while selecting officers in the method prescribed, should occupy any other relation to the people of a State in the selection of such officers than that which is occupied by the people of the State in the selection of their officers, to the extent, at least, that such officers should be acceptable to the people of each State. The right of selection was surrendered by the State, but it is impossible that they intended or contemplated that such selections would be made in the most absolute disregard of the wishes of the people of that State and in known violation of their wishes. Different agencies are employed, but in each instance it was the intention that the people of a State should still be those to determine who should be their officers and to be consulted as to who should be their officers.

Mr. SPOONER. There is a difference between the right to be consulted and the right to determine. I suppose the Senator does not claim the right of a locality to determine——

Mr. BACON. I am using that language in this sense. I say that the people do not determine in the State——

Mr. SPOONER. Yes, they do.

Mr. BACON. Well?

Mr. SPOONER. Do they not?

Mr. BACON. Possibly if the Senator will permit me to complete the sentence he would not object to the construction I was about to put upon it.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator did not allow me to complete mine, but then I yield to him, because he has the floor.

Mr. BACON. I am very much obliged to the Senator for his courtesy. What I mean by that is this: Take the case of the State. While in many instances the people do not directly elect, at the same time the general purpose and effect of whatever arrangement they make by which officers are selected are to have the selection of the people. It may not be a direct vote of the people; it may be by an appointment of the governor whom the people elect; but when the governor exercises that power, he is presumed to be carrying out the will of the people and not to be acting in absolute indifference to their wish, and possibly in contemptuous defiance of their wish, as to who shall be the officer. It is only in that sense that I use the word "determine." Not that they should have the veto power and set aside an appointment when that particular agency which has been selected to fill the office has exercised the power thus given to it. I do not mean that.

Mr. SPOONER. I did not interrupt the Senator for any controversial purpose.

Mr. BACON. I understand.

Mr. SPOONER. I thought the language he used——

Mr. BACON. I think I have made my meaning clear now to the apprehension of the Senator. It was my fault, in that I was not sufficiently careful to limit it before.

The purpose in reading this particular part of the article of the Senator from Massachusetts is to give expression to the opinion that in conferring the power upon the General Government the States had no thought or design that the people should occupy any other relation toward a Federal officer than they do toward a State officer in so far as regards the acceptability of their officer to them. I read from the November Scribner, on page 541, as follows:

> The Senate, therefore, was regarded as the keystone of the new scheme, and the framers showed their belief in its overwhelming importance by providing that the basis of representation in the Senate should not be altered except by the consent of every State, while every other clause of the Constitution could be amended by a two-thirds vote of Congress, followed by a ratification by three-fourths of the States.
> The reason for fixing the basis of representation for the Senate so firmly in the Constitution that so far as possible it should be beyond change is obvious, although often overlooked. The convention which framed the Constitution voted by States, as did the Continental Congress and the Congress of the Confederation. All sovereign powers of every kind, therefore, were in possession of the States as such, and consequently every power which was given in the new Constitution to the people of the Union at large was given by the States; every power that was reserved was reserved to the States; and all powers conferred upon the Senate were intended to guard and preserve the influence and authority of the States in the new government. Hence, in the formation of the Senate the States were retaining for themselves all the powers which they believed needful for their safety, and as everything was theirs to give or to withhold, they were naturally liberal in their endowment of the body which was to continue to represent them under a system where they necessarily parted with so much.
> It was for those reasons that the convention conferred upon the Senate both executive and judicial as well as legislative powers. The Executive was to be elected by the people at large, and the executive power therefore passed away from the States, but the States took pains to limit this great gift by conferring upon the Senate the power to reject all nominations to office made by the President, and by granting to the Senate an equal and coordinate part in making all treaties with foreign nations. These sovereign powers of appointing executive officers and of treating with foreign nations were, at the time of the Philadelphia convention, vested wholly in the States, and when the States parted with them to an Executive elected by the people at large, they reserved to themselves an equal share and an absolute veto in the performance of both these great and vital functions of government.

I repeat, I read that to show that it was the intention, as expounded by a prominent member of the Republican party, that the people of the States should occupy the same relation to the Federal officeholder that they occupy to the State officeholder. In other words, that the right of the people of a State to be considered in the selection of a Federal officeholder is as great as the right of the people to be considered in the selection of a State officer. And yet, sir, this being the design of the framers of the Constitution, as is so clearly pointed out by the distinguished junior Senator from Massachusetts, how stands it in the practical operation of the Government?

Take the State of Georgia. She is one of the original thirteen which founded this Government. Her sons, as well as the sons of the other colonies, consecrated and risked their all in order that the American colonies might be free. With them they signed the great Declaration; with them they waged the seven years' war; with them they framed the Constitution, and with them they entered into the Federal compact. Surely the people of Georgia are entitled to all the privileges of freemen in a free government. And yet how stands the case to-day? Georgia has 2,500,000 inhabitants. They are foremost in every work. They add largely each year to the general wealth of the country from her mines, her fields, and her factories. She pays into the National Treasury more than $20,000,000 a year. When blood is to be poured out in the public defense she offers it without limit. When the country is in danger it comes up with its full quota of men for the public defense; and I will say again what I have said here before, that if the published reports are correct in the recent Spanish war the State of Georgia contributed more soldiers to the volunteer service than any other State in the Union in proportion to its population.

Her great annual cotton crop, second only to that of Texas, and the other products of her fields and of mine and factories contribute largely to the balance of trade in favor of the United States. She is the largest State territorially east of the Mississippi River, and of the forty-five States in the Union stands way above the average in wealth, population, natural resources, and industrial enterprises. Nevertheless her people are not only practically disfranchised in so far as having their wishes consulted in the selection of Federal officeholders in her territory, but they are denied any participation in the offices of the Federal Government at home or abroad. There is not a Federal office of importance outside of the State held by a Georgian in the United States, and if I am not still further mistaken there is not from the State of Georgia a single representative in the great diplomatic or consular service of the United States, extending as it does all over the world. Outside of a postmaster here or there, where it has not been practicable to find a satisfactory Republican to fill the office—outside of some instances of that kind, there is not a single Executive officeholder in the State of Georgia who would have been selected by the people of the State to fill the office—not one!

Not only are the people utterly thus without any consideration on the part of the Government in the selection of who shall be their officers at home, but there is absolutely no participation allowed to them in the representation of this Government in other matters. What is true of the State of Georgia is true, with most rare exceptions, of the entire South. If you look over it, the Government, so far as its emoluments go, so far as its honors go, ignores one-third of the people of the United States, and with these very rare exceptions they are recognized and treated as aliens in a foreign land.

But, Mr. President, there is another point to which I call attention. The Constitution of the United States intended that the Senators should be the advisers of the President of the United States, and the part of the article written by the junior Senator from Massachusetts, which I have just read and which is, I think, a correct exposition in that regard, shows that it was the intention of each State that its particular Senators should be its particular advisers as to what was to be done in their own State.

Mr. SPOONER. Do you find that in the Constitution?

Mr. BACON. I find it in a very reasonable construction of the Constitution. As said in this article from which I have read, at the time when the Constitution was framed and adopted all these powers belonged to the States and to each of the States, and when each State surrended its particular power it was careful to preserve the power as to the Senate in order that while this power should be delegated to the General Government it should be exercised in a way that it should be within the control of the Senators, and necessarily, so far as each particular State was concerned, under the influence, to a degree at least, of its own Senators.

Now, what is the fact? Here are two of us from the State of Geo gia and two from each of the other Southern States. As suggested by the senior Senator from Massachusetts in his remarks yesterday, it is to those who are thus selected that the Government should look for advice as to who are the proper officers to be selected in a State. And yet the fact is that instead of the two Senators from each of the Southern States there are three referees; there are three or four men selected in each State; men who represent nobody, so far as authorized representation goes; men selected by nobody, that is, inside the State; and matters which concern the State are determined not by consultation with the Senators who are elected as the representatives of that State, and who were designed when the Constitution was framed to stand here as representatives of that State, but, on the contrary, the Senators are passed by and three or four unknown men are selected as those who are to advise as to what is to be done for the interest of the people of each of these States.

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the Senator from Georgia allow me for a moment?

Mr. BACON. With pleasure.

Mr. HOPKINS. Does the Senator contend that the policy of making appointments in a State and consulting the Senators is any different under the present Administration from what it was under President Jefferson or any of his successors in office?

Mr. BACON. If I should answer the Senator in the way in which he expects me to answer him probably, and which is possibly true, it would not affect this case. If there has been a violation of the spirit and intention of the law from the formation of the Government to the present time it would be no argument why that violation should be continued. But there is a very much better answer to the question than that.

Mr. HOPKINS. The reason I asked the Senator is that a few moments ago he made the contention that the Federal appointees in his State were men who could not be elected to any office in the State.

Mr. BACON. I did not use that language exactly, although the Senator is probably justified in thinking I did. I said they would not have been "selected."

Mr. HOPKINS. Was not the same policy pursued with respect to appointments during the Cleveland Administration?

Mr. BACON. I did not use the word "elect d." I said they would not be selected.

Mr. SPOONER. Would there be any Republicans, then, selected in Georgia?

Mr. BACON. No; I do not think they would be, or elected either; and there are the best of reasons why they would not be.

Mr. SPOONER. Are there no good ones there?

Mr. BACON. Very few. There are some.

Mr. HOAR rose.

Mr. BACON. Possibly the answer which I was about to give to the Senator from Illinois will be an answer also to the suggestion of the Senator from Wisconsin; but before proceeding with either, as I see the senior Senator from Massachusetts desires to propound an inquiry, if he wishes to do so before I answer them, I will yield.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to ask the Senator a question, because it is very agreeable to me that he and I seem to be starting from the same premises, which has not always been my good fortune.

Mr. BACON. I am always more than fortunate when I find such to be the case.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to know how far the Senator would practically carry his contention. Suppose, for instance, he were the President of the United States, elected by the Democratic party, and we were fortunate enough to live under his Administration, and there were two Senators from Massachusetts who thought, as many party men have thought, that no Democrat whatever in Massachusetts should be put into any office; that they did not want Democrats selected. Would the Senator, as President, take their advice, under such circumstances, and say that because the Senators from Massachusetts thought they ought not to have a Democrat in office, he would not appoint one?

Mr. BACON. The Senator will probably recognize the difference between advice and dictation.

Mr. HOAR. That is what I observed in what I said yesterday, but I understand the Senator to-day to use the phrase "taking the advice" not in the sense of hearing what they can say and getting all the information he can from them, as I said yesterday, but following the advice. Now, there is a great difference between letting a doctor prescribe for you and taking his medicine, as the Senator knows.

Mr. BACON. I have not said that, unless I am very much mistaken.

Mr. HOAR. I wanted to bring that out clearly. Does the Senator say that if he had been President in President Cleveland's time and the two Senators from Massachusetts had said to him they did not think it was worth while to have Democrats in office in that State, the President ought, as a matter of constitutional policy and obligation, to have taken their advice?

Mr. BACON. I have not said anything, I think, that would lead to that.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator——

Mr. BACON. When the Senator finishes his question I will endeavor to answer.

Mr. HOAR. I want to know whether the Senator does say that or not.

Mr. BACON. Whenever the Senator finishes his inquiry I will endeavor to reply.

Mr. HOAR. I have finished the inquiry, and I ask the question on which to base another.

Mr. BACON. The Senator will please give me an opportunity to make a reply to him. I can take the question of the Senator from Illinois in connection with that of the Senator from Massachusetts and answer them together. I say that different conditions make a very different rule applicable, or rather would make the same rule applicable in a very different way. I recognize the fact that there are very different conditions in different States. There are in some States what may be termed "normal" conditions; for instance, the State of Illinois or the State of Massachusetts, where there are parties evenly or unevenly balanced, still the parties are made up of representative men in each case—representative men as regards the morality of the country or of a State—the wealth and industries and intelligence of a State.

That is what I mean when I speak of a State under normal conditions. Then, again, there are, unfortunately and without their responsibility for the fact, other States where there are abnormal conditions where there is no such division; where there can be safely to the public interest no such divisions, and where, for reasons which, whether satisfactory to other people or not, are necessarily controlling to that people, the division is not along lines of that kind, and where the division upon the one side, generally speaking, confines all the intelligence and wealth and the better elements of a State; where there is practically no division which runs between any parts of that element, and where the other side is one which is not representative in any character of all those things which go to make up the greatness and the prosperity and the best features of a State.

Now, in the one case, where there are normal conditions—and having defined the two, of course Senators will understand to what I have allusion when I speak of normal conditions—where there are normal conditions I should say undoubtedly that the party in power should appoint those who are of their own political faith, because in so doing there is no injustice done to the community and no harm comes to the Commonwealth. I should say that it would be extremely unreasonable that the Republican Senators from the State of Massachusetts should have the right under such circumstances, in case there were a Democratic President, to say to the President that Democrats should not be appointed. But I still think that it would be the duty of that Democratic President, even though he confined himself in his appointments to the Democrats of Massachusetts, to confer and consult with the Republican Senators from the State of Massachusetts as to who are the proper and most desirable appointees in the State from the standpoint of what is to the interest of the people of the State, and particularly from the point of acceptability to the people of Massachusetts on account of the personal character and fitness of such appointees, not meaning to include political preferences.

The distinguishing feature which differentiates the question of appointments of Federal officeholders in a State like Massachusetts, where there are normal conditions, from a Southern State, where the conditions are abnormal, is this: The line dividing the political parties in Massachusetts has on each side, in large proportions, men who represent the culture, intelligence, morality, and property interests of the State, and even though the Federal officers appointed there should belong to the minority party, they would, if properly selected, be acceptable to the people generally of the State, because, while not representing them politically, they would be fairly representative of that culture, intelligence, morality, and property interest. That such is not true in the States suffering under abnormal conditions is too apparent to require discussion. As a simple illustration, in Georgia the two most important Federal executive officers are the collector of the port at Savannah and the collector of internal revenue in the State, and each of these officers now is a negro—appointments which would not have been made in a State where normal conditions prevail.

And what I say as to the State of Massachusetts I say also as to the State of Illinois, that it would be the duty of a Democratic President to confer with the Senators from that State as to all matters which relate to the best interest of that State, and in the selection of officers to advise with Republican Senators, if those should represent that State, as to whether or not men who are proposed to be appointed by him are men of good character, and that he should rely upon their information rather than upon the information of political heelers or other people in that State who do not represent anybody and who have not been chosen by anybody to represent them.

Mr. HOPKINS. The Senator does not claim that that practice was followed in Illinois during the late Democratic Administration?

Mr. BACON. I do not know whether it was or not. I can not answer. I will say, however, and I repeat, I think that is the proper constitutional course to pursue. But, Mr. President, I am dealing with a condition of things altogether different from that when I speak of the South.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. BACON. I will.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator speaks of the constitutional duty of the President. Does the Senator conceive it to be a duty——

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. SPOONER. Under the Constitution resting upon the President to consult Senators as to appointments, Democratic or Republican Senators?

Mr. BACON. The word "duty" might in one sense be too strong for that.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator speaks about the power conferred by the States in the adoption of the Constitution upon the President.

Mr. BACON. I can not hear the Senator.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator speaks of the power conferred by the States through the Constitution upon the President as to appointments. That power is absolutely conferred upon the President.

Mr. BACON. I concede that.

Mr. SPOONER. The Constitution says nothing about Senators participating in appointments. It speaks of the Senate, but not of Senators. It is a question entirely in the option, I should think, of the President whether he will consult Republican Senators from a given State or Democratic Senators. He is responsible for the appointments, and he is at liberty to seek information from such sources as it seems best to him, is he not? Did the Senator mean to intimate——

Mr. BACON. I trust that the Senator will ask me one question at a time. He has asked me one question and should let me answer it.

Mr. SPOONER. Those questions answer themselves.

Mr. BACON. I do not think they do.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator made a very broad remark a few moments ago about duty.

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator will confine himself to the question. The Senator asked me a question. Let me answer it, and then I shall be glad to hear from him on duty.

Mr. SPOONER. I will yield.

Mr. BACON. The Senator asks whether or not I mean to say that it is the duty of the President. I do not mean that it is the duty in the sense that he would violate a specific law if he does not do it, but I do mean to say that it is a duty in the sense that there is an obligation upon him to inform himself as to what is to the best interests of a State when he comes to appoint an officer in it. Nobody will or should dispute that.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to be permitted to make one statement at this point, as a matter of history, if I may, with the approval of the Senator.

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I have been on the Judiciary Committee a good many years, from a time long before the Administration of Mr. Cleveland and since Mr. Cleveland's term ended, which was the last Democratic Administration. It has not been absolutely or universally true, but in nearly every instance the appointments made in the South by the Republican Presidents of those connected with the administration of justice—judges, district attorneys, and marshals—have had the very warm and cordial approval of the Democratic Senators from the Southern States, and, in my opinion, it is a fact highly creditable to the Republican Presidents, but still more creditable to the gentlemen who represented those States, showing how absolutely fair, impartial, and nonpolitical the counsel they have given to us in the Senate has been on that very important point.

Mr. TELLER. There are exceptions.

Mr. HOAR. There are some exceptions, I know.

Mr. BACON. I have been upon the Judiciary Committee for seven years, and of course I understand the character of the consent which is given by Democratic Senators to nominations by Republican Presidents of officers in those States. With all Democrats barred from consideration the range of choice has been very limited, and it is rarely that the parties nominated would have been acceptable if others had been eligible. I will state, however, that so far as the judicial appointments are concerned they are very few in a State, and generally as to judges and district attorneys their professional standing is known and satisfactory.

But with the permission of the Senator from Massachusetts I will return to the reply which I was making to the Senator from Wisconsin as to whether I consider it to be the duty of the President to consult Senators as to appointments in their States. I said I do not pretend that it is of the class of duty which would be a direct violation of specific law if disregarded, but that it is in the nature of an obligation which can not be properly departed from, especially in conditions such as I have indicated exist at the South, and that such a departure is a violation of the spirit and intentions of the Constitution.

It may be true, and is true, as said by the Senator from Wisconsin, that the President has absolute power of selection, and that it is then for the Senate to say whether or not it will confirm. But the President violates the proprieties, he violates an obligation, if he makes an appointment without regard to the interests of the people of a State; and I say the obligation is on the President to endeavor to make appointments which shall be in the line of the interests of the people of a State and acceptable to them; and that whatever may be the political views of the people of a State, when you come to the question of duty, the official obligation rests upon him to inform himself whether the appointments which he proposes to make are to the best interests of the people and personally acceptable to them, and to inform himself through the Senators, because, as stated by the senior Senator from Massachusetts yesterday, they are those upon whom the President has the right to rely as those best capacitated to inform him as to what is to the interest of the State. As the Senator from Massachusetts said:

> Why, then, in every instance—
> Not simply as to the Panama Canal—
> Why, then, in every instance should Senators not be expected to give any Department such information as they have in this important matter?

Mr. President, before closing I want to read still further from the article written by the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] as to the origin of the Senate and the reasons for the powers which are conferred upon it and the relations which the Senate bears to the Executive. I read now the views of the junior Senator from Massachusetts as to the relations which should exist between the President and Senators from a State, and I think the views presented by him are very sound. He is speaking of the first rejection ever made by the Senate of a nominee made by the President, in the case of a man named Fishburn, who was nominated for collector of the port, I think it was, at Savannah; and he goes on to say:

> This case undoubtedly led, therefore, to the practice which has been continued to the present time of the President consulting with Senators in regard to appointments. As the Senate, after it has confirmed a nomination, becomes equally responsible with the President for the appointment, it is obvious that the right of consultation under the Constitution, which has already been defined, must be exercised in some way. Thus it came about that the informal consultations with individual Senators took the place of the cumbrous and inconvenient method of consulting the Senate as a body, and in this way the intent of the Constitution has been carried out. Nothing, therefore, is more inept than to criticise a President because he consults the Senators from a State in regard to an appointment in that State or from it. The Senators are his constitutional advisers.
> In some way he must consult them, and it is impossible that any President should be able to know enough about the men in forty-five States to enable him to appoint intelligently unless he could avail himself of the knowledge of those who represent the several States. The consultation of Senators by the President, therefore, in regard to appointments is nothing more than carrying out the intent of the Constitution in the manner which practice has shown to be the only convenient one. The influence of the Senate in making appointments is not increased thereby, except so far as the multiplication of officers has made it more necessary for the President to receive local information and depend for it upon the Senators more than was essential in the early days. All that has been done constitutionally is to substitute an informal consultation with individual Senators for the consultation of the Senate as a body, which has been always recognized as a constitutional right in the simple rule already quoted.

Mr. President, Senators may take the position that that would only apply to Senators of the particular party of the President, whether he be a Democrat or a Republican, and that is indicated in the question propounded to me by the honorable Senator from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS]. But that is an impossible construction. If the Constitution was framed, as contended in this article, with a view to the President being advised by the Senators from a State as to matters within that State, it can not be limited to parties of a particular political party, because the Constitution knows no political parties. It can not mean that I take issue with that, and there is nothing in this language which indicates that such is the view of the junior Senator from Massachusetts. It is in accord with the general proposition that it is an impossibility for the President to know what are the conditions and wants of forty-five States, and that the proper persons under the Constitution through whom he is to gain this information are the Senators.

If he desires to know what are the conditions in Georgia, a Georgia Senator—whether he be a Republican or a Democrat, and whether the President be a Democrat or a Republican—is the Senator to give most reliably and accurately that information, and not the Senator from Illinois or the Senator from Massachusetts or the Senator from Wisconsin. Yet I affirm it as a fact that as to an appointment in a State where there is no Republican Senator the Senator from another State has infinitely more influence as to what shall be done in that State than the Senator from the State itself.

It is due to the present President of the United States to say that he has said to me that if I knew of anything against the character of a man who was to be appointed or was proposed to be appointed he would be obliged if I would tell him of it, that if I knew of the bad character of a man I should tell him. Said I to him, "Mr. President, how am I to give you such information when the first knowledge I have as to whom you will appoint is when you send the name of your nominee into the Senate? It is then too late. Then my independent official function in the matter of confirmation has begun and yours, for the time at least, has ended." So far as the ability to comply with such a request, it is an impossibility where there is no invitation or desire that there shall be any conference between a Senator from a Democratic State as to an appointment until it has been practically determined upon.

Mr. President, I care nothing personally for political patronage. It is nothing to me that I have not the opportunity to obtain offices for anyone; but I do care greatly that there shall be appointed in the State of Georgia Federal officers who shall be entirely fit and proper for the performance of those duties and shall be personally and officially satisfactory and acceptable to the people of Georgia. In the one case, so far as I am personally concerned, so far as concerns my opportunity to dispense official patronage, it is nothing. So far as concerns the interests of the people of the State and that these officers shall be acceptable to them, it is everything. The Constitution, under the present practice, ought to be amended. Instead of saying that the President shall appoint officers by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, it ought to be that he shall appoint by and with the advice and consent of certain irresponsible parties whom he shall select in a State; for it is the selection under the advice of those irresponsible parties that last determines the appointment. When it comes here, of course, if we can show that a man is dishonest the Senate will reject him; but in the absence of some such radical objection as that, when he has been thus selected and has been nominated by the President, the Senate will confirm him, although he may be utterly objectionable and unacceptable to the people of the State, and although opposed by the Senators from that State.

Mr. SPOONER. I suppose the Senator would not amend the Constitution so as to say that the President shall appoint by and with the advice of the Senators of a State?

Mr. BACON. No, I do not go to that extent; but I would say that he should seek the advice of the Senators from the State, and I think that, in part at least, is what the meaning of it is. The President should never appoint one to a Federal office in a State who is unacceptable personally to the people of that State. It is a flagrant outrage upon the people of that State whenever he does it, and a direct violation of the spirit and intention of the Constitution. It was never the design in each State, when it surrendered the absolute power which it had to appoint all officers within its borders and conferred that power in large part upon the General Government, that so far as its internal affairs were concerned the advice which the President should take should be from Senators 3,000 miles away from that State, and that the Senators from that State should be ignored and not known whatever in the matter to be advised about. And more particularly was it never the design in conferring that power upon the General Government that it should be exercised not only in accordance with the advice of Senators from other States and without regard to the Senators from that State, but in utter disregard of the personal wishes of the people of that State. Yet that is the necessary result of the constitutional construction of executive power implied in the suggestion of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Now, Mr. President, in so far as it involves the practice of appointing officers in a State in disregard of the wishes of the people of that State, in so far as it involves the appointment of officers personally objectionable to the people of that State, in so far as it involves the ignoring of the Senators from that State and the being guided by the wishes of other Senators from other States, the practical effect is to utterly outlaw that people—to disfranchise them so far as concerns not only any participation in the selection of their officers, but what goes deeper still, so far as concerns any regard or consideration for the personal acceptability of such officers to the people of the State or community in whose midst they are appointed. I repeat, sir, that such a system is, in practice, an indefensible violation of the fundamental principle of free government.

A great section of the country is practically outlawed when its people—all of its representative people—are denied participation in the offices of the Government. Senators see here every day nominations come into the Senate—nominations of foreign ambassadors, judges, consuls, commissioners of various kinds, and all kinds of Territorial officers, officers of the customs and of the internal revenue, and the thousands of officers who gather and disburse and administer the vast affairs of a government which spends $700,000,000 a year. These nominations are of great interest to Senators of one section, for they are confined almost exclusively to one section of the country. We have just had an illustration of it in the appointment of the canal commissioners. Out of the number there is one from a section which represents more than one-third of the population of the United States, although that section has many eminent engineers and men of affairs. On the Supreme Bench there are but two men of southern birth, although the South has its full proportion of able lawyers. You may go through the list of representation of this Government in all the courts of Europe or other foreign countries circling the whole globe, and where is a southern man who is ever seen or heard of in that connection?

Mr. HOPKINS. If the Senator will allow me there, I think his criticism on the question of the selection of canal commissioners is not entirely fair, because on that kind of an argument the great States of Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, the Dakotas, Nebraska, Kansas, and Iowa are unrepresented.

Mr. HOAR. Massachusetts is not represented.

Mr. BACON. There are forty-five States, and seven is the number of commissioners.

Mr. HOPKINS. Seven out of the forty-five States; and certainly there can not be any discrimination in the South in the selection of those. If we were to be hypercritical we could make the same argument the Senator is making, because a member of the Commission was not selected from Illinois, Iowa, or Wisconsin.

Mr. HOAR. I believe New England is not represented; I am not sure.

Mr. BACON. That ought to be remarked, because I think it is the first time New England was ever left, if that is the case.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. We do not get much.

Mr. HOAR. The reason why New England is not represented is because the selections were made somewhat geographically and not on merits. [Laughter.]

Mr. BACON. I have no doubt in the world there are a great many persons in New England who would make most efficient canal commissioners. But if New England has been omitted, that section lacks greatly of being a third of the United States either in territory or population. New England has 29 Representatives in Congress while the Southern States have 136.

It is a fact that out of the vast revenues of this Government of the hundreds of millions of dollars which we appropriate and which are expended, nine-tenths go to two-thirds of this people at the North and about one-tenth to the other one-third at the South. The great pension bill, which carries nearly one-third or one-fourth of the expenditures of this Government, is one in which the disbursements are altogether, practically speaking, at the North; and this recent piece of executive legislation which we have just had enacted as a new statute by the executive department, and which is to add in the aggregate to the pension roll several hundred million dollars, is one in which while we wll pay our part of it there will be nothing of it coming back to us.

Now, do not understand me as making any complaint about pensions. Senators here know that Southern Senators make no contention as to pensions. We leave that altogether to the Northern Senators, and the responsibility is with them.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator would naturally expect the appropriation for pensions to be largely spent in the North, in view of the fact that nearly all the soldiers came from the North.

Mr. BACON. I understand, and I am not complaining of it; I am simply speaking of the practical fact that while the people of the South bear their full part of the burdens, they share very little of the benefits of this Government, either as to honors or emoluments.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me a word there, I will say that Illinois pays in internal-revenue taxes more than any seven or eight Southern States combined.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. And Indiana pays more than Illinois.

Mr. BACON. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] was upon the Committee on Ways and Means of the other House, but the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] has not had that opportunity. For the Senator from Illinois, who served upon the Committee on Ways and Means, the great financial committee of the House of Representatives, to take the position that the place where the internal revenue is paid is the place where the taxes of the Government are paid is the most preposterous proposition I can conceive of.

Mr. HOPKINS. The point I was making, if the Senator will allow me, is this: The Senator was complaining because appropriations were not made for the Southern States.

Mr. BACON. No, I am not complaining.

Mr. HOPKINS. My counter answer to that is that Illinois pays more money into the Treasury of the United States from internal-revenue taxation than any seven or eight Southern States that can be named.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, in the first place I was not complaining. I was just simply commenting upon the utter fallacy of that proposition. To say that where the internal revenue is collected is the place where the taxes are paid is utterly untenable. The Senator ought to know, as one of the former members of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, that under the internal-revenue system taxes are paid by those who consume the articles and not by those who make them. Does the Senator contend that all the whisky that is distilled and that all the tobacco that is made in Illinois is consumed in Illinois?

Mr. HOPKINS. Georgia consumes some of the liquor, I will admit.

Mr. BACON. Yes; we do, and in that way we pay our full share of the tax.

The idea of the Senator from Illinois making any such proposition in the Senate of the United States and expecting that it will be received as an argument——

Mr. HOPKINS. I simply presented that proposition to show, if the Senator will allow the expression, the absurdity of the argument he was making, that the Southern States were being discriminated against because they did not get certain appropriations. The Senator will find, when he comes to look at the appropriations made from time to time for governmental purposes, that the South has had its full share.

Mr. BACON. Well, Mr. President, the Senator still repeats the fallacy.

Mr. HOPKINS. I repeat it simply because it was first made by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BACON. Very well. I say the Senator is simply repeating the fallacy that because whisky is distilled or tobacco is made or beer is brewed in Illinois therefore Illinois pays the internal-revenue tax, which, I say, is a fallacy. But it is not necessary for me to occupy a single moment of the time of the Senate to expose that, because every man who hears me knows it without my exposing it.

Mr. SPOONER. About the only governmental thing, from the standpoint of the South, the Senator would not complain of, so far as I can see, is the representation in Congress. He does not complain of that, does he?

Mr. BACON. No.

Mr. SPOONER. But he does of everything else.

Mr. BACON. Representation is something which the Federal Government does not bestow upon us.

Mr. SPOONER. Well——

Mr. BACON. I do not know what the pantomime of the Senator means, but if the fact that we have two representatives in this Senate is a matter for which we are indebted to any governmental action, I am now to be informed of it for the first time.

Mr. SPOONER. I hope the Senator would not do himself the injustice or me the injustice to impute to me such a proposition.

Mr. BACON. No, I hope not.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not suppose it will be necessary for me to say to the Senator that I know under the Constitution each State is entitled to two representatives in this body, but of course the apportionment act is passed by Congress, which fixes the number of Representatives for each State in the other House.

Mr. BACON. I do not wish, of course, to impute anything to the Senator which he does not mean, but when he spoke of our enjoying representation in Congress I did not know what other construction I could put upon it.

Mr. SPOONER. When I speak of the basis of representation I do not mean, of course, in the Senate.

Mr. BACON. No; in the House of Representatives.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; in the other House.

Mr. BACON. I do not know of anything which is unjust in the representation the South enjoys in the House of Representatives.

Mr. SPOONER. That is one thing which the Senator finds is all right.

Mr. BACON. But yet we are in no manner indebted to any action of the executive department of the Federal Government in the fact that we enjoy that representation. We enjoy it under the Constitution of the United States—the Constitution in the framing of which my State took a part.

Mr. President, without intending I have gone somewhat at length into this question. When I rose I simply wished to call attention to a very notable utterance by the honorable and venerable Senator from Massachusetts, and to express my very great gratification that the Senator should have said that he recognized that there should be, so far as the Federal Government is concerned, a general representation of all sections and of all the people of the United States in the offices to be held, and the further explicit statement upon his part that in the appointment of these officers the proper persons for the Executive to consult were those who had been chosen and sent here as Senators to represent their States in this body.

I will only add, sir, that this is a matter which concerns the whole country; that it is not to the best interest of the country that a political control shall continue, which, if the present system is unavoidable in administration, must continue to result in practically debarring one-third of the people of the country from full participation in the executive offices of the Government.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The bill was passed.

PAYMENTS TO DELAWARE INDIANS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, stating, in response to a resolution of the 23d instant, that the difference in value between coin and currency on payments made to the Delaware Indians for the period 1862–1878 is $208,804.50; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to give notice at this time that tomorrow morning, after the routine morning business, I shall ask the Senate to consider the bill (H. R. 12833) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes.

CLASSIFICATION OF CEREALS.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to give notice at this time that on Friday, the 1st day of April, immediately after the routine morning business, I shall submit some remarks on the bill (S. 199) to provide for fixing a uniform standard of classification and grading of wheat, flax, corn, oats, barley, rye, and other grains, and for other purposes.

WABASH RIVER BRIDGE, INDIANA.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 13480) to authorize the Southern Indiana Railway Company to construct a railroad bridge across the Wabash River, in Vigo County, Ind.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Commerce was to strike out section 2, on page 2, as follows:

SEC. 2. That any bridge built under the provisions of this act shall be a drawbridge with a center or pivot pier, and so constructed that said bridge may be opened over the main channel of the river, the width of which openings shall not be less than 70 feet in the clear on each side of the pivot pier, and the piers of said bridge shall be parallel with the current of the river, and the lowest part of the superstructure of said bridge shall not be less than 38 feet above low-water mark, as understood at the point of location: Provided, That the draw shall be promptly opened upon proper signal for the passage of boats; and there shall be displayed on said bridge by the owners thereof, at their own expense, between sunset and sunrise, such lights and other signals as the Light-House Board may prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [3] 2, on page 4, line 1, after the word "navigation," to insert:

Provided, That if said bridge be built as a drawbridge the draw shall be promptly opened upon reasonable signal for the passage of boats, and whatever kind of bridge is built, the said company shall maintain thereon, as its own expense, from sunset to sunrise, such lights or other signals as the Light-House Board may prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [5] 4, on page 4, line 16, after the word "within." to strike out "one year" and insert "two years;" and in line 17, before the word "years," to strike "three" and insert "four;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. That this act shall be null and void unless the bridge herein authorized shall be commenced within two years and completed within four years from the date hereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MONONGAHELA RIVER BRIDGE, PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. PENROSE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8889) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Monongahela River, in the State of Pennsylvania, by the Eastern Railroad Company." It is a bill only twelve lines long.

Mr. KEAN. I was going to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, but I will withhold the motion for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania that the Senate consider the bill named by him?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to amend section 4 of an act approved February 18, 1903, entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Monongahela River, in the State of Pennsylvania, by the Eastern Railroad Company;" so as read as follows:

SEC. 4. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the bridge herein authorized be not commenced within one year and completed within two years from February 18, 1904.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. KEAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and at (5 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, March 25, 1904, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate March 24, 1904.

SECRETARIES OF LEGATION.

Norman Hutchinson, of California, to be secretary of the legation of the United States at Caracas, Venezuela.

Edward Winslow Ames, of Massachusetts, to be secretary of the legation of the United States at Santiago, Chile.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS.

Edward R. Stackable, of the Territory of Hawaii, to be collector of customs for the district of Hawaii, in the Territory of Hawaii.

POSTMASTERS.

MAINE.

Fred H. Atwood to be postmaster at Rumford Falls, in the county of Oxford and State of Maine.

NEW JERSEY.

George B. Jacobus to be postmaster at Caldwell, in the county of Essex and State of New Jersey.

Charles W. Russell to be postmaster at New Brunswick, in the county of Middlesex and State of New Jersey.

NEW YORK.

Charles H. Parker to be postmaster at Macedon, in the county of Wayne and State of New York.

RELATIONS WITH FRANCE IN TUNIS.

The injunction of secrecy was removed March 24, 1904, from a treaty between the United States and France for the determination of their relations in Tunis, signed at Washington on March 15, 1904.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, March 24, 1904.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion of Mr. OVERSTREET, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. BOUTELL in the chair) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13521) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes.

The pending question was on agreeing to the following amendment, offered by Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana:

Amend by striking out, in lines 6 and 7, page 19, the words "two million six hundred and fifty thousand dollars" and insert in lieu thereof the words "two million six hundred and five thousand dollars;" and also strike out the following words in lines 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11: "including additional compensation to the Oceanic Steamship Company for transporting the mails by its steamers sailing from San Francisco to Tahiti; all mails made up in the United States destined for the island of Tahiti, $45,000."

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to occupy the floor for ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request that the gentleman from Indiana be allowed to speak for ten minutes? The Chair hears none.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I will ask not to be interrupted during my general remarks, and if time shall remain after I have completed the general statement I will gladly yield.

The amendment I propose is directed solely against the $45,000 postal subsidy for carrying the mail to Tahiti, a French colony.

Fairly, this is an original proposition to the House. While it has appeared in the bill for two years, it has never been discussed, no attention has been given it, and nothing is known of it by the members of the Post-Office Committee, and inquiries by me of those who naturally would be supposed to know something about it have brought the response that they knew nothing of it.

A careful search of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD covering the two or three year period discloses nothing in the House or in the Senate of discussion on the subject. Inquiry of the clerk of the Post-Office Committee does not disclose a line or a syllable of hearings or evidence to enlighten us. For the first two years that it appeared in the bill it was not recommended by the Post-Office Department, and the submission of estimates now are purely perfunctory and in the usual course.

This subsidy originated in the House, it is true, but I dare say no Member of the House now present knew anything about it; its birth was wrapped in darkness and obscurity; its course has been one of silence and inattention, and it comes now, so far as the membership is concerned, as an original proposition to stand or fall on its merits or to be relegated because of the unsatisfactory means we now have in this way to give it that investigation which should have been given it before it was ingrafted on our legislation.

One is almost warranted, with a provision so singular, with a history so covered up, and with the importance of the subject, in going into the domains of speculation as to how Congress was ever buncoed into the measure. The fine Italian hand of some one not disclosed and apparently not to be detected has played its part. If one wanted to be severe and reasonably parliamentary at the same time, a phrase already coined might be used and applied to this misadventure: "That it was sneaked through Congress in a cowardly manner," meaning by that that it was covered up, unknown to and undiscussed in either branch of Congress. I might say that this steamship company is controlled by the sugar trust, but I presume that is not important in this discussion.

The chairman of the Post-Office Committee don't know any more about it or its origin or the reasons for it than the records disclose, which, as I have shown, are blanks on the subject. He states that Tahiti is the largest island in the French colonies of the Society Islands, being a part of the Polynesian group. I have a map of it here, and it shows up about the size of a pin head, and the little islands around it look like pin points in the blue sea of the Pacific Ocean. The chairman says its area is 500 square miles, being something like a hundred square miles less than my county in Indiana. Two authorities differ from the gentleman. One, Harper's Book of Facts, gives it as 412, and the other, History of Ready Reference, by Larned, 600 square miles. He says the population is from ten to fifteen thousand. The established authority, Harper, gives it at 11,200. The gentleman is flexible in his statement, but not much more so than the best authorities we have, who differ widely, because, perhaps, they have not felt it of enough consequence to waste much time upon it.

This island is a coral reef, with cocoanuts, copra, vanilla beans, and mother-of-pearl shells as its principal productions. In view of the light contained in an article that appeared a week ago in the Washington Star (Republican), and which bears the earmarks of some official who understands the subject, and which I am willing to indorse, for it is in line with my own investigation, I shall present it to the House, and with it I think comes every reason and argument why Congress should not longer be imposed upon by this unusual legislation.

THE MAIL FOR TAHITI—SUBSIDY OF $45,000 IN POSTAL APPROPRIATION BILL—RATE OF $6.50 A POUND—SCHOONERS GLAD TO CARRY IT AT 6 CENTS A POUND—CONSIDERABLE COMMENT AT THE DEPARTMENT AND THE CAPITOL OVER THE ESTIMATE.

The present postal appropriation bill carries an item of $45,000 for carrying the service between San Francisco and Tahiti. This item has given rise to considerable quiet talk at the Post-Office Department and at the Capitol. The appropriation is in the nature of a ship subsidy to the Oceanic Steamship Company.

The island called Tahiti, belonging to the Oceanic group, lies in the Pacific Ocean, 4,212 miles southwest of San Francisco. The Oceanic Steamship Company makes ten trips a year to this interesting isle of the southern seas, for which it receives from the Government the sum of $1 a mile for carrying the United States mail from this country to the isle. The ten trips a year, one way, make a total of 42,120 miles, and an equal number of dollars in the pockets of the company. Every year the appropriation comes up in the general estimate for the Post-Office Department.

NOT ASKED BY THE DEPARTMENT.

Until two years ago it was not sent to Congress by the Postmaster-General, for the reason that the Government had been having its mails carried from San Francisco to Tahiti for $350 a year, and this contract with schooners comprised twelve trips a year, instead of ten given by the steamship company, and was said to be a very good service, although a little longer than by steam. Four years ago there was inserted in the general appropriation bill for the Post-Office Department an item of $45,000 for carrying the mails from San Francisco to Tahiti. It surprised the Post-Office authorities, but they let it go. The following year the item was again inserted, and again it went through, although the Post-Office Department had not asked for it, and seemed perfectly satisfied with the service that had been given by the sailing vessels at $350 a year.

But this saving to the Government of the difference between $350 and $45,000 a year did not seem to appeal with force to the Members of Congress who passed the appropriation. So when it had gone on for two years and the Post-Office Department had grown used to its insertion the Department entered in the annual appropriation estimate the item of $45,000 for this mail carriage between San Francisco and Tahiti. Of course it went through. It is up again this session, and of course it will go through.

MAIL CARRIED TO TAHITI.

For the fiscal year 1903 the weight of the mails carried between San Francisco and Tahiti was as follows:

Letters and cards, 423 pounds; other mail matter, 5,988 pounds; total, 6,411 pounds.

On this amount of mail the United States collected inland and sea postage to the amount of $1,155.84. It paid the Oceanic Steamship Company $42,120 for carrying this mail matter to Tahiti. The excess of cost to the Government was, therefore, $40,964.16.

In order to bring this down to still plainer figures it is only necessary to show that, in paying this steamship company $42,120 for the ten trips of the year, during which the company transported a total of 6,411 pounds of mail, the Government paid for that service at the rate of $6.50 a pound. The schooners which formerly had the job were loath to lose it at the small figure of $350 a year, which was less than 6 cents per pound, estimating the weight of the mails at the figures given above for 1903.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I spoke briefly upon this item just before the committee rose on yesterday. This is not a strange item to the bill. It comes clearly within the provisions of what is known as the "mail-subsidy act," established by law in 1891 to promote commerce between the United States and countries or peoples that have no direct mail connection with the United States.

If the steamships which ply between the United States and the island of Tahiti were of sufficient tonnage to specifically come within the provisions of the law of 1891, there would be no especial appropriation for that particular service. By reason of the fact that that is not a regular steamship route, and that only smaller-tonnage boats of slow speed make that trip, it was necessary, in order to bring it within the provisions of this law under the terms of the law itself, to make direct reference to it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is true that the amount of postage received from the mail carried between the United States and the Society Islands is very inconsiderable. I should say, in round numbers, it would not exceed $2,500 a year. But it is a direct illustration of the operation of the law of 1891, which sought to promote commerce and trade by giving a subsidy for mail privileges. I have a letter from the Assistant Secretary of State, under date of March 21, transmitting information as to the amount of trade—export trade—from the island of Tahiti and adjacent islands for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, which he says amounted to $369,923.19. That was the amount of trade which came to the United States from the Society Islands.

The amount of trade which went from the United States to Tahiti during the same period amounted, in round numbers, to $400,000: $75,000 for muslins and prints, $25,000 for manufactured iron articles, such as sewing machines, bicycles, and refrigerating machinery, $100,000 in lumber, and miscellaneous trade about $100,000. We bought from that little island nearly $400,000 worth of goods in the year, made up largely of chocolate, cocoanuts, and tropical fruits.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Certainly.

Mr. SHERLEY. Can the gentleman tell the House how much trade there was between that island and America prior to this subsidy?

Mr. OVERSTREET. There was trade between the island and the United States prior to this subsidy to about two-thirds of that which it has developed into since.

I was going to suggest, Mr. Chairman, that mail facility unquestionably stimulates trade, and the reply to the question of the gentleman from Kentucky illustrates that point, because the trade has increased over $300,000 since this item was first put in the bill.

Mr. SNOOK. When was the first year it had the benefit of this subsidy?

Mr. OVERSTREET. The fiscal year beginning July 1, 1901.

Mr. THAYER. Before that?

Mr. SNOOK. Was the trade from the United States to Tahiti in the year 1901 almost as large as this year?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I say the trade between the islands and the United States prior to this appropriation was about two-thirds of what it has been since.

Mr. SNOOK. Were not the imports from the United States in 1901 to Tahiti $375,000?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I have not the figures before me. I am speaking of the total trade between the island and the United States.

Mr. SNOOK. That is what I am talking about.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Now, Mr. Chairman, just a word. This is a proposition showing the effect of the subsidy act. If Australia should succeed in negotiations to obtain mail facilities—Australia being equidistant from the island and from San Francisco—if they were to get that mail facility, it would divert a portion of the trade which is now given to the United States.

It is possible that tramp boats, steamship lines which do not receive mail, which would operate between the Island and this country, would carry considerable trade; but I believe there is a very serious doubt as to whether the trade between the island and the United States would continue to equal the trade which this facility has stimulated.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and amendment be closed.

Mr. THAYER. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. CROMER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman makes a privileged motion, that all debate on this paragraph and amendment be now closed.

Mr. CROMER. I hope the gentleman will give us an opportunity for some debate on this matter.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I move that in ten minutes all debate be closed.

Mr. THAYER. Have you the floor now? If so, I would like to ask you a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana moves that debate on this paragraph and amendment be closed in ten minutes.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 70, noes 51.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. CROMER. Mr. Chairman, in November, 1900, and up to that time the mail between Tahiti and the United States was carried by French steamers. There were no complaints at the Department or anywhere else about the regularity and promptness in carrying the mail. Everything was satisfactory up to that time about the carrying of the mail between this island and San Francisco. At that time the Oceanic Steamship Company had built up some trade with the island of Tahiti and had asked of the Government the right to carry this mail, and it received the right from the Department, although it cost the Government about $1,150 to have the mail carried by American registered vessels, whereas it only cost about $350 by the French steamer.

The Oceanic Steamship Company carried this mail for one or two years for the statutory allowance or the statutory rate for carrying the mail. In 1901, somehow or other, this item was considered in the Post-Office Committee—or, rather, not considered. It was placed in the bill by some one who was interested in the matter, and from that time to this we can not understand who it is in this House, or anywhere else, who is interested in paying that Oceanic Steamship Company more than the statutory allowance for carrying this mail. Last year two men could have carried all of the letters and all of the letter mail that was carried between this island and San Francisco.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROMER. I have only five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. CROMER. Only 423 pounds of letter mail were carried between San Francisco and the island of Tahiti during the last fiscal year, and yet Members of this House will vote to pay $45,000 a year to the Oceanic Steamship Company that did carry this mail for two years for the statutory allowance because it was an advantage to that steamship company to carry the mail. The people who own that steamship company are the people who are interested in the trade with the island of Tahiti. Why, it is ridiculous, gentlemen, to think that we will pay six dollars and fifty cents a pound for every pound of letters and every pound of newspapers that is carried to this island from this country. That is what it amounts to. In 1903 there were just 423 pounds of letter mail and 5,988 pounds of newspapers, or prints; and if you take the total of this mail matter and divide $42,120, which this steamship company received for carrying the mail during the last year, by it, you find it cost $6.50 for every pound of newspapers and letters carried down to that island. It cost $3.75 for every man, woman, and child who was living upon the island. Why, gentlemen, the people down there on that island live in bamboo houses, with no floors except the earth, and yet we will appropriate $45,000 to carry the mail between this country and that island. Mr. Chairman, I desire to have a letter——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. CROMER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to have this letter from the Auditor of the Post-Office Department published in the RECORD as part of my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD, in connection with his remarks, a letter. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The letter is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF AUDITOR FOR THE POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, March 19, 1904.

SIR: In reply to your verbal inquiry of this morning relative to the comparative cost of foreign mail service between the port of San Francisco and the French colony of Tahiti, Society Islands, during the fiscal years ending June 30, 1902, and June 30, 1903, I have the honor to submit the following statement:

YEAR ENDING JUNE 30, 1902.

Weight of mails dispatched during that year, 347½ pounds of letter mail, 5,587½ pounds of prints. The cost of transporting these mails in American registered vessels under section 4009, Revised Statutes, would be $1,002.90, and if conveyed in foreign registered vessels the cost would be $396.58. The actual cost, however, for the conveyance of the mails in question by the Oceanic Steamship Company, under the appropriation by Congress, at $1 per mile for each outward trip, was $37,908.

YEAR ENDING JUNE 30, 1903.

Weight of mails dispatched during that year, 423 pounds of letter mail, 5,988 pounds of prints. The cost of transporting these mails in American registered vessels, under section 4009, Revised Statutes, would be $1,155.87, and if conveyed in foreign registered vessels the cost would be $447.19. The actual cost, however, for the conveyance of the mails in question by the Oceanic Steamship Company, under the appropriation by Congress, at $1 per mile for each outward trip, was $42,120.

The Oceanic Steamship Company has received for similar service rendered during the third and fourth quarters, 1903, at the rate of $1 per mile for each outward trip, $21,060.

Prior to November 1, 1900, this service was performed by French steamers at a cost to the Department of about $400 a year, and on the date above mentioned the Oceanic Steamship Company took up the service with American registered steamers, which increased the cost to about $1,150. Under the appropriation by Congress fixing the compensation at $1 per mile, the cost of the service has increased to $42,120 per annum.

Very respectfully,
J. J. MCCARDY,
Auditor.

Hon. GEORGE W. CROMER, M. C.,
The Dewey, Washington, D. C.

Mr. LIVERNASH. Mr. Chairman, coming from San Francisco, the American city most directly affected by the provision now under discussion, and having some familiarity with the matter before the committee, I feel it my duty to urge that the amendment offered by my colleague from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] be voted down.

The granting of the subsidy the Committee on Post-Office and Post-Roads seeks to have continued has been of tangible value to the country. In the years preceding it communication between our mainland territory and the island of Tahiti was exceedingly unfavorable to passenger and freight traffic, and both languished.

I recall with much discontent as to the old conditions the days when a tiny barkentine, the Tropic Bird, less than 400 tons gross, was the only vessel regularly plying between Papette and San Francisco, and the voyage in that toy craft was necessarily full of physical hardship for the passenger and full of inconvenience and delay to shippers of freight. The subsidy made possible a radical improvement of service, so that passengers could travel and freight be borne between Tahiti and our western coast by modern steamships of large tonnage and fair speed.

The subsidy justified the Oceanic Steamship Company in putting into the Tahitian trade steamships drawing to themselves forthwith new passenger and freight traffic of which our country has been the beneficiary. To withdraw that subsidy, as the pending amendment is intended to withdraw it, may and probably will work for us a return to the Tropic Bird conditions.

My advocacy of liberal treatment of the Oceanic Company is not colored by anything of prejudice in favor of that corporation on my own account; but I am in no doubt as to the value of the liberality in so far as the United States is concerned and in so far as San Francisco in particular is concerned, nor as to the progressiveness and Americanism of the corporation in question. Accordingly, I speak as I am speaking.

It should be considered, I think, that the Oceanic Company is the only corporation whose steamships, being engaged in the Pacific over-sea trade of this country, employs white seamen. This important fact ought to count in favor of enlarging the power of the Oceanic Company; and, so far as my voice and vote can reach, it shall so count.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. LIVERNASH. I regret to say that I have so little time as to feel obliged to decline to yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. LIVERNASH. In a sense, a vote for the amendment is a vote against white seamen, and however this may be, it surely is a vote against a policy which has enlarged and is enlarging our trade with the Society Islands.

I hope the committee will not be favorably influenced by the comments of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BURKETT] concerning bamboo huts and mud floors. It is painfully clear that he has much to learn about Tahiti, a French colony largely inhabited by cultivated French people, living as the French live in other lands. The commerce of the Society Islands is by no means the worthless quantity he seems to think it.

Now, sir, the condition essential to a valuable trade with the Society Islands is the maintenance of acceptable transportation facilities. Strike down the adequate transportation facilities and we strike down our trade.

I hope the gentlemen on the Democratic side of the Chamber will not be frightened by the word "subsidy." I am not in favor of the so-called "subsidy" policy for upbuilding our merchant marine.

It seems to me that the best policy in that regard will prove to be substantially in line with the proposals made in a bill recently introduced in Congress by the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON]—that is to say, proposals for dealing with the problem by means of tonnage taxes and customs rebates. But until the Democratic party has power to enforce its own remedies for the decadence of our merchant marine in the over-sea trade, it should not stand for embarrassing our ships by weakening a present policy clearly possessing some sort of value, though not the best value.

It can not be the part of wisdom, I believe, to drive San Francisco backward to the Tropic Bird, and I hope a more enlightened policy will prevail.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I am free to confess that I know nothing as to the actual conditions of this little island of Tahiti, but the statement made by the chairman of the Post-Office Committee in defense of this item, in my judgment, is sufficient to make every man vote against it. He had to give some explanation of the cost to the Government of $46,000 to carry the mails, when the mails had been and could be carried for just about $41,000 less than that sum. His explanation was that it was a subsidy to the steamship company. He was asked in regard to the amount of trade that this country had with these islands, and he said that we had a total trade, including imports and exports, of $769,000; that we had had prior to this subsidy a trade equal to at least two-thirds of that.

Now, assuming, which is not true, that every bit of that one-third increase has been due to the subsidy, you have got this remarkable condition of affairs: That for the sake of two hundred and fifty-odd thousand dollars' worth of trade you are paying out $41,000 of Government money.

The CHAIRMAN. The time fixed by the committee for debate on this amendment has expired.

Mr. CROMER. Mr. Chairman, can we have the amendment read again?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again read the amendment.

The Clerk again reported the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana) there were—ayes 71, noes 62.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I ask for tellers, Mr. Chairman.

The question of ordering tellers was taken; and the Chairman decided that tellers were ordered.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I demand the other side.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Alabama that the Chairman in Committee of the Whole can order tellers if he so desires.

Mr. OVERSTREET and Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana were appointed tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 83, noes 68.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CROMER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in line 7, page 19, after the word "and," the word "fifty" and insert the word "five."

Mr. CROMER. That is to make the amounts correspond.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I accept that amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For miscellaneous items including railway guides, city directories, and other books and periodicals necessary in connection with mail transportation, $1,000.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I would like the attention of the gentleman from Mississippi. The paragraph on page 2 of the bill to which the gentleman from Mississippi addressed an amendment was passed without prejudice. I understand the gentleman from Mississippi desires to withdraw his amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The subsequent passage by the House of the two amendments offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] will render it unnecessary to adopt the amendment offered by me, and I ask unanimous consent to withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that he may withdraw the amendment heretofore offered by him. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. OVERSTREET. That amendment was to lines 4 and 5 on page 2 of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

For manufacture of stamped envelopes and newspaper wrappers, $850,000.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 30, line 16, after the word "dollars," add "Provided, Upon expiration of existing contracts for the manufacture of stamped envelopes no part of this appropriation shall be expended for printing individual, firm, or corporate names in return cards on stamped envelopes."

Mr. LAWRENCE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that is repugnant to Rule XXI in that it is a provision changing existing law and not in order on an appropriation bill.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order?

Mr. LAWRENCE. I will reserve the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts reserves the point of order.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I have offered this amendment in order to call the attention of the House to what seems to me to be an abuse on the part of the Post-Office Department. The section of the law which this item is intended to carry into effect reads as follows:

The Postmaster-General shall contract for all envelopes, stamped or otherwise, designed for sale to the public, or for use by his own or other Departments, and may contract for them to be plain or with such printed matter as may be prescribed by the Department making requisition therefor: Provided, That no envelope furnished by the Government shall contain any business address or advertisement.

Now, in its regulations designed to carry into effect that section of the statute, the Department uses the following language:

SEC. 337. No advertisement, business cards, or devices of any kind will be printed on special-request envelopes, in addition to the return card. The matter in such cards will be limited to: "After —— days return to (name of the writer—individual, firm, company, or corporation), street number, post-office, and State." (See sec. 136.)

Mr. Chairman, if the name of the writer, his street number, his post-office, and State do not constitute his business address, I do not know what the interpretation of that term would be. The statute expressly excludes the business address from the return card which may be printed upon one of these stamped envelopes, and yet the Department by these regulations expressly provides that that business address may be inserted, and as a matter of fact we all know that it is inserted whenever envelopes are ordered in quantities of 500 or more. I contend, therefore, that the Department has placed an interpretation upon the law which the phraseology of the statute does not warrant.

But if the construction placed upon the law by the Department is correct, I yet insist that the policy is wrong.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCOTT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman explain to us what they could put on under his construction of the law?

Mr. SCOTT. I believe the only proper thing that could be placed on the return card are these words: "After ——— days return to ———," leaving a space for the writer to write in his name and address. But, as I say, I will pass the question of the construction of the law.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think that Congress had that intention in its mind—that they should not put on the name of the post-office?

Mr. SCOTT. I can not believe that Congress had it in its mind to permit the Department to issue a return card giving, for example, "The Standard Oil Company, No. 12 Wall street, New York," under this statute, because——

Mr. MANN. But suppose it is "W. A. Jones," at Campville, Mo.?

Mr. SCOTT. It is expressly said that no business address shall be printed, and I do not know what a business address is if that be not a business address.

Mr. MANN rose.

Mr. SCOTT. I have only a moment, and I prefer not to yield further. I want to call attention especially to what I regard as the vicious policy of this practice on the part of the Department. It is simply another illustration of the petty paternalism that has been so severely criticised in the matter of the distribution of free seeds, except that it has nothing like the same basis of reasonable argument for its defense that the seed distribution has. We can defend the seed distribution on the ground that it affords a benefit to a great many poor people. This benefit is conferred upon only a few, and they are the wealthier ones. The common people, or the ordinary farmer or laboring man, and indeed the ordinary retail merchant or business man, does not purchase his stamps in ten-dollar lots; and yet the regulations provide that no man can have the benefit of this provision unless he does purchase his stamps in lots of 500 or more.

It seems to me absolutely clear, therefore, that if this law is properly construed we ought to change the policy, so as to prevent the Government from becoming the competitor of the local printers all over the country. That is practically what it amounts to. Anyone, I insist, who can afford to buy his stamped envelopes in lots of 500 can afford to pay the small fee to his local printer for printing his business address thereon. It is a small matter to the firm doing the business. It is a large matter in the aggregate to the local printers all over the country.

Mr. SPALDING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SCOTT. Yes; I will yield for a question.

Mr. SPALDING. Is not the real principle involved this: That the object of printing the return card is for the benefit of the Government rather than for the benefit of the individual, and to prevent loading the mails and Post-Office Department with letters which would otherwise be dead letters?

Mr. SCOTT. I understand that to be the theory, and yet I maintain that a firm which is doing a sufficient business to warrant it in buying its postage stamps in lots of 500 or more would certainly not be so unwise from a business standpoint as to send those envelopes out into the mail without any business address. It would simply be the matter of the expenditure of a dollar to them, or less than that, perhaps, to have their business address printed at the local office upon their stamped envelopes, so that it seems to me the gentleman's contention can not be maintained as a matter of sound governmental policy.

Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to protract this discussion, but I would like to be heard one moment on the point of order. As I said in the beginning, it seems to me that the Department is putting the wrong construction upon the law; that the existing law does not admit of the printing of these individual addresses upon the envelopes.

But if the Chair will not hold with me on that proposition, I then rest my contention upon the well-established principle of parliamentary practice, that this House has the right to limit an appropriation. Undoubtedly the House would have a right to strike out this item if it so desired. That being the case, it seems to me the House undoubtedly has the right to limit the manner in which the appropriation shall be expended. On that statement I am willing to rest this case.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Mr. Chairman, I should like to be heard briefly on the point of order. As I understand, for many years, upon stamped envelopes sold by the Government, there has been printed a return card. I have always supposed that that was very greatly to the convenience of business men and individuals purchasing such envelopes. But at this time I do not care to enter into a discussion of the merits of the question, except to say that propositions of this kind ought to come before the House in a proper way and under the rules of the House. Here is a serious departure in the way of doing business at the Post-Office Department with reference to stamped envelopes. It ought to come before this House in the form of a bill, so that it might be discussed thoroughly and considered at length. All must admit that there can be no proper discussion of the merits of the proposition under the five-minute rule.

Mr. Chairman, there is no rule which is more frequently invoked than Rule XXI, which declares that no provision "changing existing law shall be in order on an appropriation bill." Now, it seems to me this proposition is legislation pure and simple. The only way in which it can be justified is by the claim put forward by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SCOTT], that it is a limitation on an appropriation.

Mr. Chairman, I realize that the rulings in this respect have been very liberal and that we have reached a point where we are legislating over and over again on appropriation bills under the plea that the provisions in question are limitations upon the appropriation. A Member of the House said to me yesterday, "The Members of the House are catching onto this limitation business," by which I suppose he meant that by cleverly wording an amendment new legislation could be tacked upon an appropriation bill under the pretense that it was a limitation.

Of course I know the difficulties that the Chair has in ruling upon a proposition of this kind, but I conceive it to be the duty of the Chair, if he can, following the precedents made in this and former Congresses, to prevent provisions changing existing law being made part of an appropriation bill under the guise of a limitation, and consequently I am glad to be able to cite to the Chairman an exact precedent which he can follow in this case.

This is not a new proposition. It came before the House in the third session of the Fifty-fifth Congress, and was promptly ruled out of order; and I refer the Chair to page 347 of the Constitution, Manual, and Digest. The seventh paragraph on that page is as follows:

An amendment providing that no portion of an appropriation for the manufacture of stamped envelopes should be expended in printing return cards on them was ruled out of order.

That, Mr. Chairman, was a more difficult proposition to rule out than the present one; and I sincerely hope, as this is so apparently new legislation, that the Chair will see fit to follow this precedent.

I also wish to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that this is not a limitation on this specific appropriation. This appropriation, as I understand, is for the manufacture of stamped envelopes under a contract which has some years to run. The amendment is to this effect:

Provided, That upon the expiration of existing contracts for the manufacture of stamped envelopes no part of this appropriation shall be expended for printing individual, firm, or corporate names in the return cards on stamped envelopes.

This can hardly be held to be a limitation upon the present appropriation, which is made in pursuance of a contract which does not expire for, I am informed, about two years.

Mr. Chairman, it does not seem to me that this provision can be construed to be a "limitation." It is clearly new legislation and not in order under our rules.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair wishes to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LAWRENCE] whether he has before him the case referred to in the Manual. The Chair calls attention to the fact that the next paragraph to the one read by the gentleman seems to refer to a decision holding rather the opposite view under similar circumstances.

Mr. LAWRENCE. The next paragraph states that—

A proposed amendment limiting the kinds of seeds to be purchased under the law was held to be a change of law and not a limitation.

I can not see that it is in conflict with the case I have cited. The case to which I referred was decided during the consideration of the post-office appropriation bill in the third session of the Fifty-fifth Congress. The amendment that "no portion of the appropriation for the manufacture of stamped envelopes should be expended in printing return cards on them" was offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK]. A point of order was made by Mr. Loud (chairman of the Post-Office Committee), and the question was considered so clear that there was no discussion upon the point, the Chair simply announcing that he sustained the point of order.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit an observation or two upon the question of order. It seems to me that the proposed amendment is clearly in order. It is a limitation upon the appropriation to which it is addressed. It is a restriction upon the powers of the Postmaster-General, requiring him to expend the money carried by the appropriation for an object or a purpose which the law justifies. Under existing law the Postmaster-General may provide envelopes and paper wrappers, plain or with certain inscriptions upon them, and the proposed amendment limits the use of the appropriation to printing of only one kind of stamped envelopes and paper wrappers, a kind that the law already authorizes.

I confess that the question of limitations has been carried to an extreme point; that in some instances legislation under the guise of a limitation has been held in order upon appropriation bills; but I conceive the rule to be this, that an amendment is in order as a limitation where it simply restricts the power that the law already gives to an executive officer. A proposed amendment, whatever its form, is not a limitation if it contains authority in addition to that which the law already grants.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Does the gentleman yield just for a question? I do not wish to interrupt him.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I yield.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I should like to ask the gentleman from Indiana if he understands this to be an appropriation made to carry out an existing contract?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I think it is.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. This is a general appropriation for the purpose named, and the amendment limits the appropriation to the printing of certain kinds of stamped envelopes and paper wrappers, the kinds that the Postmaster-General is already authorized to print, excepting that it shall not apply to existing contracts; and the amendment limits the appropriation to that purpose.

Mr. LAWRENCE. What I wanted to call the attention of the gentleman from Indiana to was this: As I understand it, this appropriation is made to carry out an existing contract, and the amendment provides that upon the expiration of the existing contracts the manufacture, etc.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The appropriation is in general terms. It is not made to carry out existing contracts. Now, if the Chair please, I desire to say a word with reference to a ruling——

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will.

Mr. TAWNEY. Under the appropriation the Postmaster-General may make contracts before the expiration of this fiscal year for which we are now appropriating, so that the appropriation is not limited to this particular contract or to these particular contracts.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Of course not. This is a general appropriation.

Mr. TAWNEY. He may make contracts to-morrow for future execution.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That would not make any difference. This, I understand, is a proper limitation; but I want to submit an observation upon a ruling that I made day before yesterday while temporarily occupying the chair.

An amendment was offered in the form of a limitation, but which provided that the Postmaster-General should not expend a certain appropriation unless in effect the salaries of certain officers were increased. That amendment was held in order as a limitation. On reflection it is my judgment that any court in this country would construe that amendment to amount to an increase of the salary of the officers mentioned in it. In construing acts of Congress courts look to the intention of Congress; and if that amendment had been adopted, if it did not increase the salaries of officers it would have rendered the appropriation absolutely nugatory, and no court would put an interpretation upon an act of Congress that would nullify its provisions unless compelled to do so by the plain and imperative language of the law. It is my opinion if that amendment had been adopted by the House the Department and the courts before whom it might have been brought for construction would have decided that it was manifestly the intention of Congress to increase the salaries of the officers named in it; and upon reflection it is my judgment that the decision I made while so occupying the chair was wrong upon that question. I believe, however, that the pending amendment is clearly within the line of the precedents, and it is certainly within the principle underlying Rule XXI, because it limits the expenditure of the appropriation to an object which the law now authorizes the Postmaster-General to expend it for.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, just a word. There is now a contract between the Government and some parties who are manufacturing stamped envelopes and newspaper wrappers. That contract by its terms will not expire until after the end of the fiscal year 1905. While this item of appropriation may not in terms declare that it is an appropriation to carry out an existing contract, yet the very circumstances, of which the House must have official knowledge, that the Department where the contract is made is a part of the Government, and the files of the Department show the facts, we must meet that question in the way that we would if we had made the contract by the terms of the House. Therefore we have a right to hold that the appropriation is for the purpose of carrying out an existing contract.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Indiana that this amendment provides that upon the expiration of said contract——

Mr. OVERSTREET. That may be true; and why is not that subject to the point of order that it is new legislation? The amendment is directed to a part of the bill, and then it says that after all that has been disposed of, then certain things shall transpire. That would be legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to know of the gentleman from Indiana and the gentleman from Kansas whether it is true that contracts are now in existence to which this item and this amendment refer, running longer than the end of the fiscal year?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Why, Mr. Chairman, the contract will not expire for, I think, about two years from now. I have the data here some place. One step further. The officer of the Department who testified with reference to this contract before the Post-Office Committee stated that under the terms of the contract if there were now a stipulation that the return card upon the envelope should not be printed, it would not interfere with nor modify the contract with reference to the price, and the contractor would get the pay for printing the return card, even if not printed, under the terms of the contract. Now, that very question was taken up with Mr. Madden, the Third Assistant Postmaster-General:

Q. Where are those stamped envelopes and newspaper wrappers now manufactured?—A. At Hartford, Conn.
Q. Under a contract?—A. Under a four-year contract.
Q. When does that contract expire?—A. I think in about three years; it is about a year old now.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, conceding that a contract now exists which will not expire for a year or more, I think the question now in point is this, as to whether there is anything, unless we adopt this amendment, to prevent the Department from making a new contract, a similar contract, the consideration for which may be paid out of this appropriation. The very fact that the contract now runs for two years is evidence that the Department is making a long-time contract. It may occur to the Department, therefore, to make another and a new contract now or three months from now, and it is to prevent a renewal of this kind of contract that I have offered this amendment for consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chairman is ready to rule.

Mr. OVERSTREET. The suggestion that the gentleman is making, that this is seeking to make new law, shows that the point of order is well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that he is not only entitled to take into consideration all the facts disclosed in debate that have any bearing upon the amendment offered in the committee so far as such facts would throw light upon the intention of the mover of the amendment, but that it is his duty to consider such facts in forming his opinion. Now, it seems to be conceded that the contracts to which this amendment refers are contracts which will not expire until after the expiration of the fiscal year for which this appropriation is made. It is therefore an attempt to place a limitation upon appropriations other than the appropriations carried in this bill. So, without venturing into deeper water about this amendment, for the reason above stated the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MANN. I shall not take an appeal from the decision of the Chair at all, but I would like, before the Chair passes upon that question, to direct the attention of the Chair to the proposition as to whether Congress is obliged to make any appropriation for any contract. Is it not within the power of Congress to refuse to make any appropriation at all now, and send these people to the Court of Claims? It is also within the power of Congress to refuse to appropriate, even if they should succeed in getting a judgment in the Court of Claims; and if it is within the power of Congress to refuse to make appropriations, then under the rulings of the Chair, not only of the present occupant of the chair but many others, in days past they decided that it was within the power of Congress to say upon what terms it makes the appropriation.

I make this suggestion because I think not only the recent decisions of the Chair but the tendency of the House is to run riot on the question of limitation. I would be very glad for the Chair to have his attention directed to the fact that it is within the power of Congress to make no appropriation; and certainly, if we have the power to make no appropriation, we certainly can put on a limitation.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to take an appeal?

Mr. MANN. Oh, certainly not; the Chair knows I would not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of agents and assistants to distribute stamped envelopes and newspaper wrappers, and expenses of agency, $15,000.

Mr. LIND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out lines 17, 18, and 19. I do so principally for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee some questions. I understand, Mr. Chairman, that these appropriations, the one in lines 17, 18, and 19, and a similar appropriation in lines 22 and 23, and another in lines 13 and 14, are expended by the Post-Office Department in paying salaries of agents who are appointed nominally at a few distant places in the country, in New England and the Pacific coast, but really employed in the Post-Office Department here. Is not that the fact?

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman has an erroneous impression as to the purpose of this appropriation. This item is for the maintenance of the Government agency at Hartford, Conn., where the stamped envelopes and newspaper wrappers are manufactured under contract by a private concern. This agency inspects the quality and workmanship of all supplies manufactured, and supervises the shipping, upon requisition of the Third Assistant Postmaster-General, direct to the consignee, of all embossed envelopes and wrappers.

Mr. LIND. Is it not a fact that so-called "agents" are employed in this city to-day who have never been outside the city and whose salaries are defrayed from this appropriation?

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to positively deny that. Here, in the letter which I have from the Third Assistant Postmaster-General, he accounts for every item that has been expended in the past year out of this appropriation.

Mr. LIND. It is true, however, of the appropriation here in lines 13 and 14, is it not?

Mr. STAFFORD. Not at all. That item provides for running the stamp agency located here in Washington, the postage stamps being printed in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing and the local distributing agency being a separate agency connected with the Department here at Washington.

Mr. LIND. Does not the gentleman recall in the Bristow report case after case was enumerated where agents had been appointed to perform services nominally in New England and elsewhere, but they never performed them there, but did all the service in this place and were employed in the Post-Office here?

Mr. STAFFORD. Not in any wise in connection with this stamp agency here or any of the other respective agencies connected with the distribution of the postal supplies here appropriated for.

Mr. LIND. I so understood, and I understand they are so employed to-day.

Mr. STAFFORD. Perhaps the gentleman has probably in mind the method of running the subagencies at St. Louis, Cincinnati, and Albany, where postal clerks attached to the local offices are employed in shipping and distributing envelopes, wrappers, and postal cards upon requisitions of postmasters. For these subagencies no special appropriation exists, and an endeavor is being made to separate the service.

Mr. LIND. No; I am not referring to that. I am referring to the cases where the appointments in distant places were all nominal and the agent appointed and carried on the roll as an agent for that place, yet he was actually employed here in the Post-Office Department.

Mr. STAFFORD. In no wise, so far as clerks employed in any of these respective agencies, have they been used in other departments.

Mr. LIND. I understood further—well, I will take the chairman's statement. I withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota, without objection, withdraws his amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries of post-office inspectors: For salaries of fifteen inspectors in charge of divisions, at $2,500 each; six inspectors, at $2,400 each; fifteen inspectors, at $2,250 each; fifteen inspectors, at $2,000 each; seventy inspectors, at $1,600 each; sixty inspectors, at $1,400 each, and thirty-five inspectors, at $1,200 each; in all, $353,050.

Mr. CROMER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in line 25, page 21, after the word "and," the word "thirty-five" and insert "twenty-seven."

Mr. CROMER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard. The purpose of this amendment is to reduce the number of inspectors provided in this bill by eight. There were eight inspectors added by the provisions of this bill to the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General.

Mr. OVERSTREET. In this bill? The gentleman, I think, is mistaken. I presume he wishes to be accurate.

Mr. CROMER. Then I will withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana will be withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

For per diem allowance of inspectors in the field while actually traveling on business of the Department, $190,000: Provided, That the Postmaster-General may, in his discretion, allow post-office inspectors per diem while temporarily located at any place on business away from home, or their designated domicile, for a period not exceeding twenty consecutive days at any one place, and may make rules and regulations governing the foregoing provisions relating to per diem: And provided further, That no per diem shall be paid to inspectors receiving annual salaries of $2,000 or more.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 22, in line 4, strike out the words "business of the Department" and insert in lieu thereof "official business away from their home or official domicile and their headquarters."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries of clerks and laborers at division headquarters, miscellaneous expenses at division headquarters, traveling expenses of inspectors without per diem, and of inspectors in charge, expenses incurred by field inspectors not covered by per diem allowance, and traveling expenses of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General and chief post-office inspector, $85,000: Provided, That of the amount herein appropriated not to exceed $2,000 may be expended, in the discretion of the Postmaster-General, for the purpose of securing information concerning violations of the postal laws, and for services and information looking toward the apprehension of criminals.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend as follows:

On page 22, line 20, strike out "$85,000" and insert "$112,000."

On page 22, in line 21, after the word "exceed," strike out the following: "$2,000 may be expended, in the discretion of the Postmaster-General," and insert "$17,000 shall be expended, or so much thereof as may be necessary, by the Postmaster-General."

After the word "criminals," in line 25 on page 22, add the following: "Provided further, That the Postmaster-General shall expend said sum of money, or so much thereof as is necessary, in the payment of clerks, stenographers, accountants, and detectives, and for other necessary expenses for the purpose of securing information concerning the violation of the postal laws and for services and information looking toward the apprehension of criminals guilty of crimes committed in or in connection with the Post-Office Department. The examination of all witnesses, records, and accounts for this purpose shall be conducted before a select committee of eight, five of whom shall be Members of the House, to be appointed by the Speaker, and three of whom shall be Senators appointed by the Senate, and this committee shall have full power to send for persons and papers and enforce the production of the same, to examine witnesses under oath, to sit during the sessions of the House and Senate, and to exercise all functions necessary to complete investigation of all frauds and irregularities alleged to exist in said Department, and the Postmaster-General shall render to said committee all necessary assistance. And said committee shall report the result of its investigation to Congress as soon as practicable, with such recommendations as to it may seem advisable:" so that the section as amended shall read as follows:

"For salaries of clerks and laborers at division headquarters, miscellaneous expenses at division headquarters, traveling expenses of inspectors without per diem, and of inspectors in charge, expenses incurred by field inspectors not covered by per diem allowance, and traveling expenses of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General and chief post-office inspector, $112,000: Provided, That of the amount herein appropriated not to exceed $17,000 shall be expended, or so much thereof as may be necessary, by the Postmaster-General for the purpose of securing information concerning violations of the postal laws, and for services and information looking toward the apprehension of criminals: Provided further, That the Postmaster-General shall expend said sum of money, or so much thereof as is necessary, in the payment of clerks, stenographers, accountants, and detectives, and for other necessary expenses for the purpose of securing information concerning the violation of the postal laws, and for services and information looking toward the apprehension of criminals guilty of crimes committed in or in connection with the Post-Office Department.

"The examination of all witnesses, records, and accounts for this purpose shall be conducted before a select committee of eight, five of whom shall be Members of the House, to be appointed by the Speaker, and three of whom shall be Senators appointed by the President of the Senate, and this committee shall have full power to send for persons and papers and to enforce the production of the same, to examine witnesses under oath, to sit during the sessions of the House and Senate, and to exercise all functions necessary to complete investigation of all frauds and irregularities alleged to exist in said Department, and the Postmaster-General shall render to said committee all necessary assistance. And said committee shall report the result of its investigation to Congress as soon as practicable, with such recommendations as to it may seem advisable."

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, against that I make the point of order that it is not germane and is new legislation.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I will address myself to the first proposition first. The part of the bill to which this amendment is offered is the part of the bill which appropriates a certain amount of money for the purpose of "securing information concerning violations of the postal laws" and for services and information "looking toward the apprehension of criminals." Now, the amendment proposes to increase the amount appropriated for that purpose, to provide additional machinery for that purpose, to gather a select committee of the two Houses of Congress which shall look into the matter of the violation of the postal laws, seeking evidence looking toward the final "apprehension of criminals." So much as to the matter of germaneness.

The purpose of the amendment, Mr. Chairman, is to secure a free and full and public nonpartisan investigation of the Post-Office Department at the hands of the Congress of the United States.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, the proviso to which the amendment is addressed authorizes the expenditure not to exceed $2,000 a year for the purpose of securing information under certain conditions. The history of that proviso briefly is this: That in the discharge of the work of the detection of criminals violating the postal laws oftentimes an inspector can not afford to disclose his identity, which would result from the execution of a receipt; or for the purpose of a decoy letter inclosing marked money to send through the mail if it was never returned, and lost, there would be no way of recompensing or reimbursing the inspector who had suffered the loss. For that purpose, and for that purpose only, this proviso has been carried in the bill.

The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Mississippi has no relation to the purpose with which this proviso has been considered thus far. It seeks only an investigation of the Department of the postal service. Now, it may be that the gentleman conceives the idea that under the rulings of various Chairmen these words of limitation as to expenditure in the item of appropriation may give them license and so limit this appropriation as to permit an investigation which is not now authorized by any law. But, Mr. Chairman, a limitation must be within the law; it must be directed to some phase of the law which already exists. This is not germane for the reason that it seeks the appointment of a Congressional committee, the expenses of which are to be defrayed by the increased appropriation of this item sought within one clause of the proposed amendment.

This proposed amendment creates certain officers, it creates officers to be appointed, or partly appointed by the Speaker of the House and partly appointed by the President of the Senate, but new officers nevertheless. The appropriation carried by the increase proposed is not for the purpose of any of the items in the law to-day, nor in the provisions of this bill, but is entirely for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the new officers which are thereby created.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I believe that it is needless to press the point further. It is not germane, because it has no relation to the subject-matter contained in these items of the bill. It is clearly new legislation, because it seeks to create new officers not now authorized by law.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Before the gentleman sits down can I not appeal to him to withdraw his point of order?

Mr. OVERSTREET. The gentleman can appeal.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I appeal to him to withdraw his point of order.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I recognize the gentleman's appeal and I overrule it. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The gentleman reminds me of what Glendower said to Hotspur when the former said, "I can call spirits from the vasty deep;" and Hotspur replied, "Why, so can I, or so can any man; but will they come when you do call for them?" The gentleman from Indiana with his stony heart stands between an investigation of the Post-Office Department by Congress with this little point of order—that is, provided the Chair agrees with him upon the point of order, which I hope the Chair, in the interests of the public, will not do.

The CHAIRMAN. The proposed amendment, which, of course, must be taken in its entirety, discloses the fact that it is not in the language of a limitation. It contains mandatory directions to the Postmaster-General. It therefore is new legislation or changes existing law. Further than that the Chair does not consider that the creation of a joint committee of both Houses of Congress, with power to administer oaths, to conduct a judicial or semijudicial examination, is a subject which can be considered germane to a bill "which, in the words of the title, is a bill making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department" for the coming fiscal year. Because this is new legislation, and because it does not appear to the Chair in any proper light as a limitation, but is a direct legislative enactment, and is not germane either to the paragraph or the bill, the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I wish to take an appeal.

The CHAIRMAN. From that decision the gentleman from Mississippi appeals.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard upon the question of the appeal.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I recognize the privilege of any Member of the House sitting in Committee of the Whole to pray an appeal from the decision of the Chair; but while parliamentarily speaking we are in Committee of the Whole, nevertheless the House of Representatives is in session, and whatever action is taken by a Committee of the Whole is properly construed as the action of the House of Representatives.

I can appreciate further, Mr. Chairman, that where there is a clear doubt of a decision of the Chair, it is not only the privilege, but in many instances the duty, of a Member to pray an appeal; but where there can be no doubt of the righteousness of the ruling of the Chair under the rules of the House, which the House has already adopted, then such an appeal, if carried, would, in my judgment, be a reflection upon the character, dignity, and standing of the House of Representatives. I believe, therefore, that when a Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, for the time being a Representative in Congress, acting as the Chairman for all of the members of that committee, has discharged his duty under the rules and has ruled rightly, Members knowing that his ruling is right, an appeal which might be carried would put a blot upon the escutcheon of the House membership which I do not believe Members care to do.

The Chairman of this committee has ruled with universal impartiality, clearness, and courtesy, and upon this item had the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] been in the chair instead of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL], and had he in the discharge of his duty ruled the same way, I would have taken the same position I now take, that it would have been a reflection upon the membership of the House of Representatives to carry an appeal over the decision. It is the act of the Congress, not of the Members seeking to express purely their preference upon some question. It is a parliamentary act upon the part of the Chair under the rules of a great body that the gentleman appeals from, and when he acts in that way, knowing that the ruling was properly made, he casts a reflection upon himself and discredits the National House or Representatives. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with much humility and a great deal of grave self-distrust to the lecture which has just been poured out upon me by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET]. I do not think he would have done it if he had understood my purpose. I do not think there would have been any tears in his voice if he had known what I was up to. He seemed to think that I wanted to put a blot upon the escutcheon of the House of Representatives. Why, bless your heart, Mr. Chairman, I am the last man in the world to do that. I am not the Post-Office Department engaged in that sort of business. [Laughter.] Nor is it my intention to try to put a blot upon the escutcheon of the House of Representatives. It is my intention to try and remove a blot from the escutcheon of the Post-Office Department. Now, I hope that we will not let a little technical matter of parliamentary law stand in between us and a great public purpose—the purpose of having honesty of administration, the purpose of detecting criminals in the Departments of the United States Government, the purpose of making clean our pathway as a nation.

Why, what does a little miserable rule of the House of Representatives amount to when you consider that it is the only obstruction lying in between you and righteousness, far greater than the righteousness of a technical decision, perhaps, technically correct upon parliamentary precedent and so-called parliamentary law? What is parliamentary law? Its text-books are the utterances of glittering generalities that change their forms, depending upon what they are applied to, and its mass of precedents is a bundle of precedents furnishing at least one precedent for almost anything you want to do or to leave undone. The Government is founded for the greatest good of the greatest number, and the very essence and soul of good government is honesty in the public service and economy of public administration. Now, the only way we can get at and institute and secure honesty in the Post-Office Department is either by the gentleman's withdrawing his point of order or by the House of Representatives marching bodily over the point of order. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

It is not a reflection upon the Chair, because the Chair understands that if there is anybody in this House that I take unto my bosom almost as a brother, it is the Chair himself. I believe that the Chair is actuated by the highest motive. The Chair is one of the very few parliamentary lawyers in this body. This body thus far has not excelled any preceding body for expertness as parliamentary sharps, either upon the majority or the minority side, as far as that goes. But I do hope that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] will withdraw his point of order, so as to save the country from the unpleasant spectacle of gentlemen saying to the country that rather than have an investigation into rottenness and corruption they will stand upon a bare little parliamentary technicality that amounts to nothing in any citizen's mind. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Mississippi had occupied the chair and another Member had offered the amendment which he has, to which the same point of order had been addressed under the rules of the House, how would the gentleman have ruled?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, the duty of a man sitting in that chair is one thing; the duty of this House of Representatives, which can change its rules in detail or in general, is another thing. Now, I decline to be put in the position of being a final court of arbitration upon the indefinite subject of parliamentary law. I do say that this House of Representatives can secure an investigation by outside authority, not intercommingled with the corruptions existing in the Post-Office Department, only in one of two ways. One way is by the gentleman withdrawing his point of order, and the other is by the House overruling a decision of the Chair. Why, I heard the honorable Speaker of this House the other day, in making a ruling, say: "The Chair rules"—and you know how suavely he says it, and with what gracefulness of gesticulation—"the Chair rules, subject to the subsequent action of the House," thus and so. And so the gentleman, so-and-so, who had made the point of order went out as far as the Chair could put him out.

But the Chair admitted there was a power behind the Chair, to wit, the House of Representatives; and the House of Representatives will find out, if it does not already know it, that there is a power behind the House of Representatives, and that is the people of the United States. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And the people of the United States know that when a gentleman rises in his place and makes a point of order upon a matter of this sort as a representative of his party, it is because his party does not want the Post-Office Department investigated. The Members of the House well know that there have been forty places in this bill where the gentleman might have made a point of order, but did not. Why did he not? Because he did not want to do so. He wanted the legislation to go through; and acting in his own capacity, and as the representative of his party, too, he declined or omitted or failed to make the point of order. And now when he has the opportunity to do a great public service he makes the point of order.

Oh, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman would but withdraw that point of order he would awake to-morrow morning like Byron did on the day after the English Bards and Scottish Reviewers was published. He would "awake famous," with his name upon every American citizen's lips. [Addressing Mr. OVERSTREET.] Won't you withdraw it? [Applause and laughter.] Won't you do something to be famous? [Renewed laughter.] Won't you do something to keep the great body of American citizenry from believing that the Post-Office Department is in-famous, if I may mispronounce an English word. There is an opportunity here that perhaps in your lifetime, young as you are, may never again present itself to you—an opportunity to perform a public service; an opportunity, not to blot the escutcheon of anyone, but, if the Post-Office Department is all right, to remove from the Post-Office Department, and thereby from your own Administration, blots supposed to be there. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, according to the distinct and pertinent definition of the term, "anarchy" consists in disregard of law; and it does not make a particle of difference, except in degree, whether the disregard of law is a disregard of the statutes of the country or a disregard of the rules of procedure of the House of Representatives. The majority of this House is charged with a great duty in this behalf, as in very many others. The minority of this House is not charged with quite so solemn a duty as is the majority.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Does the gentleman refer to the duty of making a point of order?

Mr. GROSVENOR. It is the duty of every Member of this House to uphold the rules and regulations of this House just as distinct as it is to uphold the laws of the country under which we live, for the very good reason that there is an appeal to a tribunal that is abundantly capable and always ready to rectify any wrong that has been caused either by statute or by rule.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Why, sir, the gentleman has done a great deal of talking. Why should he not let me go on?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio declines to yield.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will yield for a question.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Does the gentleman from Ohio justify the gentleman from Indiana in making his point of order?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Most undoubtedly I do.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I just wanted to see if there were two of you. [Laughter.]

A MEMBER. And there are a good many more.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman from Mississippi is always flippant and always funny. He is "an amusin' cuss" on all occasions. [Laughter.] He is charged with no responsibility except devilment; that is all [laughter]; and the greater the amount of the devilment, the oftener, the better, and the more he is cheered on the other side; and that I like, because he likes it. He feels it his duty to interfere, as leader of the minority, on every possible occasion, to suggest some little innovation in the procedure on this side of the House; and if he can get a modification of a resolution or the suggestion of a single change in any mode of procedure he has triumphed to that extent, and there is another plume in his coronet. Plumes and coronets do not go together, perhaps [laughter], but the gentleman knows what I mean.

Now, Mr. Chairman, more than once—possibly twice—since I have been a Member of this House a ruling of the Chair that was conceded to be in strict compliance with the rules of the House was overruled by a vote of the House, in moments of excitement and, I might say, frenzy. No good ever came of it; nothing but mischief ever came of it. I remember when the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] made a ruling here that was as completely and necessarily a true interpretation of one of the rules of the House as it was possible to make, the House overruled him in a spirit of revolution. It was a mistake, and it would be a mistake to do the same thing again.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I ask for information. Was the gentleman from Ohio one of the gentlemen who overruled him?

Mr. GROSVENOR. "The gentleman" was not. Although I was on the other side of the question, and have been a great many times, I have always and uniformly, since I have been a Member of this House, voted to sustain the Chair when I believed the Chair had ruled according to the law. I voted against the majority of my own associates on this floor to sustain that ruling of Mr. Speaker Carlisle when I believed that he had done his duty as a lawyer and a presiding officer, notwithstanding he had put an impediment in the way of the purposes of my colleagues here. [Applause.]

Mr BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Did the gentleman from Ohio ever ask the House to override the Chairman of the committee, at the same time admitting that the Chairman was right in his ruling?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly not, as I have said; and I never would. I would as soon violate any law standing upon the statute books. I know that we do not always look at it in the strong light in which I look at it; but we are here—a body of men who have created our own rules. We made them ourselves, and we, by the operation of one of those rules, have put this Chairman into the chair. He makes a ruling. If he had made any other, I assume from the colloquy between the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] would have condemned him for it in his heart, although he would not have spoken it.

Mr ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes; I like to be interrupted by him.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The gentleman is on the Rules Committee and has been for the last four years. Does he not remember that the Members of the House have never had a minute's opportunity for discussion or debate of these rules?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not remember anything of the kind.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I will state it as a fact.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman has a right to his statement. That is not a question; that is the ipse dixit of the gentleman from Indiana. The House has the right at any time——

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The House has not had a chance to amend those rules.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The House has a right at any time. The difficulty is this: A minority Member upon a question, whether he is on that side of the House or on this side, feels the pressure of the rules when the rules are against him. That is all there is of it; and if you changed the rules of the House every twenty-four hours, there would still be somebody in opposition to them all the time.

I tell you, gentlemen of the committee, that it is an unwise thing to do either of two things: one is to be misguided by the siren song, with which we have become so familiar, of our friend from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], appealing to this side of the House to violate its own rules; the second is, you bring disorder and confusion whenever you for a moment deviate from upholding the Chair when you believe the Chair has done his duty.

What is this proposition? The proposition is that, conceding that the Chairman has ruled correctly—and we all have the highest confidence in his judgment and knowledge—conceding now that under the rule we have made and that we have all constructively sworn to uphold—because when a Member of Congress swears that he will faithfully discharge his duty it means, among other things, that he will obey the rules of the House of Representatives to which he belongs [applause]—conceding now that the Chairman has ruled correctly and properly and wisely, what is the proposition? It is that because we want to do a certain thing in a certain way we will override the decision of the Chair and thereby violate the rule of the House.

Mr. WARNOCK. And destroy law.

Mr. GROSVENOR. And destroy law and inaugurate anarchy on the floor of the House of Representatives.

Take the lawful course. If you believe that there ought to be an investigation of the Post-Office Department, which I neither affirm nor deny, go at it in the proper way. Offer your resolution and send it to the Committee on Rules, if you see fit to do so.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi rose.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Let me finish. And when the Committee on Rules has failed to do its duty, the rule of the House provides that you may bring that resolution back into the House; and when it comes back to the House adopt it or defeat it; and whichever way it is done, that is the voice of the majority, and in the American Republic it is the voice of God.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now, Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I certainly do.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I believe the gentleman is himself a member of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I believe there are one or two resolutions of this sort now pending before the committee?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not know whether there are or not. But I do know that the House——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. From what has taken place in the Committee on Rules, Mr. Chairman, I never would have known, either. [Laughter.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. The answer to that is——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now, if I shall try to get a resolution of that sort up for consideration at the next meeting of the Committee on Rules, will the gentleman from Ohio vote with me to let the House investigate the Post-Office Department?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not want to be compelled to come into this House and apologize for having associated on a question of that character with the gentleman from Mississippi. [Great laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, I conclude what I have to say in a very few words. When you violate a rule of the House, that is one thing; but when you do it by a solemn condemnation of the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, you have gone certainly far out upon an open sea in a rudderless boat. I appeal to the majority of this House to stand by the majority of the House, and let the gentleman from Mississippi have his opportunity occasionally to exploit his own views on this question. They are greatly gratifying to him, and they do not hurt "the old man" a particle.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I think in view of the frequency with which the gentleman from Mississippi, the leader of the minority, has urged the House to override the decision of the presiding officer upon a point of order, even when such decision has been, as is the one now pending, confessedly correct, that he ought to be reminded of what the great father of Democracy, Thomas Jefferson, said concerning the importance of a legislative body adhering to prescribed rules of procedure. I have here a copy of Mr. Jefferson's Manual of Parliamentary Practice. The headings of the preface are interesting at this time. I beg to bring them to the attention of the gentleman from Mississippi. The first heading is "Importance of rules" and the second "Importance of adhering to rules." I read from the Manual:

IMPORTANCE OF RULES.

SECTION 1. Importance of adhering to rules.

Mr. Onslow, the ablest among the speakers of the House of Commons, used to say "It was a maxim he had often heard when he was a young man from old and experienced members that nothing tended more to throw power into the hands of administration and those who acted with the majority of the House of Commons than a neglect of or departure from the rules of proceeding; that these forms, as instituted by our ancestors, operated as a check and control on the actions of the majority, and that they were in many instances a shelter and protection to the minority against the attempts of power."

Mr. Chairman, rules are adopted by a legislative body in large part for the protection of the minority. The majority can do what it pleases. Its rights are secure. But the only way to protect the minority is at all times to have rules and at all times to obey them.

Mr. Jefferson, in this preface, further says:

So far the maxim is certainly true, and is founded in good sense, that as it is always in the power of the majority, by their numbers, to stop any improper measures proposed on the part of their opponents, the only weapons by which the minority can defend themselves against similar attempts from those in power are the forms and rules of proceeding which have been adopted as they were found necessary from time to time and are become the law of the House; by a strict adherence to which the weaker party can only be protected from those irregularities and abuses which these forms were intended to check, and which the wantonness of power is but too often apt to suggest to large and successful majorities.

I call the attention of the gentleman from Mississippi to the concluding paragraph:

And whether these forms be in all cases the most rational or not is really not of so great importance. It is much more material that there should be a rule to go by than what that rule is; that there may be a uniformity of proceeding in business, not subject to the caprice of the Speaker or captiousness of the Members—

That is the clause to which I wish to call his attention—

not subject to the caprice of the Speaker or the captiousness of Members. It is much more material that there should be a rule to go by than what the rule is; that there may be a uniformity of proceeding in business, not subject to the caprice of the Speaker or the captiousness of the Members. It is very material that order, decency, and regularity be preserved in a dignified public body.

I appeal from the gentleman from Mississippi to Thomas Jefferson as to the great importance to a legislative body of a rigid adherence to rules.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I think I have a right to be heard. I have listened to the gentleman from Wisconsin. I am so glad that he has "got back on the reservation." I do not know what to do. I think I remember the time when he, with the balance of us, overruled the Speaker upon a point of order that was parliamentarily equally as correct as this.

He quotes the father of Democracy, the father of political wisdom, almost, in my opinion——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I have seen that sort of language so many times; will the gentleman please mention a time when I ever voted to overrule the Speaker——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Did not you vote with us to overrule that decision which ruled out of order the motion to abolish the sugar differential on the Cuban reciprocity bill?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. No, sir; I did not. I think not; I do not remember now.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Well, I always thought you were a blanket Indian on that occasion; I may be mistaken.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Moreover, if it was at that time and under that decision, of which I have no recollection now, I am sure it could not have been so perfectly plain as this proposition. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now, then, Mr. Chairman, I have the very highest regard for Thomas Jefferson's opinion about anything that Thomas Jefferson did know and could have known in his day and generation. Thomas Jefferson's opinion, however, upon a locomotive would not interest me very much. Thomas Jefferson had never seen a locomotive, and Thomas Jefferson had never seen the present rules of this House. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

It may have been true that in Thomas Jefferson's day, when the minority had some voice in making the rules of the House, that the thing of greatest detriment to the minority was to break down the rules, but we have found to-day that the thing of greatest detriment to the minority is to observe the rules. They are made not to protect, but by rules to rule the minority. The gentleman says that they are made for the purpose of protecting the minority. Why, our experience is that they are made for the purpose of gagging the minority [applause on the Democratic side], and to-day they are being used for the purpose of gagging the House and for the purpose of "protecting" the majority! That is what the rules are right now being used for.

Mr. PAYNE. Will the gentleman yield to allow me to ask a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I will yield.

Mr. PAYNE. I would like to know if the gentleman did not vote for these same rules in the Fifty-second or Fifty-third Congress when he was here, and did not his entire party vote for the same rules substantially that we have to-day?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Oh, that has been thrashed out so often.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman can not evade the question by saying it has been thrashed out so often. Were not the rules substantially the same rules we have to-day?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The gentleman knows that the spirit of the present rules is not the spirit of the rules of the Fifty-third Congress.

Mr. PAYNE. Is the gentleman doing anything here except to amuse or trying to amuse somebody? If he has any reasoning about this thing or any aspirations to be Speaker in a future Congress——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I gave no time to the gentleman either to make a speech in my time or to indulge in personal abuse, either one of the two. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. PAYNE. But the gentleman knows——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now, then, I say that the rules of to-day are a gag on the minority, and the rules to-day are at this moment being used for the protection of the majority.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. No; I will not yield to anybody. The gentleman from Ohio "appeals to the majority to stand by" what? "To stand by the majority." I appeal to the country to know whether if "standing by the majority" is not about the only thing that the majority of this House has proven itself competent to do during this Congress. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It stood "pat" on everything else, I believe.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is unwholesome even for a wise man to have a little fun now and then. Although I seem to have affected the "dignity" of the gentleman from New York very much, I do not think that I have spent my main time here in "amusing" the House of Representatives, and judging by the expression upon the countenance of the gentleman from New York I am not "amusing" him now. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And judging by the way the Republican Members of this House are acting upon this proposition I am not "amusing" them now. Now, I knew long ago that, in some way or other, the Republican party had relegated to innocuous desuetude the oath which is taken when one comes here to "observe the Constitution," but I did not know until the gentleman from Ohio [Mr GROSVENOR] had expressed himself this morning that in some subtle way the rules of the majority of the House, in the making of which the minority has had no voice, have been substituted for the Constitution as a special Members' oath. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wisconsin knows, the gentleman from Ohio knows, and the gentleman from New York knows, every man in the sound of my voice knows, that all the talk this morning about "introducing a resolution to investigate the Post-Office Department" and "sending it to the Committee on Rules" and "getting a favorable report" from the Committee on Rules to bring it into the House and getting the recognition of the Speaker and getting a square vote in this House upon the substantial proposition is—I hardly know what—a more than disappearing dream of utter ignorance in connection with the manner in which proceedings are pratically carried on in the House of Representatives under our present rules.

There has been for a month before the Committee on Rules a proposition introduced for this very investigation, which was referred by the introducer to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. That reference was then changed to the Committee on Rules, and there it now lies. Now, do you imagine—does the country imagine—that we are going to get that resolution out of the Committee on Rules? Does the committee imagine that the gentleman from Ohio would vote to get that resolution out of the Committee on Rules? I have some slight hope of getting it out. I have some hope that the Speaker of this House may join the two minority members of the Committee on Rules [laughter on the Democratic side] and let it out, but that hope has been dwindling somewhat as the hours and days and weeks have passed. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

I still, however, decline to believe that before the session closes at any rate the Speaker will not join in with the Democrats and see to it that the House gets an opportunity, notwithstanding the "obstructive tactics" of the gentleman from Indiana with his little point of order, to investigate the Post-Office Department. With the expression of that hope, Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. PAYNE was recognized.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Who has the right to conclude debate on an appeal from the decision of the Chair?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that debate rests entirely with the committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Has not the mover of a resolution the right to close debate?

Mr. PAYNE. But this is on an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. A motion to close debate would be in order at any time.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, what the gentleman from Mississippi does not know about the rules of the House would fill a large volume. He has never been able to adjust himself to the rules of the House. He is the first gentleman of long experience in the House I have known to openly advocate the violation of the rules of the House by overruling the decision of the Chair on appeal. Various gentlemen I might mention, gentlemen on the other side and, perhaps, some on this side, have made ingenious arguments trying to show that the decision of the Chair was not within the rules of the House, although it seemed to me and many others that it was plainly so, and have made excuses for an appeal in that direction. But the gentleman from Mississippi comes here making a joke of the whole matter, because from the time when I first came in he made nothing else of it except a joke, trying to get the House to overrule the plain rules of procedure of the House.

Now, he says the minority have had no voice in the formation of the rules, and yet the rules are the result of the experience of a hundred years, since the time of Thomas Jefferson and his written parliamentary law contained in Jefferson's Manual, and followed up from time to time by various Congresses, Democratic and Republican, until finally in the Fifty-first Congress we got them up to that degree of perfection that the two Democratic Congresses succeeding adopted the rules as the rules of this House, and they are substantially the rules as they stand to-day.

I never heard a Republican get up on the floor and advocate the overruling of a decision of the Chair because his decision was not in accordance with the rules, and yet admitting that his decision was in accordance with the rule and advising his side of the House to take the matter into their own hands. I never heard a gentleman of standing now in the present minority in this House, except the gentleman from Mississippi, stand and practically admit that the ruling of the Chair was in accordance with the rules of the House and ask them to overturn a decision of the Chair because he wanted to accomplish some purpose by doing so. The rules on both sides have always been regarded as sacred in this respect. I have heard Speaker Carlisle and Speaker Crisp argue for the integrity of the rules to be respected by the minority as well as the majority.

Why, Mr. Chairman, we come here to-day, and the whole proposition of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] is to override the rules, to disregard the rules, for each Member to disregard his duty, when it is as much the individual duty of the Members of this House to enforce the rules as it is for the gentleman sitting in that chair—to violate his conscience, to violate his duty, to violate the rules of the House, simply because the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] is seeking to make a party play before the country upon this question.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has just held up as a fault in me that which I perhaps regard as a virtue. He has said that I did not "understand" certain things. He does not seem to understand the compliment that he has just paid me. He has charged, as if it were a fault in me, that I was not hypocrite enough to argue that which I did not believe, and I take it as a compliment to my intellectual integrity that he should have made that charge, although he seems unable to comprehend that he has paid a compliment. If I had thought that the ruling of the Chair was technically wrong, I would have made that argument, but there is not any party success or anything else on the face of this earth that could make me do what the gentleman says others have done, to wit, under the pretext of arguing that a thing was unsound technically which they thought to be sound, to disguise the purpose which they had in view.

My purpose is, frankly, to get the House of Representatives for this particular purpose and at this particular time to suspend this particular rule in order that we may investigate a great Department of this great Government charged to be and supposed to be absolutely rotten. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I have not been hypocrite enough to disguise my purpose and hide behind a diaphanous parliamentary argument of one sort or another. I am not sworn to obey your rules and nobody else is sworn to obey your rules. We are sworn, on the contrary, to do our duty to the country, and when our duty to the country under your rules can be done only by temporarily upsetting one of them, then I, for my part, take all the responsibility and accept the scolding that the gentleman from New York throws upon me as a compliment not intended, perhaps not "understood," by him.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I move that debate cease.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi moves that all debate on the appeal do now cease.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The Chair will order this vote to be taken by tellers.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, had we not as well have tellers at the same time?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi demands tellers. The gentleman from Indiana, Mr. OVERSTREET, and the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. WILLIAMS, will take their places as tellers.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 133, noes 99.

So the decision of the Chair stood as the judgment of the committee.

For miscellaneous items, $1,000.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word as a pro forma amendment. I merely want to say that in some remarks I submitted yesterday to the House I misquoted the position taken by Mr. Moody in one respect, and I want to correct the RECORD. His statement was that the pay earned by railroads in carrying mails was less than in freight or express and a little more than in the passenger service. I quote here Mr. Moody's language:

If I had to guess, and guess upon my life, I would say that the express business was more profitable to the railroad than the mail business, and, again, I would say that the passenger business was less profitable, and that the most profitable business of all was that in which the charges are nominally the lowest—that is, the transportation of freight.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Free-delivery service: For pay of letter carriers in offices already established, and for substitute letter carriers, and for temporary carriers at summer resorts, holiday, election, and emergency service, $20,250,000.

Mr. LIVERNASH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out of lines 8 and 9, page 23, the words "twenty million two hundred and fifty thousand dollars" and substituting the following:

"Twenty-three million two hundred and fifty thousand dollars: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for said purpose unless in the use thereof the carriers hereinafter mentioned shall be paid salaries as follows during the year beginning July 1, 1904, viz: In all cities which contain a population of 75,000 or more, carriers who have served more than three years, $1,200 per annum; in all cities containing a population of less than 75,000, carriers who have served more than two years, $1,000 per annum."

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order for a moment until I can ask the gentleman from California [Mr. LIVERNASH] a question. If I heard the Clerk correctly, this amendment is clearly for the purpose of providing for an increase in the salary of the letter carriers.

Mr. LIVERNASH. It would have the effect of increasing the income of carriers of certain classes—men of long service.

Mr. OVERSTREET. It increases their salaries differently from what is now provided by law? It increases the salaries more than they are now receiving?

Mr. LIVERNASH. By its terms carriers of three years or more service in cities of 75,000 or more inhabitants would have their income for the next fiscal year enlarged $200, and carriers of two years or more service in cities of less than 75,000 inhabitants would have their income for the same year enlarged $150, as matter of Congressional limitation on the use of the appropriation carried by the pending bill.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order. The gentleman admits that it is clearly for the purpose of increasing the salaries. Those salaries are now fixed by law. It is new legislation and contrary to existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from California on the point of order.

Mr. LIVERNASH. Mr. Chairman, the amendment is word for word the amendment offered by me at an earlier stage of the reading of the bill, and the Chairman of this committee, passing on a point of order identical with the one now raised, has held the amendment proof against the point of order.

Under the circumstances I shall not engage in argument. It seems sufficient to direct the attention of the Chair to the ruling just mentioned.

With the indulgence of the Chair, however, I should like to ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] this question: If the pending amendment were to be withdrawn, as doing only for one year what it would be better to do in permanency, would the gentleman from Indiana in charge of the bill be willing to have inserted a new paragraph directly and frankly providing for such change of the present law as would establish for carriers of the classes affected by my amendment the annual salaries I am seeking to obtain for them—establish, I mean, as matter of positive law?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I will pass that bridge when we reach it.

Mr. LIVERNASH. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that we are now at the bridge.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Then I will wait until the Chair rules.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, just a word on the point of order. I occupied the chair when the ruling was made to which the gentleman from California [Mr. LIVERNASH] refers. That ruling followed what I conceived to be a precedent made by the present occupant of the chair in relation to a rental of a station in the city of New York, and the ruling was based upon a belief at that time that the amendment did not increase the salaries of the letter carriers in any respect. The law fixes the salaries of carriers, and the amendment was in the form of a limitation. And it occurred to me that in the form in which it was presented it did not increase the salaries of carriers or change existing law, and therefore it was held in order as a limitation.

But upon reflection and subsequent investigation of the provisions of that amendment, I have no doubt that the Post-Office Department or any court would hold that it was clearly the intention of Congress to provide an increase of the pay of letter carriers in accordance with the provisions of the proposed amendment. I think any court would hold that to be the clear purpose and intention of Congress in adopting the amendment. And if that be true, of course it was new legislation, of course it changed existing law, and the amendment was clearly subject to a point of order. I therefore believe that the decision I made on the day before yesterday while occupying the chair, in ruling upon this particular proposition, was erroneous.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, it is rather astonishing to hear the admission just made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER], although it is well for him to be frank. I was somewhat astonished at what we might call the "Indiana idea" that was announced from the chair the other day and taken up by the two colleagues of the then Chairman, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER], that we could not change by indirection a law, and that if we made an appropriation upon certain conditions which were in conflict with existing statutes the money could not be expended. It is a well-known and well-established practice of this House to appropriate money under such conditions as will in effect change existing law. It is done in such a way that it will be a limitation upon the appropriation made.

In the provision of the bill which was adopted upon the motion of the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads an appropriation of $90,000 was made to rent a substation in New York City at the terminal of the New York Central Railroad. That money was appropriated upon the condition that a lease should be made for a period not exceeding fifty years. The law now is that the Postmaster-General can not make a lease for a longer period than ten years. I was somewhat surprised that the chairman of the Post-Office Committee should follow his colleague [Mr. CRUMPACKER]; because if he really believed that the money could not be appropriated, he could not have been sincere in his efforts to provide increased postal facilities in the city of New York.

Mr. Chairman, this committee has the right to appropriate money to conduct this service during the coming year or it can refuse to do it. It can appropriate the money to conduct this service, and it can place such limitations and such conditions upon the expenditure of the money as it deems proper; and if that in effect accomplishes a change or repeal of existing law, it is proper under the rules of the House, and it is one of the ways in which a change can be made in the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. Against the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. LIVERNASH] the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] makes the point of order that it is contrary to existing law or that it changes the existing statute law. Now, in passing upon a very difficult question of this sort, on which there may very well be a division of opinion, it becomes the duty of the Chair, so far as possible, to place himself in the position of a judge who would be called upon to express an opinion upon a statute containing a provision such as the amendment offered by the gentleman from California. The Chair will call attention to the rule of the House governing amendments of this character, as found in clause 2 of Rule XXI:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto for any expenditure not previously authorized by law unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress, nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order in any general appropriation bill or in any amendment thereto.

The language of the latter part of this rule is very clear and explicit—that on a general appropriation bill no amendment shall be in order that changes existing law. There have been numerous attempts to escape from this rule by placing limitations upon appropriations, and there is a long line of decisions to the effect that certain limitations upon appropriations are in order. But the question must always remain whether the amendment changes existing law or, if placed in the bill, simply renders nugatory the appropriation, or, in the third place, makes a limitation permitted under the present law.

Now, there might be grave doubt in the minds of able parliamentarians and learned judges as to what the effect of this provision would be; but the Chair takes it that in getting at the intention of the legislature the judge would have no better evidence and no surer ground upon which to form his decision than the opinion of the mover of the amendment; and the Chair, in endeavoring to act in a judicial and impartial manner, is not only entitled but bound to take into consideration the opinion of the mover of an amendment or the general consensus of opinion of the committee with reference thereto.

The gentleman from California [Mr. LIVERNASH] has expressed it as his opinion that it is the intention of this amendment to change the salaries now fixed by statute law. Of course, if this is the intention, and the court would hold that that intention governed in the interpretation of the statute, then this amendment necessarily would change the existing statute and be very clearly obnoxious to the last clause of this rule. Under the facts as disclosed in the debate as to the intention of this amendment to change the existing law, the present occupant of the chair is compelled to sustain the point of order.

Mr. LIVERNASH. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out of lines 8 and 9, page 23, the words "twenty million two hundred and fifty thousand dollars" and substituting the following:

"Twenty-three million two hundred and fifty thousand dollars: Provided, That in the use of this appropriation the carriers hereinafter mentioned shall be paid, in lieu of salaries now fixed by law, salaries as follows during the year beginning July 1, 1904, viz: In all cities which contain a population of 75,000 or more, carriers who have served more than three years, $1,200 per annum; in all cities containing a population of less than 75,000, carriers who have served more than two years, $1,000 per annum: And provided further, That said salaries shall be paid such carriers after said year."

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, against that amendment I make the point of order for the same reason. I presume the gentleman will admit that substantially it is the same amendment.

Mr. LIVERNASH. Will the gentleman from Indiana reserve his point of order instead of making it? I should be glad to have a few moments in which to answer his question.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order. I did not reserve it. We must make progress.

Mr. LIVERNASH. Then, Mr. Chairman, I will speak to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. OVERSTREET. That, of course, is within the discretion of the Chair; and I ask the gentleman to confine his remarks to the point of order.

Mr. LIVERNASH. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to act in bad faith with the Chair in this matter. I offered the amendment in the hope that no point of order would be made against a frank proposal to do directly what by an earlier amendment I sought to do indirectly; and when I arose a moment ago asking the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] to reserve his objection it was for the purpose of directing his attention to the fact that the pending amendment might be regarded as the bridge he had expressed a disposition to cross when he should come to it.

I shall now suspend, for of course I am conscious that the point of order, if insisted on, is good, and I do not intend to transgress the usages governing orderly procedure.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. For the reasons given in reference to the other amendment, the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph under consideration and substitute the following, which I ask the Clerk to report.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the paragraph under consideration, and offers a substitute, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Free-delivery service: For pay of letter carriers in offices already established, and for substitute letter carriers, and for temporary carriers at summer resorts, holiday, election, and emergency service, $23,250,000. Provided, however, That the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized in his discretion on and after June 30, 1904, to pay letter carriers in cities of more than 75,000 population for the first year of service, $600; for the second year of service, $800; for the third year of service, $1,000; for the fourth year of service and thereafter $1,200; and after June 30, 1904, to pay letter carriers in cities of a population of under 75,000 for the first year of service, $600; for the second year of service, $800; for the third year of service and thereafter, $1,000.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, against that I make the point of order for the same reason. It is identically the same provision.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana makes the point of order.

Mr. SULZER. On that, Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from New York on the point of order.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, in my opinion I do not think the point of order made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] is well taken with regard to this provision. The substitute just offered by myself is not in derogation of existing law and does not in any way change the law or place any limitation upon existing law. It simply gives the Postmaster-General a discretionary power to increase the pay of letter carriers. It is not mandatory in any sense, and hence it does not violate the rule.

It provides that this money is appropriated for the pay of letter carriers, and leaves it in the discretion of the Postmaster-General whether he wants to increase their pay or not. I do not think it comes within the rule of the House, and, in my judgment, I do not think the point of order made by the gentleman from Indiana is well taken, and I trust, in the interest of fair play and simple justice, the point of order will be overruled. Let us be fair; let us be honest; let us be just; and, finally, let us pay the efficient, hard-working letter carriers decent wages, so that they can live like honest, hard-working, respectable American citizens. That is all I want to say now, so far as this point of order is concerned.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. The Chair understands that the salaries of letter carriers are now provided by law. The amendments offered by the gentleman from California were in the form of limitations; the present amendment alters the existing law by vesting in the Postmaster-General the discretion to pay increased salaries. No question as to a limitation arises. It is a positive enactment, changing the existing law prescribing the salaries and vesting in the Postmaster-General the discretion to increase them. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I move now to strike out the last word, in order to get recognition to say what I want to say for the letter carriers of our country. I am now, always have been, and always will be their friend. For many years the letter carriers have been endeavoring to get fair, just, honest, decent pay from the Government of the United States. The people of this country, who are really the Government, are in favor, in my opinion, of paying the letter carriers a just day's pay for an honest day's work. That is all that is asked for. These letter carriers are the hardest worked, the most honest, the most efficient, the most competent, and the most obliging, courteous, and industrious employees of the Government; and they are the poorest paid. Do not forget that. It is a shame the way these men are compelled to work for a mere pittance, not enough to keep body and soul together. It is a disgrace to this great and wealthy Republic. They can not afford to bring their children up as children should be reared, and properly fed, and decently clothed, and sent to school, so that they will make honest men and good women and become fearless and patriotic citizens.

Mr. Chairman, I have received thousands and thousands of petitions from people all over this country which read as follows:

Mr. WILLIAM SULZER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

I believe that the letter carriers are entitled to the increase of pay that they so earnestly desire. Their faithfulness, integrity, and energy in transacting the business of the people should certainly be recognized and rewarded, considering the fact that they are ill paid now. They suffer much from exposure, are docked when they miss a day's work, and there are no pensions for them.

OTTO BORY,
100 St. Marks Place, New York City.

Now, sir, I want to state that in every Congress since I have been here a bill has been introduced for the relief of the letter carriers. In five different Congresses—namely, the Fifty-fourth, the Fifty-fifth, the Fifty-sixth, the Fifty-seventh, and the Fifty-eighth—I had the honor of introducing such a bill myself, and I worked as hard as I could—before the committee, with Members of the House, in season and out of season—continually to get a favorable report, but all in vain. I never could get the Republicans on the committee to report the bill and do justice to the deserving letter carriers of the country. Time and time again on the floor of this House I have pleaded for just pay and decent treatment for these faithful employees.

Let me say to the Members of this House that on the 10th day of last November I reintroduced the letter carriers' bill, which reads as follows:

A bill (H. R. 835) to increase the pay of letter carriers.

Be it enacted, etc., That after June 30, 1904, the pay of letter carriers in cities of more than 75,000 population for the first year of service shall be $800; for the second year of service shall be $800; for the third year of service shall be $1,000; for the fourth year of service and thereafter shall be $1,200. And after June 30, 1904, the pay of letter carriers in cities of a population of under 75,000 for the first year of service shall be $800; for the second year of service, $800; for the third year of service and thereafter, $1,000.

SEC. 2. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

If there ever was a bill introduced in this House that ought to appeal to every Member as a matter of right and justice, it is this letter carriers' bill. The bill was referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. It is there now. It is sleeping in that committee, and it will never wake up, never come out. That is all there is to it—a most commendable bill. Why should it not be reported? Why should it be smothered in the committee? Why should it not be presented to the House and the Members given an opportunity to vote for it or against it? We want a record on this bill. We want to fix responsibility, and the Republicans in this House are responsible and can not evade that responsibility.

The letter carriers' bill, now peacefully and silently slumbering in committee, has the support of over 1,450 petitions, covering nearly 2,000,000 names. One petition from New York City has on it 327,000 names. Resolutions from over 2,100 organizations, representing labor unions, boards of trade, business men's leagues, independent organizations, and fraternal associations, indorsed it. These came from all parts of the country. State legislatures, city councils, and in fact every organization of any kind, political, religious, and economic, have asked that this bill be passed, but still it sleeps. Not only that, but over 400 newspapers, daily and weekly, have supported the bill editorially. The demand that Congress take action on this bill has become general, but nothing is done. Why not? Ask the Republican members of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. Chairman, let me say again, I am a friend of the letter carriers. The Government in all its service has no more honest, no more tireless, no more faithful employees. These men are the most efficient, the hardest worked in all the country's service, and the poorest paid. The letter carriers of the land are compelled to toil day in and day out, in sunshine and in storm, in winter and in summer, in all kinds of weather, sometimes eighteen hours out of the twenty-four; and taking all other employees in the various Departments of the Federal Government as a basis for comparison, it can not be denied that the letter carriers render the most and the hardest work for the smallest remuneration.

Now, sir, why is it when every Democrat, I believe, on this side of the House is anxious for a favorable report on this bill, is anxious to have it passed, is anxious to vote for it to make it a law, why is it, I ask, that the Republicans in this House smother the bill every session in the committee? Why is the Republican party against the letter carriers' bill? Is it because a few Republican leaders of this House are opposed to giving the letter carriers decent wages? Or is it because the Republicans are so busy legislating for monopoly that they have no time to legislate for man? And to think of it! The chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET], has the brazen audacity to rise in his place in this House and assert that this great Government can not afford to pay the letter carriers and postal employees decent wages! And in the face of the fact that we have in the Treasury a surplus of over $224,000,000, the largest surplus in all our history, and every dollar taken from the pockets of the taxpayers.

There is a general sentiment, an urgent demand, from all over this country in favor of this bill to increase the pay of the letter carriers so that they shall be able to live decently. I have made a great many speeches in this House in favor of the letter carriers. After the action of the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices to-day I am of the opinion, and I want the letter carriers of the country to understand it, that they will never get their wages increased so long as the Republican party is in power in this House and can stop it. [Applause.]

Now, sir, I want to read an editorial from the New York American, one of the greatest newspapers in this country, owned, published, and edited by my distinguished colleague, WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST, which expresses my views and ideas upon this question better than any words of mine. The editorial was published on Wednesday, March 23, 1904, and is as follows:

THE LETTER CARRIER THE POOREST PAID MAN IN THE UNITED STATES—LET HIM HAVE DECENT WAGES FOR WORK THAT IS HARD AND EXPOSES HIM TO CONSTANT DANGER OF SICKNESS.

In keeping with their attitude toward those who earn their bread in the sweat of their face, the Republicans in the lower House of Congress yesterday, by the brutal force of a majority, rejected a plea for additional pay to the letter carriers of the United States.

Representative LIVERNASH moved for an increase in the general appropriation bill in order that the letter carriers could be more decently paid.

The motion was rejected, and rejected by the Republican majority.

The demand for increased pay to the letter carriers is just. It is not a favor to these public servants. Increased pay is their right. They are the poorest paid men of all the thousands working for the United States.

Their scale of wages was fixed in 1878. They are paid at beginning $600 a year. Then, after several years, they are paid $800 a year, and if they live long enough, escaping the dangers of pneumonia and other disease incident to the exposure they undergo, they get $1,000 a year.

But the letter carrier must work every day. He is docked for a day's absence. If he is sick he must lose his wages. When he gets old he draws no pension.

There is no reward for long or faithful service on the part of the letter carrier. If he would better his condition he must seek employment in another line of work.

A scale of wages made in 1878 may have been fair then, but such a scale is manifestly small now. The cost of food, of clothing, and all things incident to human life has increased since 1878, but the letter carrier is asked to work now for wages fixed under conditions that obtained over twenty years ago.

The United States Government should be liberal in payment of wages. The Government should give an example of fair dealing to the private employer.

In the case of the letter carrier the Government affords an example of stinginess that would do credit to a miser.

But the Government is not a living thing. It is what the majority in Congress makes it. That majority in Congress is Republican. The Republicans are asked to make it so that honest toilers can get decent wages, and they refuse.

This is more than a party question. It is a matter of humanity. Thousands of men in responsible positions in cities all over the United States, undergoing hardships that will wreck the constitution of any human being, are asking for enough money to live decently, to educate their children and give them something to live on when they are old. They can not in person make the demands. Their case is in Congress, and yet the majority in Congress rejects an effort made in their behalf.

Write to your Member of Congress and ask him to vote for the bill to give letter carriers better pay. They are honest men. They work hard. They are held to the observance of the strictest rules, and they are more poorly paid than any other class of workingmen in the United States, considering the character of their duties.

Demand that the Republican majority, for once in its career, cease its opposition to decent treatment for men who labor for a living.

Let it be made so that the United States will always be a generous employer of labor and a fair paymaster.

[Applause.]

That editorial tells the truth. Written by a sincere friend of the wage-earners, it tells the truth in trumpet tones. It expresses my sentiments, and you must answer it. This matter can not be longer ignored. It can not be whistled down the wind. It is here to stay until justice is done. You must meet it, and sooner or later you will be forced to go on record and vote for it or against it, because the friends of the letter carriers' bill will never cease their efforts until it is written on the statute books of our country. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

[Mr. GOLDFOGLE addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

The Clerk read as follows:

For marine postal service, Detroit, Mich., $4,500: Provided, That the Postmaster-General may, in his discretion, enter into contract for such marine postal service for a period not exceeding five years at an annual rate not to exceed $4,500.

Mr. McMORRAN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to offer an amendment to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 23, line 21, strike out the words "may, in his discretion" and insert the word "shall."

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I would like the gentleman to advise the committee whether he believes that such a contract can really be obtained under the terms which this amendment would fix.

Mr. McMORRAN. Mr. Chairman, the circumstances of that service at present are as follows: There is a contract with a man in Detroit at the sum of $20 per day, which at the present time only exists from day to day, the claim being made that the contractor is liable to have his boat drop out from under him, and the further claim is also made that he needs an appropriation of $12,000 for the appropriation now made of $4,500; and in consideration of $12,000 a year he proposes to build a new boat, which I believe is entirely unnecessary, and it is my judgment, if the Postmaster-General will readvertise, that half a dozen competitors will bid for this service at $20 per day. I believe to-day the matter should be closed up and should not be left and leave the service in jeopardy, and I therefore ask the committee to accept the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Rural free-delivery service: For compensation to six division superintendents of rural free-delivery service at $2,400 each, $14,400.

Mr. CROMER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 8, page 24, after the word "to," strike out the word "six" and insert the word "seven."

Mr. MANN. I reserve the point of order on that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. CROMER. Mr. Chairman, we have had eight subdivisions in this country and eight special agents in charge of rural free delivery. The provision of this bill proposes to reduce these subdivisions or these special agents in charge to six and place the rural free delivery in certain parts of the country in the hands of post-office inspectors. These post-office inspectors are good fellows and good men for their business, but they are not the proper men in whose hands ought to be placed the rural free delivery. I can not understand what the purpose of the committee is in reducing these subdivisions from eight to six when they——

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from Nebraska?

Mr. CROMER. In a minute. When they propose in this bill to increase the special agents for the establishment of this service, and the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General has already placed a large portion of the country in the hands of post-office inspectors. On June 20, 1903, by order of General Bristow, the Pacific division of rural free-delivery service was discontinued, and all cases of investigation in the rural free-delivery service for the States of California, Nevada, and the Territory of Arizona were referred to the post-office inspector in charge at San Francisco, who is in charge to-day of this part of the country with reference to rural free delivery.

On the same date all rural free-delivery cases and investigations for the States of Idaho, Montana, Oregon, and Washington were referred to the inspector in charge at Spokane, Wash.

On the same date all rural free-delivery work in the States of Colorado, Utah, and Wyoming, and the Territory of New Mexico were referred to the post-office inspector in charge at Denver, Colo.

On the 2d day of January, 1904, rural free-delivery work in Pennsylvania and New Jersey was assigned to the post-office inspector in charge at Philadelphia.

I believe that these post-office inspectors are good men for their business, but they ought not to be put in charge of the rural free-delivery service. Our Democratic friends have charged us, without foundation, with a government by injunction; but, if the policy of the Post-Office Department is pursued and the policy of the Post-Office Committee is pursued, they certainly with a great deal more reason can charge us with a government by inspectors.

Now, we have Fosnes, a good man, but a post-office inspector, as general superintendent of free delivery. We have Mr. Thorpe, a good man, but a post-office inspector, superintendent of city free delivery. We have Mr. Spillman, a good man, formerly private secretary to General Bristow, superintendent of rural free delivery. We have Mr. Chance, a good man, at one time chief clerk to General Bristow, superintendent of the division of post-office supplies. We have Mr. Waters, a former post-office inspector, superintendent of salaries and allowances. My opinion, gentlemen, is that we should not reduce these subdivisions and put this country in the charge of post-office inspectors to extend the administration of the rural free-delivery service.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, there are now seven divisions authorized by law. It is the purpose of the Department to consolidate so as to reduce the number to six. This is recommended by the Department for the good of the administration of the service. It only clouds the situation, Mr. Chairman, for my colleague or any Member on the floor to throw into this body the scarecrow of post-office inspectors. There is absolutely no syllable of law, either on the statute books or in this bill, which in the slightest manner even squints at such an authority.

The rural free-delivery service is being very rapidly extended. Very ample provision has been made in recent months in the deficiency appropriation bill to continue that line of work. We have authorized an expenditure for inaugurating the service and the payment of salaries of carriers beyond what the present indications would point to as to the extent of the service during the next fiscal year. There is not the slightest restriction by any of the provisions of this bill to limit the further extension of that service as rapidly as it is possible to do.

There are many reasons for the popularity of that service, and it does not help the situation for my colleague to leave the impression that there are Members who seek to restrict the proper extension of the service. Why, Mr. Chairman, it is a pure matter of administration as to the divisions. My friend says these are good fellows. Of course they are, but are we to enlarge the number of division headquarters simply to make provision for the appointment of all good fellows? I wish we might do it, but it is not in the line of good business conduct.

Mr. CROMER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to his colleague?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes.

Mr. CROMER. Isn't it a fact that New Jersey and Pennsylvania have been placed in the hands of the post-office inspector with reference to rural free delivery?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Not in the hands of a post-office inspector at all. I don't understand there is any inspector in charge of it.

Mr. CROMER. And doesn't the gentleman know about the Western States being placed in the hands of inspectors also?

Mr. OVERSTREET. No, sir; I do not.

Mr. CROMER. It is the fact, nevertheless.

Mr. OVERSTREET. It is purely an administrative matter. We make provision by way of an appropriation, and the effort to enlarge the number of divisions simply for the purpose of appointing men to them is not in proper line of the action of the committee. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the item and the amendment thereto be now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana moves that all debate on the paragraph and pending amendment be closed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CROMER].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

Insert in line 10, page 24, after the word "dollars," the following: "for compensation to one rural agent for rural carriers examining board, $2,000."

Mr. OVERSTREET. Against that, Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, it is hardly necessary for the gentleman from Indiana to rise and reserve the point of order, for I was about to concede to the Chair that the point of order could be well taken against the amendment. But the merits of this proposition are such that I feel that no just man will urge a point of order when the facts are presented to this House.

I shall only briefly state that this is a proposition to give a salary to one member of an examining board of the Civil Service Department connected with the Post-Office Department which is equal to and commensurate with the salaries of the other two gentlemen on that board. It so happens that the two Republicans on that board get a salary that is higher than the lone Democrat on that board. That is hardly a fair thing. The Department thinks it is hardly fair, and it has been recommended here that those salaries be made proportionate. I concede that it is new legislation, and if the objection is insisted upon that the Chair will properly rule the amendment not in order, but I ask that the letter to Senator DANIEL, as well as the letter of the Postmaster-General to the Civil Service Commission, which have been sent with the amendment to the desk, be read for the information of the House, and then I hope the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] will not insist on his point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the letter in the time of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The Clerk read as follows:

FEBRUARY 3, 1904.

Hon. JOHN W. DANIEL,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

SIR: In response to your letter of February 1, requesting information concerning the present and proposed status of the positions of supervising examiner and secretary of the rural carrier examining board, the Commission has the honor to submit the following:

Since the classification of the rural-carrier service the work has been under the supervision of a board which consists of three members—a chairman, who is designated as such in the legislative appropriation bill; a supervising examiner, whose duties have been performed by a special agent detailed from the rural free-delivery service, and a secretary, whose duties have been performed by a $1,600 clerk detailed from the Department. Under the regulations effective on February 1, 1904, the three members of the board are specifically designated as chairman, supervising examiner, and secretary, respectively. At the time these regulations were agreed upon it was assumed that the same arrangements for the assignment of persons to perform the duties of the board would continue.

The Department decided in December, however, that the special agent assigned to duty as supervising examiner could not properly continue to draw the per diem (while in Washington) which he had formerly been permitted to draw in addition to his salary of $1,400 per annum. The duties of the position of supervising examiner require his presence in Washington a considerable portion of the time, but he must hold himself in readiness to go into the field on short notice. His trips are often long and correspondingly expensive, and the single item of Pullman fare is frequently more than his per diem allowance. As a result of the uncertainty regarding the time and duration of his trips, his living expenses while in Washington are necessarily higher than the ordinary. The net result is a serious inroad upon his compensation of $1,400 per annum which is entirely disproportionate to the duties he is obliged to perform.

The commission suggested to the Post-Office Department that recommendation be made to Congress for appropriations for the position of supervising examiner and secretary at $2,000 and $1,600 per annum, respectively. This would involve no increase in the appropriation for the Department as compared with the last year. The special agent who acted as supervising examiner was paid, in addition to his salary of $1,400, $4 per diem, which made his gross income something like $2,800 per annum. The appropriation for secretary at $1,600 would merely involve a change in the designation of a $1,600 clerk.

The Postmaster-General advised the Commission, in a recent letter, that he had instructed the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General to bring the matter to the attention of the proper committee, with the recommendation that these salaries be appropriated for and be made immediately available. The Commission is very anxious that no change be made in the personnel of the board, and unless this appropriation can be made immediately available it is feared that the special agent now assigned to the duties of supervising examiner will be obliged to ask to be relieved from the assignment, and the work of the board be thereby seriously compromised.

Very respectfully,

HENRY F. GREENE,
Acting President.

JANUARY 22, 1904.

The CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION, Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: Replying to your communication of the 20th instant, I beg to advise you that I have instructed the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General, at his hearing before the proper committee, to urge that the salaries for the supervising examiner and the secretary of the rural carrier examining board be made immediately available.

He has already made the argument for the salary which you desire.

Respectfully, yours,

H. C. PAYNE, Postmaster-General.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order, and I would like to make some inquiries of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON]. What is this man doing now?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. My information is that he is now serving as an examiner on the civil-service board in the post-office.

Mr. OVERSTREET. What is his designation?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. He is now on the examining board. The letter read shows his disignation.

Mr. OVERSTREET. What is the designation of the office that he holds?

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I will state that it is supervising examiner, I believe.

Mr. OVERSTREET. No; he is not a supervising examiner.

Mr. FLOOD. He is acting as supervising examiner on that board.

Mr. OVERSTREET. What is he paid?

Mr. FLOOD. One thousand four hundred dollars a year.

Mr. OVERSTREET. As what kind of an officer?

Mr. FLOOD. As an agent.

Mr. OVERSTREET. A rural agent?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Now, Mr. Chairman, I simply want to suggest to my colleague on the committee that this bill does not contain a single provision for the promotion of any man in the service more than $100 over what he now receives; that there is not any provision which promotes a man in any part of the service who to-day is receiving above $1,700 a year. This item is clearly new law which creates a new office to promote from $1,400 to $2,000 a gentleman who happens to be a Democrat.

Mr. FLOOD rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I decline to yield. I am sorry the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] is not now in his seat, in order that I might direct his attention to an item which the gentleman who offers the amendment concedes is clearly subject to a point of order, and which promotes from $1,400 to $2,000 a Democratic employee. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order, and I wish to see if there is a man on the other side of the Chamber who, when the matter comes home to himself, is quite as patriotic as he is when it pertains to this side of the Chamber. [Applause and laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. BURLESON. It is so rare a thing that we just want to see how it will feel.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I will say that inasmuch as he is the only Democratic employee that I know of I will therefore not raise the point of order.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee desire to make the point of order?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I desire to address myself to the remarks just made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I want to thank my friend from Indiana for withdrawing the point of order.

The gentleman has very properly confessed to this committee that there has been produced here a magnificent bill—that there has been but little increase of salary. I want to commend the gentlemen for the course that he has taken, and say to him that his Democratic colleagues on the committee stood by him and agreed all along through the contest on that bill to proper salaries. This is not a question of Democratic or Republican politics. It is a question of compensation for an officer. Here is a man who is not getting as much money for the service which he is rendering as other gentlemen are getting for the same service on the same board.

Whether that man be a Democrat or a Republican, he is entitled to compensation for the service rendered equal to the compensation received by any other man doing similar duty.

So, Mr. Chairman, I think I can very properly say to my friend that this is not a proposition for an increase of salary, but an equalization of salary under the law. If the gentleman will examine the letter read he will see that really there is no increase in this proposition. Upon the ruling of the Department this gentleman will not receive the per diem to which he is entitled as an inspector, but, on the contrary, his salary will be reduced out of proportion with that received by others with whom it is entirely correct he should be put on a fair and equal basis, as they are members of the same board and doing practically the same work.

The question being taken, the amendment of Mr. MOON of Tennessee was agreed to.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, we are about to appropriate over $20,000,000 for the maintenance and further inauguration of the rural delivery service. It is a wise and just expenditure—a reasonable accession to the just demand of the rural population of the country for an equal share of the benefits of the postal service.

It is of much concern to me, as it must be to every fair-minded and just Member of this Congress, to know if this great sum is to be distributed fairly among the States, and in proportion to their rural population and the actual need for the service, or, judging the future by the past, along the lines of greatest political "pull." Is each State to be treated with even proximate fairness and justness in the general division of the fund, or will those States with Republican majorities and Republican Congressmen, as heretofore, get the long end of the rope?

It had never occurred to me that the Post-Office Department was other than a great business institution under Federal control, operating for the good of all the people of the country, regardless of State, sectional or political lines, or affiliation. I was especially impressed with the idea that this rural delivery service, inaugurated for the special benefit of the farmers and in response to a widespread demand for fair treatment among all classes of people, was being distributed without regard to politics or sectionalism. How often are we mistaken in our understanding of the workings of this great piece of machinery known as the Federal Government. The idea was a dream—one of the kind belonging only to youthful innocence and youthful credulity in the fairness and goodness of mankind. What a severe shock it is to a young man to have his cherished notions shattered by the cold, merciless logic of incontrovertible facts!

On December 15, 1903, just after the opening of the present session of Congress, Judge MADDOX, of Georgia, in a speech on the floor of this House raised the issue that favoritism and unfairness had been used in the location of rural routes, and charged discrimination in the disbursement of the money appropriated for this service. In the course of his remarks—and he approached the subject with that honesty and fair-mindedness so characteristic of the man—he said:

> But there is something peculiar about this rural free-delivery business. I want to call the attention of the House, especially this side of the House, to the fact that there were 15,119 rural delivery routes established up to June 30, 1903. When we first began this business, some three or four years ago, we made complaint in this House at that time that this business was not being carried on impartially; that we were being discriminated against. But I was told then that I was mistaken. I offered an amendment to equalize the distribution of these routes so that every part of the country and every district should be placed upon an equality in establishing these routes. The chairman of the Post-Office Committee, at that time Mr. Loud, made a point of order on my amendment, and it was ruled out; but I was assured at that time that there would be no partiality shown against any district; that it would be carried on all alike, and everybody should have his share, equally and justly.
> Now, gentlemen, what have we got? There were 15,119 routes granted up to the 30th day of June of this year, 1903. One-third of those routes, more than one-third, are located in four States of this Union—Iowa leads, with Indiana, Ohio, and Illinois. They seem to have got there with every foot down. Iowa, Illinois, Indiana, and Ohio have 5,039 of these 15,119 routes. Seven States have nearly one-half of them, and this statement does not include the great States of New York and Pennsylvania. They are left out of the calculation; but seven States in the Union practically have one-half of all the routes that are established in the United States—Iowa, Indiana, Ohio, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, and Kansas.

In an open letter to the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General, the energetic Member from Alabama, Representative BOWIE, also charged flagrant discrimination, not only in the location of routes, but in the report of the agents upon the petitions investigated, and in the consideration of petitions filed in the Department. Among other things, he says:

In recently looking over your report, I found the discrimination which I had suspected not only was in existence, but to a far greater extent than I had inferred from the facts at hand. I refer to the figures as shown in your report for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903. I do not know what the figures will show since that date, but I am inclined to believe that since that time the law has been fairly and equitably administered. I think it right, however, that a record should be made of protest against the condition of affairs that most certainly did exist up to the close of the period embraced in your report.

With these statements, coming from such eminent and responsible sources, in mind, I began an investigation of my own accord, and it has resulted in convincing me—and I believe when I have given the facts to the House they will convince every fair-minded man here and throughout the country—that the rankest injustice has been done my section and State in the distribution of rural routes, and that the discrimination charged by the gentlemen referred to does exist in an outrageous degree. The protest I am about to make may result in no good, for it is hard, I know, to penetrate the hide of a departmental official who is supported by the Administration in power and whose political head depends upon the amount of service he shows himself capable of rendering to that party. [Applause.] I conceive it to be my duty, however, to lay some of the facts I have gathered before the House for the information of Members, in order that they may know what treatment is accorded them and how the money they vote for this service is being used to the advantage of certain sections as against their own.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we shall let the facts speak for themselves, and I shall be satisfied with the showing they make and the proof they give of the policy of discrimination that exists in the Post-Office Department, or at least has existed.

There were 21,660 routes in operation on February 15 of this year. How are they distributed, and what section has gotten the lion share of them? I shall insert in the RECORD a table prepared by the Post-Office Department showing the number of petitions filed, the number favorably reported, the number adversely reported, the number of routes established in each State in the Union, and the number of petitions pending at this time and awaiting the action of the Department, together with the population and the density of population of each State.

Gentlemen, these figures show a remarkable situation and prove beyond peradventure the most palpable favoritism in the administration of this service and in the distribution of the funds set aside for it.

The ten solidly Democratic States of Alabama, Arkansas, Louisiana, Florida, Georgia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Mississippi, Texas, and Virginia—States always Democratic—with a total population in round numbers of 16,300,000, have been favored to the extent of 2,899 rural routes, an average of 289 routes in each State. Putting the figures in a different way, they show that these Democratic States have received only one route for every 5,600 of their population. What story do the figures tell as to the solidly Republican States of Iowa and Indiana? With a combined population of only 4,700,000, just about one-fourth the population of the States named above, these two States—in the last decade rock-ribbed and eternal in their Republicanism—have been favored by the Department with 3,227 rural routes, 328 more than have been given to the entire South.

Assuming that under the present rules each carrier gets $600 per annum, and multiplying this by 3,227, the number of routes in operation in Iowa and Indiana, we find that these two States are drawing from the total rural-delivery appropriation the sum of $1,936,200, nearly one-sixth of the entire fund, as against $1,739,400 for the ten southern Democratic States.

By another calculation we find that if we assume that each route serves at least 100 families, as is required by the rule of the Department—and which is entirely arbitrary in its character and frequently works an injustice against deserving petitioners—322,600 families in Iowa and Indiana are receiving the favors of the National Government through this service, while in the ten

Southern States, with a population four times as large, only 289,900 families are thus favored by the parent Government, which assumes to treat all of its people with the same degree of fairness.

These figures show as glaring a piece of injustice to the South as was ever perpetrated upon her since her awakening from the inconceivable nightmare of reconstruction and carpetbagism. [Applause.]

But this is not all. Take the two States of Illinois and Kansas, both as solidly Republican as Georgia and South Carolina are solidly Democratic, and what do we find? With a population of 6,200,000, or less than half the population of the ten Democratic States, they have so persuaded the Department as to get from it 2,275 routes, or only 24 routes less than are located in all the Southern States. What reason is there for this inequality? What excuse can be offered for this discrimination? What defense can be made for this injustice to a great section of our country, whose people are willing contributors to the national expense and who have demonstrated their loyalty to the flag in offering their lives for its defense and its honor? Can it be possible that there is a deliberate intention somewhere to make a distinction between sections in the distribution of public benefits? What reason is there that certain States should be treated with such liberal generosity by the Government, while other States equally as deserving and with conditions equally favorable are given such scant consideration as to call forth the protest of the fair-minded everywhere?

What are the peculiar persuasive powers of certain States which induce the Department to look with such favor upon them that do not belong to other States? What is the peculiar influence that results in the location of more rural-delivery routes in two States than are located in ten, and that in the face of equal conditions? Is it politics? Is it sectionalism? It is something. The facts show it, and you can not get away from the facts.

By another process we deduce another interesting set of facts. A moment ago I made the statement that in Iowa and Indiana there was a rural-delivery route for every 1,400 of population. Taking that as a unit or basis of calculation, we find that there should be in the Southern States 11,642 routes. But for some reason, because of some lack of something that the other States seem to have, we have fallen far short of that number, and, as before stated, have only 2,899. In other words, we have gotten just one-fourth of what we are entitled to under a fair and indiscriminate distribution. Again I ask, why this discrimination?

But the proposition may be advanced, and in a former debate on this question it was intimated, that the South had not been diligent in demanding the service; that her people were indifferent to it and were slow to take hold of it, and that southern Congressmen have been negligent of the interest of their districts, and have lacked energy in the following up of petitions filed. I shall not answer this with a denial, but shall content myself to let the figures gathered from the official records explode this misconception.

From the two States of Iowa and Indiana 4,336 petitions for rural service have been filed. From the Southern States named 6,317 petitions have been filed—2,000 more than from these two Republican States. Has the South been indifferent to this service? Do the figures show it? And yet, with 2,000 more petitions filed by the Southern States than by Iowa and Indiana, still these two States have 328 more routes in operation.

Again, let us pursue another line of inquiry and learn how the Department has treated the petitions filed, and again we are brought to the conclusion that we have not been treated equitably. Of the petitions filed from the South only 45 per cent have received favorable consideration at the hands of the Department, or 55 per cent of the petitions filed and examined have been regarded by the Department as lacking merit. On the other hand, of the petitions filed from the States of Iowa and Indiana, 75 per cent have been favorably acted upon and only 25 per cent have been regarded as without merit. Did this just happen so, or was there a deliberate purpose on the part of some one, somewhere, to cater to the influence of Republican Members and Senators from these States?

Perhaps the Department has been operating under duress, or perhaps it has been unable to resist the persuasive demands of these States for "pap," and then for more "pap." And yet I can not bring myself to believe that this great business Department of the Government, which is more closely related to the people than any other branch of the Government, could permit itself to lend its influence in partisan contests. And yet, I confess again, that the finger of facts points sharply in that direction; and I have been constrained to ask if the "Iowa idea" and the havoc it seemed to play in the Republican camp played any part in the location of over 1,700 routes in that State? How inspiringly eloquent must the Iowa stump orator grow in descanting upon the glorious record of the Republican party and the blessings it has brought the country, and when, before an audience of farmers, enumerating as one of the chief blessings this rural-delivery service and the benefits that these 1,700 routes have brought to the 170,000 farmers in that great State.

What a persuasive argument that would be! That crowd would go home with the idea that the only thing great in this world was the Republican party, and the only thing great in the Republican party was that stump orator. And yet, gentlemen, this rural-delivery service was not born out of the womb of any political party. It is here as the result of the earnest and honest demands of the farmer everywhere that the Government treat him with absolute fairness in the distribution of its benefits. It is the answer of the Government to a righteous demand, and it will be a sad day for the service when it is debased to partisan and party purposes. It could receive no harder blow than a policy of injustice in connection with its administration.

Nonpolitical in its character and equally nonsectional, it should be administered with absolute fairness to all the States according to their rural population. The service must be kept out of politics. Several attempts have been made at different times to guard against this very danger, but each time the amendments covering the case and offered to the post-office appropriation bill have been ruled out of order. Hence from year to year the Post-Office Department has been intrusted with the disbursement of the enormous sum appropriated for this purpose and has had full authority, without any restrictions of law, to administer the service and to promulgate such rules and regulations as seem best to it. Is there any reason, therefore, that discrimination has crept into the service, and that charges of unfairness are openly made? The service is too important, covers too wide a field, and the appropriation is too great to be placed in the hands of any one man, however unassailable his character or however great his executive ability, without some legislation directing its administration. When Members vote for this appropriation, as all of us will do, they ought to have some assurance that their districts and States will receive their proportion of it. We ought to know that a half dozen States are not to be allowed to gobble up the hoggish share of it.

But, Mr. Chairman, I have digressed from my line of inquiry. Let us get back to the figures and we will show that the Department has not treated us fairly in taking up and investigating petitions filed from the South. Again the policy of discrimination stands out in glaring light.

Of the total number of the petitions filed with the Department from the two States of Iowa and Indiana only 404 remain unacted upon, or 91 per cent of all petitions from these States have received some kind of consideration, while 25 per cent of all petitions filed from the South are still pending—not having received the notice of the Department—and only 75 per cent have been acted upon. Again the question, Why this discrimination? is pertinent and interesting.

The country has heard much of the rottenness that is supposed to have existed in the Post-Office Department. We have heard of investigations there and we have heard of some whisperings of it here. But, gentlemen, it seems to me that this discrimination in the administration of the rural-delivery service furnishes a fertile field for the exercise of the genius of the departmental sleuths for investigating things. It seems to me that it would be a much better and certainly a more profitable investment of their talents to ferret out the mysteries of this matter than to strain their overworked brain in launching an attack upon the line of the enemy, as we have it in the miserable assault they have made upon the character and integrity of the membership of this body. [Applause.]

But, gentlemen, I wish to call the attention of the House to a few cases typical of the gross injustice done certain sections in the location of these routes and in the consideration given the petitions filed, and to assert it as a conclusion reached from the facts that the whole service is honeycombed with the rankest partiality and discrimination. It is my purpose to be absolutely fair in making my statements and in drawing my conclusions from the official records.

The States of Kansas and South Carolina are in many respects very similar. They have an almost equal population, and the population in each is almost entirely rural. Neither has a large city, and the necessity for rural service is about equal in each. Their most important point of dissimilarity is in their political affiliation. We would, therefore, expect to see the two States with practically the same amount of rural service, assuming, of course, that the service is distributed fairly and without regard either to the location of the State or the political column in which it is usually found.

What are the facts? Take the State of Kansas, undoubtedly Republican, and with a population of 1,400,000, in round numbers, and compare it with my own State, everlasting in its Democracy, and with a population of 1,300,000, and the official record shows Kansas with 1,032 routes in operation as against 286 routes in South Carolina. Kansas has a route for about every 1,300 of her population, while South Carolina, although uncomplainingly bearing her share of the national burden, has only one route for every 4,500 of her population, or a proportion of nearly three and a third in favor of Kansas in the way of public favors. No doubt it will be interesting to southern Members to know how many rural routes their respective States are entitled to, if the same unit of population for rural service was applied to them as has been applied to Kansas.

The calculation is simple. South Carolina should have about 1,000 rural routes; she has only 286. Georgia should have 1,700; she has only 675. Florida should have 400 routes; she has only 18. Arkansas should have about 1,000 routes; she has the pitiful total of 62. Alabama should have about 1,400 routes; she has 245. Mississippi should have 1,200 routes, and yet she has only 133. North Carolina should have 1,400; she has done well to get 480. The empire of Texas should have 2,300; she must be content with 562; and Virginia, the mother of Presidents, should have about 1,400 routes; she has only 427. Now, these are the only States in the Union always Democratic. Applying the same process to Iowa, a Republican State, we find that she is entitled to a fraction less than 1,700 routes, and it is a remarkable fact that she has 1,719. With what exact justice is this State treated! They have figured it out to the finest nicety, and Iowa has more than are hers by right, even measured by the Kansas standard. Indiana should have 1,900 routes, and she has over 1,500, and so it goes. A few States have practically monopolized this entire appropriation.

If the Department had given Kansas the same treatment given to South Carolina, that State would have only 311 routes, instead of 1,032; Iowa would have less than 500, instead of 1,719; Indiana would have 560, instead of 1,508, and Illinois would have 1,066, instead of 1,843.

Of course, I know, as every Member must know, that it is practically impossible to give each State its exact share of routes, but I know, as every Member must know also, that there is no reason on earth why the Department could not adopt some plan by which an approximately fair and equal distribution of routes could be made.

Another peculiar state of facts is developed in a study of the official records relative to rural service in Kansas and South Carolina. Of the 1,510 petitions filed from Kansas in the Department, 88 per cent have received some kind of consideration, while of the 737 petitions from South Carolina only 80 per cent have been acted upon. But a still more peculiar fact is that of the petitions presented from Kansas, 72 per cent have had the favorable consideration of the Department, while of the petitions from South Carolina we congratulate ourselves that we have been able to squeeze from the Department favorable reports for only 39 per cent.

To put it in another way, the Department found only 16 per cent of the Kansas petitions lacking in its arbitrary requirements or conditions precedent to the establishment of rural service, while in South Carolina for some reason they have found 41 per cent of the petitions lacking in something which furnished an excuse for unfavorable action.

Oh, I know some one is ready to say, "Your State is sparsely settled; the conditions are unfavorable for the service, and hence this seeming discrimination against you." I meet this assertion with the facts. The last census reports show that Kansas has a density of population of only 18, while South Carolina has a density of population of over 44, or, in other words, South Carolina is more than twice as thickly settled as Kansas; but for some strange reason she is five times less thickly dotted with rural routes.

It is evident from these figures that the conditions are much more favorable for rural service in South Carolina than in Kansas. In fact every single Southern State, with the exception of Florida and Texas, has a greater density of population than Kansas, and most of them a larger population, and yet not one of them has even half as many rural routes. I can not imagine that any difference in the condition of roads in the two States could give an excuse for this evident discrimination, for, while I do not have the statistics at hand, I presume the roads in each State are the average country road, and hence there is little difference as to that—certainly not enough to furnish an excuse for the Department to give Kansas five times more of this service than an active, energetic delegation in Congress has been able to get for South Carolina.

True, the percentage of illiteracy is perhaps greater in South Carolina than in Kansas, due entirely to our large negro population, but this surely can not furnish an excuse for the injustice done us. Surely this Republican Administration, holding itself out, as it does, as the divinely appointed champion of the negro race and the rights of that race, political, social, and otherwise, has not reached that point of disregard for him where it refuses to deliver his mail unless he can read or write. And yet that is a fact, for I am informed that no negro family is counted on a route unless there is at least one member of the family who can read and write. So that it is plain that this discrimination can not be justified on this ground. Mr. Chairman, there is but one reason for this inexcusable liberality to Kansas, namely, she is a Republican State and it is deemed necessay to keep her Republican, and hence we find this great and beneficent service is being used to bolster up the fortunes of a political party, contrary to every principle of equity and to the purposes of the service.

Let us make another comparison from the records, and we will take Connecticut and South Carolina, and see how they have been respectively treated by the Department. Connecticut, with a population far less than that of South Carolina, has only eighty-eight routes less, and that, too, in the face of the fact that she is a State of towns and cities, with practically no rural population, whereas the population of South Carolina is almost exclusively agricultural. Connecticut is a great, widespread city, with a post-office is every little town, and with practically no need for rural service; and still she has it, out of all proportion either to the necessity for the service or to her population.

Only 237 petitions have been filed from that State, and of that number 201 have been acted upon favorably, or a percentage of 85 favorable reports as against a percentage of only 39 favorable reports in South Carolina—a difference in favor of Connecticut of 46 per cent. The total number of adverse reports in Connecticut was just 9 per cent, as against 41 per cent of adverse reports for South Carolina; or, in other words, there were five times more adverse reports for South Carolina than for Connecticut. Of the petitions from Connecticut only 14 remain to be acted upon, or 94 per cent of all petitions filed from that State have received consideration from the Department, while only 80 per cent of the petitions from South Carolina have been acted upon.

The moral to be drawn from this patent partiality is, she is Republican, while South Carolina is Democratic.

Again, compare Maine, a typical Republican State, with only 694,000 population and only four Members of Congress, with South Carolina, with 1,300,000 population and seven Members of the House, and again the notorious difference in treatment forces itself upon our attention and demands our protest. With only half the population of South Carolina, the State of Maine has in operation 289 rural routes, against 286 in South Carolina; that is, Maine has a rural route for every 2,390 of her population, while South Carolina must be content with 1 route for every 4,500 population, a difference in favor of Maine of 2 to 1. Not only that, but of the petitions filed 73 per cent have been reported favorably, as against 39 per cent of favorable reports from South Carolina, or a difference of 34 per cent in favor of Maine.

Only 14 per cent of the petitions filed from Maine were given adverse action by the Department, and in South Carolina 41 per cent of the petitions filed were unfavorably acted upon; or, to put it differently, there were three times as many unfavorable reports from South Carolina as from Maine. There remain only 50 petitions from Maine unacted upon, while there are still pending from South Carolina 143 petitions which deserve the attention of the Department. Every deduction from the records is but cumulative evidence of the partisan administration of this service, for it can not be said in justification of the acts of the Department, with respect to these two States, that conditions are better in Maine than in South Carolina, or that there is more demand for the service, or that Maine is more thickly populated. The facts are all the other way. Maine's density of population is only 23, as against 44.4 density in South Carolina.

Our population is twice as great, our people almost entirely rural, our density of population nearly twice as great, our demands for the service practically twice as many, as shown by the petitions filed, with every condition more favorable for the inauguration of the service; yet the Department has seen fit to give Maine more routes than South Carolina. Measured by the same standard as is applied to my people, she has nearly double the routes she is entitled to have.

I am making no personal complaint. There is no quarrel between the Department and me. I have always received courteous treatment at the hands of the Department officials; my district has fared well compared with other districts in the State, all conditions considered, and my State has been accorded her full share of the service, measured by the standard applied to all Southern States. I complain because my section has not been accorded the same treatment given to other sections and that political and sectional considerations have influenced the Department in the distribution of this service.

I have made the charge after a thorough investigation of all the records available. I have offered the proof, necessarily in condensed form, and to a fair and candid man there is no escape from the conclusion that the charge has been proven beyond a reasonable doubt.

I charge the responsibility to no individual of the Department. I charge the whole Department, and I do insist that the system is being violently and notoriously distorted from its original purposes and is being used as a vast political machine in the interest of the party in power. Against this, representing in part as loyal and brave and deserving a people as God's sun shines upon, I protest, and in their name I demand fair and impartial treatment at the hands of every Department of the Government.

I demand that this service be made the service of the whole people rather than the machine of any political party. [Loud applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

For compensation to twenty-five rural agents at $1,600 each; fifteen rural agents at $1,500 each; fifteen rural agents at $1,400 each; nineteen rural agents at $1,300 each; sixty-five rural agents at $1,200 each, and ten rural agents at $1,000 each, $196,200.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 24, after the word "dollars," in line 18, insert:
"No rural agent shall recommend against the establishment of a route on account of the condition of the roads over which a proposed route extends in any case in which a suitable carrier can be obtained for the usual compensation."

Mr. OVERSTREET. I make a point of order on that amendment.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. I ask the gentleman to withhold that point of order for a moment.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Very well; I reserve it.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I hope that when the gentleman hears my statement he will withdraw this point of order, not because of any persuasion of mine, but by reason of the facts to which I shall call his attention.

The rural free delivery is no longer experimental. We can now safely say that it is an established part of the postal system. The people in every section of this country are as much entitled to it, if they need this service and ask for it, as the people of any other section. When the salary of these carriers was $500 a year and the service experimental the Department may have been justified in requiring communities to have good roads before it would initiate this experiment.

The experiment has proved satisfactory and successful; yet the same regulations formerly existing still prevail, I understand, and routes are refused to people on the ground that the roads are not sufficiently good.

As I understand, the salaries of the carriers will be increased by this bill to $720 a year—a proposition which I shall support. I make this appeal to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET]: If a community can get a suitable carrier to perform the required service at the usual compensation, is not that community entitled to rural free delivery if the proper number of patrons petition for it? In my own county and in other counties of my district routes have been refused to good communities on account of the condition of the roads. Through great sections of the country the people—as good people as there are anywhere and as deserving of good mail facilities—live upon bad roads, in hilly or mountainous parts of the country, with a clay soil or a rocky surface. The people are improving their roads; yet it will take a generation for all the people who are entitled to rural free delivery and entitled to the best mail facilities to have good roads.

But even as the roads are now in every one of these communities, in my judgment, where the people desire rural free delivery, a suitable carrier can be had to perform the duties required. I believe many men in each community will be glad to have these places as carriers at $720 a year, or even at the present salary of $600 a year. If this is true—and the regulations of the Department now deny to these rural communities the benefit of rural free delivery on account of the roads—is it not right, is it not just for Congress to incorporate into this bill a provision that will prevent rural agents hereafter from refusing to establish routes on account of the condition of the roads? I will say to the gentleman from Indiana that, though hoping he will not insist upon the point of order, but will let the House vote upon this proposition, yet I have another amendment that will not be subject to the point of order, but which will only apply to this particular appropriation. But if we are going to remedy it at all, I believe we ought to incorporate this into permanent law.

If we are going to change it at all let us change it permanently, so that the people throughout the country, where they have the requisite number of families of patrons who properly petition for it, may have the benefits of rural free delivery. It will not cost the Government anything extra, and it will be doing a simple act of justice to the rural communities where nature has given them such conditions that their roads are not now considered by the rural agent to be sufficiently good. So I hope the gentleman will not insist upon his point of order.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I feel compelled to insist upon the point of order, although I think the amendment ought to be voted down on its merits. I presume the next step would be to appropriate $100,000,000 out of the public Treasury to build the roads. Now, I call the attention of the Chair to section 3965 of the Revised Statutes, being section 1155 of the Postal Laws and Regulations.

I understand, Mr. Chairman, that whatever authority the Department now has for the extension of rural free delivery comes under the authority relative to the establishment of post-offices and the control of post-roads. No legislation has been had which directs the method of the establishment of such service. The appropriation bills have carried money to pay the expenses of the service, to pay the officers and to pay the carriers, but so far as the law is concerned we are operating in the establishment and conduct of rural delivery, under the authority of law relative to post-roads. The section to which I refer reads as follows:

The Postmaster-General shall provide for carrying the mail on all post-roads established by law as often as he, having due regard to productive and other circumstances, may think proper.

Under that authority the inauguration of rural delivery has been invoked; but the appropriations have been expended to pay the officers. Now, this amendment, if carried, would give authority to a rural carrier which the Postmaster-General now has under the law I have just read. This amendment directs a rural carrier what to do, but does not refer to the law I have read giving the authority to the Postmaster-General. The amendment is clearly in violation of that statute.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I did not contend that the amendment was not subject to the point of order, but I asked the gentleman not to insist on his point of order.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Oh, Mr. Chairman, the question of good roads and who shall pay for them is all involved in this.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. That has nothing to do with this.

Mr. SIMS. I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman refers to good roads. Now, if good roads are to be required prior to the establishment of rural free delivery, that is one of the main levers by which the Federal Government is to be asked to build these roads; but if rural free-delivery routes can be established on the roads we have, that argument in favor of the Federal Government building these roads will be done away with.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Let me call the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS], and also the attention of the gentleman who offers this amendment [Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN], to the practice in the State of Indiana, where the law authorizes counties to bond themselves for the purpose of building roads, and another statute provides that 5 per cent of the taxes raised shall be expended on such roads as are used for rural delivery routes. Let the States supplement the work of the National Government, and not, by limiting the authority of the carrier in his recommendations for these routes, necessarily lead to the Government furnishing the money to build or repair those roads which are not now passable.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. The gentleman from Indiana has evidently misconceived that amendment. There is nothing in it that requires or authorizes the National Government to build good roads.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I admit that.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. And it does not contain any proposition for the building of roads.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I admit that; but I say the natural tendency would be in that direction. You could not avoid it.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. On the contrary, the tendency is just the other way. Now they require good roads before they establish these routes. If you adopt this amendment, whatever inducement that requirement offers will be gone.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Why does not the gentleman's State aid in the construction of good roads by State laws?

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. The gentleman knows I can not control any State. The question is up to you now. Do you want to deprive the people who live on bad roads of mail facilities? Do you want to deny to them the right that your people have?

Mr. MAHON. Make your own roads.

Mr. OVERSTREET. That is a matter for you to argue to your State. I have given the instance of the State of Indiana, which has supplemented the work of the Government. Mr. Chairman, I call for a ruling.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. The amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina is clearly new legislation in that it takes away discretion from the Postmaster-General given under the general law. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, in line 18, page 24, after the word "dollars," "Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be paid to any rural agent who after the 1st day of July, 1904, shall make a recommendation against the establishment of any route on account of the condition of the road over which said route extends or is proposed to extend."

Mr. OVERSTREET. I make the point of order against that. It is undertaking to do by indirection that which can not be done directly.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. I desire to be heard on that. I cite the gentleman from Indiana to the Constitution, Manual and Digest, page 345. I will read the syllabus:

While it is not in order to legislate as to the qualifications of the recipient of an appropriation, the House may specify that no part of the appropriation shall go to recipients lacking certain qualifications.

Now, I submit that under that Congress can refuse absolutely to appropriate a dollar of this money. It can, if it so desires, refuse to appropriate a dollar of it unless it is paid to a man over 40 years of age. It has the power to refuse to appropriate a dollar of it unless it is paid to a baldheaded man. It can refuse to appropriate unless it goes to a soldier, and it may also refuse to appropriate to a man who turns down a route on account of bad roads. It seems to me that the point made by the gentleman is not good against the amendment, for it is a mere limitation upon this particular appropriation and applies only to the money carried in this bill. I do not think it is as satisfactory as the other amendment I offered, but it is not subject to the point of order.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Michigan that there is an amendment pending against which a point of order has been made.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is just as much in violation of existing law as the amendment which was last ruled upon. Under the rulings of the Chair relative to limitations of appropriations, the doctrine hardly runs to the extent to an amendment of this character. Where the law is absolutely rect, refusing a certain authority, it can not be purely a limitation of the method of appropriation coming in direct conflict with the law. Now, the gentleman suggests that you can refuse to appropriate. That is quite true.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. OVERSTREET. But that is by way of striking out the appropriation. That is an appropr ation with a limitation under the law. This is not under the doctrine of limitation.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. The gentleman admits that now there is no law.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I do not admit it by any manner of means. I read it a while ago.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. I understood you to say so.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I say that the only law under which the rural service is now either inaugurated or controlled is the law relative to the establishment of post-roads and the control of post-roads. The law which I read is Revised Statutes, section 3995.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. And this amendment is in accordance with that law, there being no law except that.

Mr. OVERSTREET. The gentleman will appreciate that that is a great big bunch of law, when you come to consider it.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. But there being no direct law on the subject, will the gentleman contend, when Congress is limited to that specific purpose, that Congress has not the power under the bill to appropriate a specific sum of money with the limitation on the sum of money in its disposition?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Why, I contend that very thing, and I think the Chair will hold with me. I hope so.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. I think the Chair should not hold with the gentleman.

Mr. OVERSTREET. We will see about that in a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. The amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina reads as follows:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be paid to any rural agent who, after the 1st day of July, 1898, shall make a recommendation against the establishment of any route on account of the condition of the roads over which said route extends or is proposed to extend.

The Chair has not been referred to any law prescribing the duties of these agents or to any law directing the Postmaster-General to designate the duties of these agents so employed. The Chair can only consider the general law, conferring upon the Postmaster-General the power to distribute the duties of his Department where these duties are not distributed by law, and this amendment——

Mr. OVERSTREET. If the Chair will permit me to say, under the law with reference to the administration of the duties of the Postmaster-General, and supplementary to the authority which I read,

The CHAIRMAN. That is what the Chair has in mind, the general law; but this amendment, although vague in its terms and although it might seem to contain provisions which in the mind of the Chair would be difficult of enforcement, still, as the Chair understands those questions they should be submitted to the discretion of the committee, the Chair can not see that this amendment is anything else but an appropriation for certain agents, omitting others, a discrimination which Congress has of course the right to make, and the Chair, therefore, is constrained to overrule the point of order.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. I do not care to discuss the question——

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment again read at the Clerk's desk?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I should be very glad to be recognized in opposition to the amendment, if the Chair will permit. [Cries of "Vote!" and "Regular order!"]

Mr. Chairman, this amendment is absolutely revolutionary in its character. If it should prevail then every rural agent would be prohibited by this law from making any suggestions as to the condition or character of roads over which it is proposed to inaugurate the rural service. That kind of legislation would cripple the service, because it would result in an inauguration of the service in all parts of the country where the roads would not permit of proper travel.

It would embarrass the Treasury, because it would necessitate a large outlay of money for poor service, and it would result as a dangerous precedent for Congress to fix on an appropriation bill the duties of the rural agent, telling him not to make recommendations relative to all the circumstances which should be taken into account in determining the advisability of inaugurating the service. I presume the next step of the gentleman will be that no rural agent ought to count the colored men upon the l ne of the service; in other words, direct the rural agent to determine the kind of people who will be served when he recommends that service.

Mr. BARTLETT. If the gentleman will permit me to say to him, he is mistaken in reference to any such statement as that. The agents have refused to count the colored men because they do not get any mail. I will state, as a matter of personal experience in my own district, the county of Baldwin, three routes have been turned down for that reason only.

Mr. BURLESON. And three in my own district for the same reason.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I thought I would get a rise.

Mr. LAMB. You will have a rise: I have not asked any questions. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman ought not to make a statement of that sort without he is sustained in his information or in his facts.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I am afraid my genial friend from Georgia did not understand the statement that I made.

Mr. BARTLETT. I am afraid I did not.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I made no statement that that is the practice now; not at all. The gentleman who offered this amendment said that Congress had the right under the limitation of the expenditure of this appropriation to determine even the color of the hair of the agent and whether he had any hair at all or not——

Mr. LAMB. That was just a simile.

Mr. OVERSTREET (continuing). And we could say what kind of route it should be over, and then I suggested carrying to the logical conclusion the argument of the gentleman that I presumed when Congress had once denied to the carrier the right to recommend in reference to the condition of the roads, they might go a step further and recommend as to the condition of the people. Now, that is what I said.

Mr. BARTLETT. I rose to ask a question about the amendment. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I will be very glad to do so.

Mr. BARTLETT. I have hurriedly read it. Now, is it the gentleman's construction of this amendment that the salary of the agent who makes this report shall be docked for that particular service or for the year?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I understood from the reading of it that he should have no pay at all.

Mr. BARTLETT. For the year?

Mr. OVERSTREET. For the whole year. Now, here is what the effect of that is——

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not want the effect, I want the gentleman's construction.

Mr. OVERSTREET. But I want to convert the gentleman from Georgia, who is always very fair—I do not know as to other gentlemen.

Mr. BARTLETT. I am very much obliged to the gentleman, although I think I am a sample of the gentlemen on this side.

Mr. OVERSTREET. What he said was that no part of this appropriation shall be expended after the 1st day of July next, which is the term for which it is appropriated, where the rural carrier recommends against the establishment on account of the bad condition of the roads.

Mr. BARTLETT. My recollection of the amendment is it shall be expended for the salary of the agent; that is the reason I wanted to call attention to it, as I could not hear it read. Let us find out what it is.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Let me read the amendment:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be paid to any rural agent who, after the 1st day of July, 1904, shall make recommendation against the establishment of any route on account of the condition of the roads over which said route is proposed to extend.

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman from Indiana yield for a question?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes.

Mr. OLMSTED. I would like to ask if the regulation or rules of the Post-Office Department do not now require the inspector to report the condition of the road?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes.

Mr. OLMSTED. Then he would have to violate the rules of his superior officers or lose his pay?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. Let me ask the gentleman, if this amendment is adopted and the agent who was appointed to investigate and report upon the proposed route should make a recommendation that the route ought not to be established because the roads were bad or impassable on account of creeks or absence of bridges, no matter what the cause was, no matter what the Government owed him for previous services, would the salary be taken away from him?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Absolutely. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and amendment be closed.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN I hope the gentleman will not do that.

Mr. OVERSTREET. The gentleman from North Carolina said he didn't want to debate it.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. I didn't know then that the gentleman from Indiana was going to debate it.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. When I heard the gentleman from Indiana throw out gratuitous and unwarranted comments upon what he expected "the gentleman" might hereafter propose, I imagined that he was not filled with a proper spirit of debate. But when he makes an argument referring to what I might do and then shuts off debate without permitting me the opportunity of replying, it emphasizes my opinion of his conduct in regard to it. I wish to call the attention of the country to the fact that, as I understand, every man on the Republican side of the House voted against this amendment, and that——

Mr. OVERSTREET. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that he is now speaking out of order. All debate on this paragraph was closed, and yet I did not rise to call the gentleman to order.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN Then I will wait until the next paragraph is read.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Oh, I am not calling the gentleman to order.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN I do not care to receive any courtesies from the gentleman.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 24, strike out lines 11 to 18 and substitute as follows: "All rural agents other than those in charge of a division who have served two years or more shall receive $1,500. All rural agents who have served less than two years shall receive $1,300.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Will not the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. OVERSTREET. No; it is clearly subject to a point of order; it is new legislation. These salaries are now fixed by law, and this is a proposition to increase them.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan very clearly contains a change of existing law, and is, therefore, subject to a point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For compensation to twenty-five rural agents at $1,600 each; fifteen rural agents at $1,500 each; fifteen rural agents at $1,400 each; nineteen rural agents at $1,300 each; sixty-five rural agents at $1,200 each, and ten rural agents at $1,000 each, $196,200.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do not want to take much time on this, but I want to state that, in my judgment, every vote that was cast against the amendment offered by me, that was cast against granting rural free-delivery service to the people living in rural communities that have bad roads, came from the Republican side of the House, and that those who favored it were on this side of the House; that if hereafter communities with bad roads fail to get this good service on account of the condition of the roads, the Democratic side of this House will not be responsible for it.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. OVERSTREET. Will the gentleman wait until the next paragraph is read?

The Clerk read as follows:

For per diem allowance for seventy-four rural agents in the field when actually traveling on business of the Post-Office Department, at a rate to be fixed by the Postmaster-General, not to exceed $4 per day, and for other necessary official expenses, $88,800.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Indiana had known the character of what I was going to say, I do not think he would have objected. I have been around in my district with these agents and know they counted the houses of every colored man on the routes. I want to say, further, that out of eleven rural carriers in my district three of them are colored men. Of course the white men protested against their appointment, and I filed my protest with the Department, but I had to tell them that when they came into competition with the negro and the negro answered the questions intelligently they couldn't prevent their appointment as carriers of the mail. [Applause.] I state this because it is true, and in view of what was said here a few minutes ago I thought the Members on that side ought to have a plain statement of facts. [Applause.]

[Mr. DAVIDSON addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, in concluding my remarks some time ago I omitted to ask unanimous consent to extend them in the RECORD. I ask that now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For per diem allowance for seventy-five rural agents in the field when actually traveling on business of the Post-Office Department, at a rate to be fixed by the Postmaster-General not to exceed $3 per day, and for other necessary official expenses, $87,500

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I have been impressed with the position taken by my colleague [Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN] with respect to the practice of the Government agents in refusing to establish rural-delivery routes over bad roads. I do not see any reason in it. There is no such provision as that made with respect to star routes. There is certain work to be performed and a certain amount of pay provided, and when the work is done the Government pays for it, it matters not if it is over a bad road or over a good road. It seems to me that this requirement that the Post-Office Department has seen fit to make is entirely unnecessary and prevents the extension of this service in a great many places where it should be established. I know that in my district several routes have been turned down because the agent has seen fit to report that the roads were not good enough.

If we establish that principle, why not apply it to the star routes. There is no such requirement made with respect to them. The Government wants the mail carried over a road, say, 25 miles long, and it pays a certain amount of money for it. Now, what is the difference between that and providing rural free-delivery routes over the same distance? I think the fact should be emphasized that people living in mountain districts and in sections where the roads can not be made good have been denied the rural free-delivery service here to-day by the unanimous vote of the Republican side of this Chamber, while the minority voted solidly to give them the benefit of the service. There is no reason in it; there is no justice in it. It is not right.

When you allow the Post-Office Department to require people asking for the service to make the roads good as a prerequisite to its establishment, you are discriminating against the poor in favor of the rich. Some communities are not able to build macadam roads, but they are just as much entitled to rural delivery service as the people of wealthy communities. But this is but another instance of Republican discrimination. At heart that party has a contempt for the poor man. He can not contribute to make up a big campaign fund to buy votes. The automobile trust wants to force people to build fine roads, and the Republican party, as usual, is helping the trust.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee the reason for this discrimination of $1 a day in the per diem expenses of men who are doing precisely the same work and incurring the same expense. It is unjust, as is the salary allowance, which varies to the extent of $600 a year to men who do precisely the same service under the same name, incurring the same expense. The whole thing tends to dissatisfaction and to a feeling that the Government is not fair nor just in its treatment of this class of public servants.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, just a word. The difference in per diem is made entirely for the reason that the smaller amount is paid to those who are newly assigned to duty, and who are employed almost entirely in those rural sections where the expenses of living are not nearly so high as elsewhere. This is not a discrimination except in the fact that men who have been longer in service and have had longer experience are placed in communities where they must necessarily go to cities, where the expenses of living are higher, while the smaller amounts are allotted to men with less experience and who go to sections where the expenses incurred are less.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Is it not a fact that many of the route inspectors receiving the lower rates of pay have been employed for a year or more in this service and are incurring precisely the same expense as those agents who are drawing $1,600 a year? In my district it has occurred, and is occurring to-day, that men who have been long in the service and are recognized by the Department as among its best servants are discriminated against by the employment of men who are not one whit better qualified and have not been any longer in the service. Such a condition is not right.

Mr. OVERSTREET. As I said, this is not a discrimination. We give to men of the lowest grade engaged in this service $1,000 a year instead of $900, as heretofore. That takes care of a very considerable number of agents to whom the gentleman from Michigan refers.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto be closed.

The motion to close debate was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For compensation to clerks at division headquarters: Twelve clerks, at $1,200 each; ten clerks, at $1,100 each; ten clerks, at $1,000 each; eight clerks, at $900 each, and six clerks, at $700 each, $46,800.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that there are a few things that ought to be said on this subject that has now come up for discussion. I did not sympathize with the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN], because I think these rural inspectors ought to have some discretion about this matter. I think they ought to pass on the question of roads. But at present all kinds of confusion exists in regard to that matter. In my own part of the country we have one route inspector in one place who comes from one State, and another in another place who comes from a different State. Their ideas of good roads vary. A road which one of these men calls good another calls bad. Frequently routes which have been once rejected have later been established when reinspected by a different man.

I think that whether we can legislate on this subject in this bill or not it is well to discuss it and let the Department understand the situation. I venture to say, in broad terms, because I think it is the truth, that the brains, the bravery, and the patriotism of all ages and among all peoples have come from the hill country, the mountain country. The best soldiers on earth, the bravest and most patriotic, come from the hill country. The most intelligent people come from the highlands—the most liberty loving, the most independent. [Applause.] Now, sir, if such people want their letters and papers delivered to them, why deny them? Why should we expect them to have roads fit for a rubber-tired buggy in order to get their mail, when they are willing to accept it though carried in "rough-rider" style on horseback? Why should this service be furnished only to people of the lowlands with good roads? It seems to me that the Department should make some regulation by which routes which comply with every other requirement, though they do not meet the fanciful standard of some inspector as to good roads, may not be turned down and denied, but service given wherever it can by carrying the mail on horseback.

Sometimes an inspector comes to my district from that of my friend and colleague, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BROWNLOW], where they do not see the sun before 10 o'clock in the morning nor after 2 o'clock in the afternoon on account of the height of the mountains, but where as good, brave, and intelligent people as are to be found anywhere reside. Of course his ideas of good roads do not disagree with ours, and all routes so inspected are established.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Do those people see Mr. BROWNLOW oftener than they do the sun? [Laughter.]

Mr. SIMS. He is in their minds day and night, and they do not have to see him. [Laughter.] By his constituents, Republican and Democrat alike, he is regarded as the model legislator, superior to any other man in the United States. He never lets anything slip that brings a dollar of other people's money into his district, and in his district are more rural routes than any other district in Tennessee and fewer good roads, and he wants the Government to keep them up. I am serious about this matter. The judgment of different special agents varies greatly according to the section of country from which they come or in which they have been brought up. These men can not agree in determining the requirements of particular sections as to good roads.

Now, I do hope the Postmaster-General will take this matter up and treat it seriously and let us have some uniformity, so that where there are people entitled to it, who get first-class mail, who take the newspapers, they should not be denied this service because they live in a hill country, when the carrier gets no more pay for carrying their mail on horseback than he does when his route lies along a turnpike and the mail can be carried in a rubber-tired buggy. [Applause.]

I repeat, despotism and deterioration go hand in hand and are found in the low countries. This has been the case since the dawn of creation. Who ever heard of a conqueror, hero, or genius coming from the low countries? Liberty, bravery, patriotism, independence, and intellectual superiority are the children of the peaks; strength, health, and vigor are associated with the eternal snows, while disease, contagion, and death are inhabitants of the valleys. Away with this discrimination against the best classes of our people.

Mr. Chairman, I say, let the character of the people to be served be the determining standard, rather than the character of the roads on which the carrier may have to travel.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph be closed.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of letter carriers and clerks in charge of substations of rural free-delivery service, $29,180,000: Provided, That not exceeding $12,500 of the amount hereby appropriated may be used for compensation of clerks in charge of substations. On and after July 1, 1904, letter carriers of the rural free-delivery service shall receive a salary not exceeding $720 per annum, and no other or further allowance or salary shall be made to said carriers; and on and after said date said carriers shall not solicit business or receive orders of any kind for any person, firm, or corporation, and shall not, during their hours of employment, carry any merchandise for hire: Provided, That said carriers may carry merchandise for hire for and upon the request of patrons residing upon their respective routes, whenever the same shall not interfere with the proper discharge of their official duties, and under such regulations as the Postmaster-General may prescribe.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against so much of the paragraph just read as begins with the word "and," in line 4 on page 26, and ends with line 12 on the same page, on the ground that it is new legislation and a change of existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order against the lines mentioned.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reserve a point of order against so much of the paragraph as begins with the word "on," in line 25, page 25, and closes with the word "carriers," in line 4, page 26.

Mr. Chairman, having reserved this point of order, I wish to ask the gentleman from Illinois if he does not believe that all of this subject-matter included in the language to which both points of order have been made had better be given over to the committee to be determined upon its merits? I think, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Illinois will appreciate that the latter part of the paragraph is no more subject to a point of order than that portion to which I have reserved the point of order, and that he will further appreciate the fact that the whole matter is one subject and ought in all fairness to be considered at once by the committee.

I had hoped that no one would raise a point of order against any portion of this paragraph, and for my part I should most willingly withdraw the point I have reserved if we could have the entire subject-matter before the committee at one time. I ask the gentleman if he will not join with me in withdrawing both points of order, and let the committee determine by a majority vote what shall be done with the entire paragraph?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think I am fully as ready on ordinary occasions as is the very distinguished and able chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads to leave a question to the committee; but I have noticed that he, and in my opinion most properly, has raised a point of order on a great many provisions which he was not willing to leave to the judgment of the committee. He has availed himself of the rule, as he himself said a while ago, adopted by the House for the protection of the minority, and I desire to avail myself of the rule, so far as the paragraph is concerned to which I have made the point of order. I do not see how disposing of the point of order on the portion of the paragraph which I object to has any relevancy to the question of leaving to the judgment of the committee the portion of the paragraph to which the gentleman himself has made a point of order. If the committee is competent to pass upon the whole question, the committee is certainly fully as competent to pass upon that part of the question to which the gentleman has made the point of order.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Chairman, I request the gentleman to reserve his point of order until we can be heard upon this question.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Did I hear correctly? Did I hear gentlemen upon that side asking other gentlemen to withdraw points of order? [Laughter.]

Mr. BURLESON. And leave it to the judgment of the committee?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I will leave it to the gentleman from Mississippi and the gentleman from Indiana to fight that out themselves. They are well matched, and each is able to take care of himself.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is the decision upon the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, in reference to the request to reserve the point of order, I will say that if any gentleman should desire opportunity to discuss the question, I should feel very much hesitancy about insisting on the point.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

Mr. MANN. I think the disposition of the House is to dispose of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order upon that part of the bill contained in lines 4 to 12, inclusive, on page 26, which is in these words:

> And on and after said date said carriers shall not solicit business or receive orders of any kind from any person, firm, or corporation, and shall not, during their hours of employment, carry any merchandise for hire: Provided, That said carriers may carry merchandise for hire for and upon the request of patrons residing upon their respective routes, whenever the same shall not interfere with the proper discharge of their official duties, and under such regulations as the Postmaster-General may prescribe.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] makes the point of order that this paragraph in the bill is contrary to existing law.

The general post-office appropriation bill approved April 21, 1902, contains this provision relating to rural carriers:

> But the carriers shall not be prohibited from doing an express-package business, provided it does not interfere with the discharge of their official duties.

The language in the present bill, to which the gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order, is clearly in violation of the provision of the law now existing, permitting the rural carriers to do an express-package business, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Does the gentleman from Indiana renew the point of order as to the first part of the paragraph?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I renew the point of order as to the first, and shall request the Committee on Rules for consideration tomorrow of a rule which will permit debate and consideration of this subject-matter. I insist upon my point of order.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will rule on the point of order made by the gentleman from Indiana. The Chair understands that the point of order made by the gentleman from Indiana is as to the words——

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. HARDWICK. I rise to offer an amendment in order to obviate the difficulty, and which I think would not be subject to a point of order. I think if my friend will withdraw the point of order we can obviate the difficulty. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. OVERSTREET. I would suggest the gentleman will appreciate that while he and I may agree there are other gentlemen who may not agree with us.

Mr. HARDWICK. I wanted to put it in a form that would not be subject to the point of order.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Under the circumstances, we may just as well let this all go at this time, and we will consider it tomorrow.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. The gentleman from Indiana makes the point of order to so much of the bill as is contained on page 25, line 25, from the word "on" down to and including "carriers."

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Post-Office if he would not withdraw the point of order against this provision and submit to the Committee on Rules the proposition that they bring in a rule which would authorize the appointment of a committee to investigate the post-office and the charges of fraud in the Post-Office Department? [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded. The only regular order now before the House is the decision upon the point of order made by the gentleman from Indiana. The point of order made by the gentleman from Indiana is that the language read is contrary to existing law. As the Chair has previously stated, in a former ruling, the general appropriation bill of April 21, 1902, prescribes by statute the salaries of the employees in the rural free-delivery service. The Chair is therefore constrained to hold that this paragraph which changes these salaries is contrary to existing law, and sustains the point of order.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

> Insert after "substations," line 25, page 25, the following:
> "Provided, That rural carriers shall be permitted to do an express-package business, provided the packages and articles carried are not authorized by law to be accepted for mailing: And provided further, That rural carriers may make and perform contracts with publishers of newspapers and periodicals and news agents to act as agents for and distribute newspapers and periodicals which are admitted to the mails at second-class rates of postage and upon which one rate of postage has been paid, if subject to postage, to patrons of their routes, provided there is no interference thereby with the discharge of their official duties. Any rural carrier doing an express-package business other than as authorized in this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be subject to a fine of not more than $300, to be prosecuted in any court of competent jurisdiction."

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that amendment. It is clearly contrary to existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman makes the point of order that the amendment is contrary to existing law, and, further, contains new legislation. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. LIND. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> After the word "substations," in line 25, page 25, insert:
> "And provided further, That no money hereby appropriated shall be expended in the payment of salaries to rural free-delivery carriers at a less sum for such services than $720 per annum."

Mr. OVERSTREET. I make the point of order against that amendment.

Mr. LIND. Under repeated rulings of the Chair the point of order is not well taken. It is well settled that this House can prescribe any general reasonable limitation, or perhaps unreasonable, that it sees fit on an appropriation that it makes. So I provide by this amendment that this money shall not be expended except on condition that the Postmaster-General appoint men of sufficient efficiency to carry on the service to be entitled to $720 a year, the exact amount that the committee recommended.

This amendment is within the rule, in proper form, and will effect the object that everybody desires.

Mr. COWHERD. Will my friend yield for a question?

Mr. LIND. Yes.

Mr. COWHERD. My friend knows as it is now the carrier who has a short route of only 5 or 6 and in some cases 10 miles is graded accordingly. Under this he will have to receive the maximum salary, as the language of your amendment reads.

Mr. LIND. The amendment can be perfected so as to obviate that difficulty. It can be made to read "as a maximum salary."

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the alteration suggested by the gentleman from Minnesota will be made. Does the gentleman from Minnesota yield?

Mr. LIND. Certainly.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I would inquire if this amendment will permit an increase of salary to the carrier if it should prevail?

Mr. LIND. No; I think not.

Mr. OVERSTREET. You make no increase of salary?

Mr. LIND. No, sir.

Mr. OVERSTREET. What is the purpose of the amendment, then?

Mr. LIND. Why, the gentleman understands the English language, I apprehend, much better than I do.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Perhaps the gentleman can construe his own language.

Mr. LIND. What is the purpose of your recommendation that the rural carriers should have $720 a year?

Mr. OVERSTREET. It is to increase the salary.

Mr. LIND. This is for the purpose of securing an efficient service to carry out the object of the appropriation and the decision of this House.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Without any reference to salary?

Mr. LIND. Why, the salary is an incident.

Mr. OVERSTREET. It would be necessarily——

Mr. LIND. A very important one.

Mr. OVERSTREET. A pertinent factor.

Mr. LIND. Now, things are getting too refined in this House——

Mr. OVERSTREET. I thought so from the gentleman's answer.

Mr. LIND. I do not propose to attempt to follow the chairman of this committee, and I might say the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, in all of the refinements that we have had. When the point of order was made against the appropriation that carried $4,500,000, then most any language that limited it seemed to be in order; now when it only involves the salary of mail carriers, perhaps the rule will be drawn more tightly; certainly, if the chairman of the committee has his way.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has not made an answer to my question.

Mr. LIND. I ask that the amendment be again reported by the Clerk, in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "substations," in line 25, on page 25, insert:
"And provided further, That none of the money hereby appropriated shall be expended in the payment of the salaries of rural free-delivery carriers at a less sum for such services than $720 per annum as a maximum salary.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I want to point out to the committee some rulings that have been made upon this identical question or questions of similar import. The law as it stands to-day fixes the salary not only for the time which is passed, but for all time to come until it is changed by some action of Congress. The salary is fixed at $600 per annum. Here, now, comes two provisions. I take it nobody would claim that if the amendment was offered fixing the salary of the rural carrier at $720, that it would be in order upon this bill. Now, you can not do, I submit, by indirection what you can not do by direction. Now, here is the definition of limitation, which I think is absolutely pertinent and absolutely conclusive upon this question.

It was a ruling made in the second session of the Fifty-seventh Congress, found on page 344 of the Digest:

A limitation is negative in its nature, and may not include positive enactments establishing rules for executive officers.

This is an open, straightforward definition. Now to apply it. This is said to be a limitation. Well, it is a limitation upon the expenditure of this money. What is its effect if it is a valid enactment? It is to repeal a law that gives to the carrier $600 and give to the carrier $720, or it does not provide for any payment. Clearly it can not be done by direction; clearly it comes within the purview of these decisions, a number I have here, and that is all I desire to say.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I wish to suggest to the Chair two points: First, when the proposition for increasing the salary of the letter carriers in cities was offered, the gentleman offering it clearly said that it was for the purpose of increasing the salaries beyond what the law now fixes. This amendment, couched in apparent language of limitation of expenditure, provides that none of it shall be expended unless the carrier shall receive a salary of not less than $720. In reply to my inquiry the gentleman from Minnesota, however deftly and skillfully he sought to construe his own language—there was but one meaning to his response, and that was that the carriers' salaries under that limitation would be $720 a year.

Under the appropriation in the item to which this amendment is directed, provision is made for the expenditure of $20,180,000. That sum is to be expended, with the exception of $12,500, which may be used for compensation of clerks in charge of stations, almost exclusively for the pay of salaries of rural carriers. In the language of the bill, we provide that that shall be expended at the rate of $720 a year to such carriers. The Chair has held that the present law clearly provides for $600 and no more, and that this proposition was therefore repugnant to the law and obnoxious to the rule.

This amendment is just as obnoxious to the rule in the language as now drawn as the language of the bill. It is not a limitation of expenditure except that it shall not be less than $120 more than the law now authorizes. The limitation would not be the method of expenditure, but the price and value of the services of each individual carrier, which is contrary to the provision of the existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota wish to be heard?

Mr. LIND. Mr. Chairman, I have nothing further to suggest, and I ask for a ruling.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a single suggestion. If it is not a change of law, but simply a limitation, it amounts to a negation. It renders the appropriation nugatory, and the whole clause would have no effect whatever.

Now, it is a rule of the courts in construing a statute to make something out of the language, to construe that the legislative mind had something in view and attempted to accomplish something, and to get by implication, if possible, some meaning of the statute. They could not get any meaning with this amendment unless they held that it increased the salary to $720 a year, so it would be a change of existing law in that respect.

Mr. LIND. Mr. Chairman, I now desire to say one word. I regard it as settled, in Committee of the Whole at least, so far as this bill is concerned, that if an amendment is a limitation in form it is proper, although it may remotely in some way affect existing law. The Chairman ruled early during the progress of the discussion of this bill that under a limitation upon an appropriation it was competent to authorize the Postmaster-General in the city of New York to acquire a leasehold running fifty years at an expenditure of $4,500,000. To say that was not a change of existing law, so far as it controlled the discretion of the Postmaster-General at least, is to beg the question, it seems to me.

If the limitation is truly a limitation proper in form, well designed to effectuate the purpose stated, although it may incidentally affect existing law, it seems to me that there is no objection to it. This amendment, I submit, Mr. Chairman, does not affect existing law except so far as this appropriation is concerned; and for this appropriation this House is law unto itself. It simply prescribes the manner and conditions upon which the appropriation shall be expended. That condition is a legitimate one, one calculated to promote the public service and the efficiency of that service.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. The general appropriation bill of April 21, 1902, which makes the present statute law regarding rural free-delivery service, prescribes that the salary of the rural carriers shall be $600 per annum. This law prescribes the statutory salary of rural carriers until the law has been changed. With this law in existence the gentleman from Minnesota offers the following amendment, which the Chair will read:

And provided further, That none of the money hereby appropriated shall be expended in the payment of salaries to rural free-delivery carriers at a less sum for such service than $720 per annum as a maximum salary.

It is very clear that under clause 2 of Rule XXI, which has been read to the committee to-day, this amendment is not in order if it would change the existing law when incorporated into this act. Would this amendment change the existing law? If the amendment would not change existing law, and would therefore be in order, it would simply work a nonappropriation for the pay of rural carriers. Would this be considered the intention of Congress if this amendment should appear in the act? As the Chair has before said, the best evidence as to the meaning of an act is the intention of the legislature which passed it, and the Chair is justified in taking into consideration the opinion of the mover of the amendment as to its effect. It is the opinion of the Chair, based upon the statements of the gentleman from Minnesota and his admissions as to his object in offering the amendment, that it is the intent of this amendment to change the existing law. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. LIND. Mr. Chairman, I respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Chairman, on that question may I be allowed a moment or two?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Chairman, I think that if we have rules here which so bind us down that we can not record our judgment and legislate as we want to legislate, it is high time that we directly or indirectly amended or repealed those rules; and while I understood what the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET], said relative to the Committee on Rules bringing in a rule to-morrow morning whereby we might be permitted to do something we wish to do directly on this salary question, I am somewhat in doubt what latitude the rule will confer and whether or not we shall be forced to-morrow under its provisions to vote simply the $720 to the rural free-delivery carrier as salary on condition that he shall not act the part of messenger and expressman, as he is now allowed to do.

I believe the great majority of this House to-day is in favor of giving the rural free-delivery carriers a salary of $720, and of also permitting them to do the work that they are now doing in the way of messengers and petty expressmen. [Applause.] Gentlemen of the committee, it is no discredit to or criticism of our Chairman if this appeal is sustained. We would simply indirectly make a new rule—not discredit the Chairman. I believe his rulings are correct and exactly as I would have ruled were I in his place, although that may not add anything to the ruling; but if we now sustain the appeal the Chairman of this committee will understand, as every other man in this House will understand, that we are not criticising him or his judgment or questioning the correctness of his ruling, but that we are attempting indirectly to change the rules of this House for the emergency which has arisen, whereby we can record our votes and provide a salary for these carriers as they deserve. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the appeal will prevail. We will then have this matter before us, and with no criticism of the Chairman's ruling, as he will fully understand and as we shall understand, but simply that we may be in a condition whereby we can act and vote on this question intelligently at this time.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I sincerely hope that the decision of the Chair will stand as the judgment of the committee. The Chair is certainly right in the ruling. There was no obligation whatever on the part of the Post-Office Committee to bring this item in in this form. It was clearly obnoxious to the rule, inasmuch as it would be in violation of existing law. However, under the situation which confronts us at the close, as we believe, of the present session of Congress, the committee believed that in justice to the situation, in fairness to the service of the rural districts, we were warranted in asking the House to consider this subject-matter while considering an appropriation bill, without bringing in a separate bill for that purpose.

There is but one of two ways which could be followed, either to suggest this on an appropriation bill or to bring in a separate bill. Members may feel somewhat incensed against the Post-Office Committee. We have not permitted that feeling, however, to conflict with the exercise and discharge of our duty as we have seen it. There has been no committee of this House under greater stress of labor than that committee. They have had no opportunity to consider special legislation. At least twenty-five bills worthy of consideration are now in the possession of that committee—bills whose sponsors and advocates are knocking at the door for consideration.

We therefore believe, in fairness to the situation, that we were justified in asking the House to consider this question of rural service in an appropriation bill. It has gone out under a point of order. I feel that the point which I made was justified, because a portion of the paragraph was stricken out under the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. I want it all to be brought back here for the purpose of fair debate by this House, and however I might advocate one position, I am always ready and willing to bow to the rule of the majority.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman whether the rule which he will ask for will contemplate a vote upon that portion of the paragraph stricken out or as an entirety, or will the rule which he will ask for permit discussion or amendment of the proposition in the House or the committee, whichever it may be?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I have no way of determining what the Committee on Rules will do.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon, but I did not ask him what the Committee on Rules would do.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I will answer the question of the gentleman. I think the gentleman has not asked any question as yet that I have not answered.

Mr. MANN. I know the gentleman is always willing to do that, if he understands a question.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I understand the question. I say again I do not presume to judge what action the Committee on Rules may take. The rule which I shall introduce before the House adjourns to-night will be to make it in order to offer at this point in the bill the language which has now been stricken out.

Mr. GROSVENOR. All of the language.

Mr. OVERSTREET. All of that language.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana whether or not he will ask for a provision that will be susceptible of amendment?

Mr. OVERSTREET. That is exactly what I expect to ask for.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I think I can set that part of it right, if the gentleman will permit me. The rule itself when it is brought in here will be open to amendment, so that there can be no limitation upon the action of the committee.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. That is all right.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I regret very much that Members were frightened lest I be able to nail it down so that there could be no amendment.

Mr. MANN. Oh, we are so used to being nailed down that we expected it this time—not by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET], but by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR]. [Laughter.]

Mr. OVERSTREET. I have asked nothing upon this bill but fair debate, and I am willing to abide the result of that debate and act upon the orders of the majority of this House. But I do insist that when a part of the subject has been taken from the bill all of it should go out if any goes out, and all come back if any comes back, if my suggestion should be followed.

Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the appeal be now closed.

The motion to close debate was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

Mr. LIND. In view of the statement made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET], I withdraw the appeal.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the appeal will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. SPALDING. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "substation," in line 25, page 25, insert the following:

"Provided further, That in States where the size of inhabitated farms or ranches has heretofore prevented the establishment of routes for which applications are or may hereafter be pending the Postmaster-General may establish such routes, notwithstanding the number of families served per route is less than required by regulations of the Post-Office Department now in force: Provided, That no such daily routes shall be established which serve less than seventy families."

Mr. OVERSTREET. I reserve a point of order upon that amendment.

[Mr. SPALDING addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. OVERSTREET. I ask for a ruling on the point of order. The gentleman admits that the amendment is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all, beginning with the word "on," in line 25, page 25, down to and including the word "carriers," in line 4, page 26, and substitute in lieu thereof the following——

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will suspend for a moment. The Chair wishes to call the attention of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] to the fact that all that part of the bill down to and including line 12, which this amendment proposes to strike out, has already gone out on a point of order.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Then I offer the amendment as a new section.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. POWERS of Maine having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

H. J. Res. 55. Joint resolution providing for the publication of the reports of the Board of Managers and Inspectors of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903;

H. J. Res. 113. Joint resolution for the printing of 5,000 copies, with accompanying maps and illustrations, of the report of the Governor of New Mexico to the Secretary of the Interior for the year ending June 30, 1903, and the printing of 1,000 copies of the latest map of said Territory;

H. J. Res. 133. Joint resolution providing that the bulletins of the Bureau of American Ethnology be printed in octavo;

H. R. 11449. An act to authorize the counties of Sherburne and Wright, Minn., to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River; and

H. R. 56. An act to authorize the State of South Dakota to select school and indemnity lands in the ceded portion of the Great Sioux Reservation, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 8878. An act to extend the provisions of the act of January 21, 1903, to the Osage Reservation, in Oklahoma Territory, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. 55) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to print an extra edition of the map of the United States for 1903, and making the appropriation for maps made in the acts of April 17, 1900, and of March 3, 1901, available for that purpose.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills and resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 3454. An act for the extension of Eighth street NW., or Wrights road, District of Columbia;

S. 5092. An act to amend an act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, approved June 30, 1902, making appropriation for improving Trinity River, Texas; and

Senate concurrent resolution No. 59.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a survey to be made of the bar at the entrance of Aloqua Bayou on Choctawhatchee Bay, in the State of Florida, with a view to securing a depth of 6 feet of water across said bar.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following resolution:

House concurrent resolution No. 31.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there shall be printed in pamphlet form 10,000 copies of the coinage laws of the United States, 5,000 for the use of the Director of the Mint, 3,500 for the House of Representatives, and 1,500 for the Senate.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert as a new section the following:

"On and after the 1st day of July, 1904, the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized to pay all regularly appointed rural free-delivery carriers, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the following salary: For the first year of service, at the rate of $600 per year; for the second year of service, at the rate of $720 per year; for the third and each subsequent year of service, at the rate of $850 per year, payable in each case pro rata at the end of each month, and each carrier shall be entitled to leave of absence, not to exceed fifteen days in each year, without loss of pay, during which time a substitute carrier shall be employed at the minimum rate of $600 per annum.

"That in determining the rate of pay for carriers the Postmaster-General shall consider the service rendered by them, respectively, both prior and subsequent to July 1, 1904.

"That all other provisions of law relating to the salaries of rural free-delivery carriers inconsistent with the provisions of this section relating thereto are hereby repealed."

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that that it is contrary to existing law.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman reserve the point of order for a moment?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I will reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana reserves the point of order.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, at this time I shall say only a word in relation to this amendment, as I expect to-morrow to move it again, provided the rule to be brought in by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] is adopted by the House.

I am frank to say that this amendment, which has my hearty indorsement, is offered by the Rural Mail Carriers' Association of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, I see no reason why these carriers may not with entire propriety organize for the purpose of making their wishes known to the Congress of the United States. Our manufacturers, our shipowners, our shipbuilders, the men managing the great industries of the country organize indiscriminately and send agents or representatives here to lobby for their respective interests. I use the word "lobby" in no disrespectful sense. These carriers are poor men, drawing meager salaries, and they also have a perfect right to present here a measure which they think is just and fair, and respectfully to ask for its enactment into law.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Is this their amendment?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. This is the amendment of the Rural Carriers' Association of the United States; that is, the one which they declare that they desire to see pass.

Mr. Chairman, in cities carriers receive for the first year $600. Afterwards, when experience has made them expert, this salary is increased in cities of the second class to $850, and in cities of the first class to $1,000 per annum. I myself have not been able to understand why this system of a gradual increase in the salaries of public employees, based upon the idea that experience promotes efficiency, should obtain so far as concerns city carriers and not obtain in the matter of the rural free-delivery carriers.

The business of the rural free-delivery carrier is on many routes not great in amount during the first year, but, as statistics show, it usually increases with much rapidity. The second year the carrier has more business to do, he does it better, and is entitled to better pay. The third year the business on many of the routes is materially increased, so that some become approximately self-sustaining and in others the deficiency is comparatively small.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. And how is it in the tenth year?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. In the tenth year I believe that many of the routes will become entirely self-sustaining.

In my judgment, $850, the maximum amount allowed to carriers in cities of the second class after their first year of employment, is none too great a salary to be allowed rural free-delivery carriers beginning with their third year of service, especially when we take into account the fact that the carrier in the city is frequently allowed $200 or $250 per annum for horse hire in addition to his salary.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a ruling on the point of order.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I demand the regular order.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I ask for a ruling on the point of order, and then I will yield to my colleague [Mr. CRUMPACKER] to offer his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to come in as an independent paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the word "substations" the following:

"On and after July 1, 1904, letter carriers of the rural free-delivery service who carry upon routes 20 miles or more in length, measuring from the post-office from which the carriers start, shall receive an annual salary of $750; and those who carry upon routes less than 20 miles in length shall receive $35 per annum for each mile contained in their respective routes, and no other or further allowance or salary shall be paid to said carriers."

Mr. OVERSTREET. I make the point of order against that amendment.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I confess that it is subject to the point of order, and I put it in the RECORD simply to call the attention of the House to the subject. I hope that to-morrow I may have an opportunity to offer it when it will be competent to consider it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the paragraph under consideration may be passed without prejudice, and let us proceed with the few remaining sections of the bill, and then to-morrow I hope to be able to secure the consideration of this paragraph under a rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that this paragraph may be passed without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LACEY. I would like to offer an amendment, simply to be pending.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That there shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a purchasing agent for the Post-Office Department, who shall hold office for four years unless sooner removed by the President, and who shall receive an annual salary of $5,000, give bond to the United States in such sum as the Postmaster-General may determine, and report direct to the Postmaster-General; and who shall, under such regulations as the Postmaster-General shall prescribe, and subject to his direction and control, have supervision of the purchase of all supplies for the postal service.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to know——

Mr. MANN. I reserve the point of order on that paragraph.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I ask for order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Regular order. I ask for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded. Does the gentleman from Illinois renew the point of order?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order. The Chair asks if the gentleman from Illinois renews his point of order?

Mr. GIBSON. I thought the Chair had recognized me.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded, which is a ruling upon the point of order, if the gentleman from Illinois insists upon it.

Mr. GIBSON. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. If there is to be no opportunity to have an explanation of the reason for this, and if the regular order is to be demanded——

Mr. COWHERD. I appeal to the gentleman from New York to withdraw his demand for the regular order in order that there may be an explanation of the paragraph.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I suggest that we go home and think of it until to-morrow. I insist on the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded, and the committee will be in order.

Mr. MANN. Unless there is an explanation of the paragraph, I will insist upon the point of order.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I would be very glad if we could have order, but I do not propose to talk against this noise.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order, and gentlemen will be seated and cease conversation. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman from Illinois upon the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, so far as the point of order is concerned, this is plainly new legislation, and also a change of existing law. There can be no possible doubt of that; an inspection of the paragraph makes it so plain that it admits of no discussion. I did not desire to make the point of order without an explanation, but if no explanation can be offered then I make the point of order.

Mr. OVERSTREET. There is an abundance of explanation, but I confess I dislike, I will say to the committee, after talking for three straight weeks, to try to talk down this noise in a House of 200 Members.

Mr. Chairman, if I could have the attention of the House, I would be very glad to explain the item.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Illinois has any doubt as to whether or not he will insist on the point of order, I desire to make it, and call for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would be glad to hear the gentleman from Indiana in charge of the bill on the point of order.

Mr. OVERSTREET. The point of order is well taken, so far as the rule is concerned. This, however, is a righteous section [cries of "Regular order!"] and is good legislation, and I was in hopes that Members were willing to consider it with a view of enacting it into law, although it is in violation of existing law. I still believe that if Members would consider the item or would listen to an explanation of it they would agree with me upon it.

We seek by this section to give authority for the consolidation of the supply divisions of the Post-Office Department, to be under the control of a purchasing agent, who shall be answerable directly to the Postmaster-General, although he receives his appointment from the President Mr Chairman, it is in the line of good legislation——

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman has confessed the point of order, and debate is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of orde made by the gentleman from New York is well taken.

Mr. LIND. Before the gentleman takes his seat, I desire to ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York has called for the regular order, which is a ruling on the point of order. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the Clerk will read:

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That hereafter, under such regulations as the Postmaster-General may establish for the collection of the lawful revenue and for facilitating the handling of such matter in the mails, it shall be lawful to accept for transmission in the mails quantities of not less than 2,000 identical pieces of third or fourth class matter without postage stamps affixed: Provided, That postage shall be fully prepaid thereon.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that last section on the ground that it is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey makes the point of order against section 3.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. That it is new legislation. I reserve the point of order. I would be glad to hear the gentleman from Indiana, if there is any explanation for this.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I move that the committee do now rise. [Applause.]

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BOUTELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the post-office appropriation bill and had come to no resolution thereon.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. BENTON to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Jacob Scott, Fifty-fourth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

POSTPONEMENT OF MEMORIAL EXERCISES.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the memorial exercises in honor of the late ROBERT H. FOERDERER and HENRY BURK, which were to have been held on next Sunday, be postponed until Sunday, April 10, on account of the unavoidable absence of many Members from Pennsylvania and others who desire to take part in those exercises, and I would also ask that when the House adjourn on Saturday, the 9th, that it adjourn to meet on Sunday, the 10th, for the purpose of conducting those exercises.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

TO RELIEVE OBLIGATORS ON BONDS UPON EXPORTS TO THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS, ETC.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a privileged report from the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York presents a privileged report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13088) to relieve obligators on bonds given to the United States upon the exportation to the Philippine Islands, prior to November 20, 1901, of articles subject to internal-revenue tax.

The SPEAKER. The bill and accompanying report are ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 9791. An act granting a pension to Abram Claypool;

H. R. 9777. An act granting to the city of Port Angeles, State of Washington, for park purposes, certain portions of the Government reserve in said city;

H. R. 3761. An act ceding certain land appertaining to the custom-house at St. Joseph, Mo., for use as a street; and

H. R. 8335. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to determine the sessions of the circuit and district courts of the United States for the eastern district of Wisconsin," approved March 31, 1892, chapter 28.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled joint resolution and bill of the following titles:

S. R. 53. Joint resolution authorizing the reprinting of certain documents to be sold by the superintendent of documents; and

S. 2323. An act relating to ceded lands on the Fort Hall Indian Reservation.

SENATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills and resolutions of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 3454. An act for the extension of Eighth street NW., or Wrights road, District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

S. 5092. An act to amend an act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, etc.—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Senate concurrent resolution No. 59.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a survey to be made of the bar at the entrance of Alaqua Bayou, on Choctawhatchee Bay, in the State of Florida, with a view to securing a depth of 6 feet of water across said bar—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

REPRINT OF POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that one print of the post-office appropriation bill, with the amendments thus far agreed to, be made, in order that Members may have the bill before them to-morrow. I ask this especially because I am informed that copies of the bill are practically exhausted, and many Members are inquiring for them, and we might as well have it printed with the amendments agreed to thus far.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BAKER. I would like to ask what number would be provided for by that resolution?

The SPEAKER. The usual number under the House rule. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 24 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet to-morrow at 12 o'clock m.

CAPT. SETH MITCHELL ACKLEY.

Mr. LODGE. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 2650) to transfer Capt. Seth Mitchell Ackley from the retired to the active list of the Navy.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The SECRETARY. The Committee on Naval Affairs reports to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to insert:

That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to restore Seth Mitchell Ackley, now a captain on the retired list, to the active list of the Navy: Provided, That the said Ackley shall, upon examination in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy, before an examining board composed of five members, of whom three shall be line officers his senior in rank, and the remaining two medical members, satisfactorily establish his mental, moral, professional, and physical fitness to perform active service, the place to which he shall be restored to be determined by the Secretary of the Navy after recommendation with regard thereto by said board: And provided further, That the said Ackley shall be carried as additional to the number of the grade to which he may be restored or at any time thereafter promoted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. From what committee does it come?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there any report with it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a report.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear the report read. It is rather an uncommon bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. GALLINGER February 2, 1904, as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2650) to transfer Capt. Seth Mitchell Ackley from the retired to the active list of the Navy, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it pass with an amendment as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to restore Seth Mitchell Ackley, now a captain on the retired list, to the active list of the Navy: Provided, That the said Ackley shall, upon examination in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy, before an examining board composed of five members, of whom three shall be line officers his senior in rank, and the remaining two medical members, satisfactorily establish his mental, moral, professional, and physical fitness to perform active service, the place to which he shall be restored to be determined by the Secretary of the Navy after recommendation with regard thereto by said board: And provided further, That the said Ackley shall be carried as additional to the number of the grade to which he may be restored or at any time thereafter promoted."

The above amendment is in conformity with the views of the Navy Department, as will be shown by the following letter:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, December 24, 1903.

SIR: The Department has received the committee's letter of the 17th instant, inclosing a copy of the bill (S. 2650) to transfer Capt. Seth Mitchell Ackley from the retired to the active list of the Navy, and in response to the request for an expression of its views with respect to the measure has the honor to submit the following:

A vacancy for the promotion of Commander Ackley to the grade of captain occurred September 2, 1901. He failed to qualify physically for such promotion, however, and on October 25, 1901, after examination by a retiring board, he was placed upon the retired list for disability incident to the service, pursuant to section 1453 of the Revised Statutes, and in view of his creditable record and of his civil-war service, with the rank of the next higher grade, that of captain, in accordance with the provisions of section 11 of the "personnel act," approved March 3, 1899. The pending bill provides for his restoration to the active list to take place next after Capt. Charles T. Hutchins, who immediately preceded him on said list at the date of his retirement, and who now stands No. 35 in his grade.

The Department believes that when an officer who has been retired for disability incurred in the line of duty recovers his health he should, if in other respects desirable, be restored to the active list, in order that the Government may receive the benefit of his services. The difficulty is to determine the position to which he should be restored, as to put him in the place which he would have occupied had he remained in active service would appear to be an injustice to officers who have performed their duty and acquired experience in their profession during the period of his absence, while, on the other hand, to give him the actual place which he held when he left the service would make him in some cases much junior to officers whom he ranked when he was retired. This difficulty may in large measure be met, however, by making the officer an additional number in any grade to which he may be restored or at any time thereafter promoted.

In the opinion of the Department the matter of transfer from the retired to the active list should be passed upon by a board composed like a retiring board of three officers of the corps to which the applicant belongs senior to him in rank and two medical officers. It should be the duty of this board to determine the mental, moral, professional, and physical qualifications of the applicant (the medical members participating in the mental and physical examination only), and, further, to make recommendation as to the place to which the officer, if found qualified, should be restored, taking into consideration in reaching a conclusion on this point the circumstances of each particular case, including the reasons for retirement and the length of time the officer has been on the retired list, the place to which he shall be assigned, however, to be definitely determined by the Secretary of the Navy in his discretion after consideration of the recommendation of the board. The result which it is desired to attain is the restoration of the officer concerned to a place between that which he occupied when he was retired and that which he would have reached had he remained in active service, higher or lower on the list, according to the equitable circumstances of each case.

I submit herewith the draft of a bill prepared in accordance with the foregoing views, applicable to the case of Captain Ackley, and suggest that, if it meet the committee's approval, it be substituted for the pending measure. It has not been deemed necessary to embody in this bill the details above mentioned with regard to the procedure of the examining board, such matters being sufficiently covered by the general provision for an examination in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy. The proviso in the pending measure (S. 2650) that the beneficiary "shall not receive any extra pay for the time he was on the retired list and not on active duty" is omitted in the draft herewith because regarded as unnecessary; but there can be no objection to adding it if the committee so desires.

Very respectfully,

W. H. MOODY, Secretary.

Hon. EUGENE HALE,
Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs, United States Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator who reported the bill if the substitute recommended by the Secretary of the Navy is the one reported?

Mr. GALLINGER. It is, precisely.

Mr. COCKRELL. It takes a man who was placed upon the retired list for disability incurred in service in the line of duty from that list and puts him back on the active list, provided he can stand the necessary physical examination?

Mr. GALLINGER. That is exactly what it does.

Mr. COCKRELL. And it is based on the ground that he has recovered from those injuries and is now fit for active service?

Mr. GALLINGER. That is the situation, I will say to the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 12833) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that the committee amendments be acted upon as they are reached in the reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with; that it be read for amendment, and that the amendments of the committee shall first receive consideration. The Chair hears no objection, and that order is made.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. ALLISON. I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I thank the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. President, I addressed the Chair this morning when the Chair asked if there was further morning business, but I was not recognized, and the Senator from Massachusetts was recognized for the passage of a bill. I did not complain. I believe the Chair did not announce that the morning business had closed. It was my desire to call up the bill introduced by the Senator from Montana [Mr. GIBSON], with a view of submitting a few remarks thereon. Of course the Senate understands that I can speak on the District of Columbia appropriation bill, but I do not desire to do that. I simply submit that I should have been recognized at the time I addressed the Chair, so that I might have called up the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the first Senator he sees rise in his place, which it is his duty to do.

Mr. ALLISON. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Of course, the Senator from Iowa is very courteous. I do not like to talk upon a public-land question when the District of Columbia appropriation bill is up. I wanted to get the bill before the Senate in regular order, and now that the appropriation bill is up I desire to give notice that to-morrow morning when the Chair announces that the morning business has closed, or if he asks whether there is further morning business, I shall request that the bill introduced by the Senator from Montana be laid before the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. It is in order now.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. It is not in order now, because the morning business is closed, as I understand it.

Mr. COCKRELL (to Mr. HANSBROUGH). Ask unanimous consent.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I am willing that the Senator from Iowa shall go on with the appropriation bill, and I will offer the observations I have to submit to-morrow morning.

Mr. ALLISON. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator now, or to-morrow morning if the appropriation bill is not concluded to-day. I mean to say that as far as I am concerned, I will not press the appropriation bill so as to exclude the Senator.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. To-morrow morning I will take the floor in my own right.

Mr. COCKRELL (to Mr. HANSBROUGH). Take it now in your own right.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I will not take it now because the morning business is closed.

Mr. COCKRELL. No one will object if you ask unanimous consent.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. It has been suggested to me that I ask unanimous consent that the bill introduced by the Senator from Montana [Mr. GIBSON] be laid before the Senate.

Mr. STEWART. The appropriation bill to be temporarily laid aside?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Yes.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. For the purpose of addressing the Senate?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. For the purpose of addressing the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota asks unanimous consent that the bill (S. 5168) to repeal the desert-land act and the commutation provision of the homestead act be laid before the Senate, and that the District of Columbia appropriation bill be temporarily laid aside for that purpose. Is there objection?

Mr. TELLER. I suppose Senate bill 5168 is to be laid before the Senate so that the Senator from North Dakota may make some remarks.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Yes; that is the purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair so understands.

REPEAL OF DESERT-LAND ACT, ETC.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill (S. 5168) to repeal the desert-land act and the commutation provision of the homestead act is before the Senate.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, representing, as I do in part, a public-land State—one of the largest public-land States in the Union—I do not feel that I should allow the statement, or some of the statements at least, made yesterday by the Senator from Montana [Mr. GIBSON] to pass unchallenged.

There is no disagreement between the Senator from Montana and those who believe with him and myself as to the necessity for the repeal of the timber and stone act. There has been no disagreement between us on that point, except that the Senator proposed to repeal the timber and stone act without substituting anything for it or without putting in its stead some provision under which the timber on Government land might be disposed of.

Finally, the Committee on Public Lands reached an agreement as to this particular phase of the question, and reported a bill to the Senate providing for the repeal of the timber-and-stone act and inserting a provision under which the Secretary of the Interior has the authority to sell the right to cut and dispose of the timber on Government lands. That bill passed the Senate by unanimous consent one morning recently, without any debate whatever. So, as respects the question of the timber-and-stone act, I am in accord with the Senator from Montana. I think the act should be repealed.

Nor is there any dispute between the Senator and myself in regard to the desirability of doing away with what are known as the forest-reserve selection rights, sometimes called forest-reserve script. We are in accord on that question. For my part, I think it was a great mistake to have put on the statute books a provision under which an entryman within a forest reserve could take a selection outside of a forest reserve after he had denuded the land he had originally occupied within the reserve of its timber, thus allowing him to go outside of the reserve and take a piece of land that was heavily timbered.

Thus far, Mr. President, the Senator from Montana and myself are in agreement, or in practical agreement. But, Mr. President, on the question of the repeal of the desert-land act and the commutation clause of the homestead law the Senator and myself are apparently wide apart. I can not speak particularly in regard to the desert-land act, because that law is but little used in the State I have the honor in part to represent here. The land law which is most in use in North Dakota is the commutation clause of the homestead law.

But, Mr. President, before referring especially to the commutation law, I wish to say that in my judgment, whatever may have been the history of the entries made under the desert-land act in the earlier years, at the present time in Wyoming, parts of Colorado, the southern part of Idaho, and in other arid sections the desert-land act is the only law under which irrigation by private enterprise can be successfully pursued.

The Senate will understand at once that it would be almost impossible for a homesteader, who is required under the homestead law to reside five years upon his land, to take 160 acres under that law and be required to put water upon it, because he must be allowed to live on his land for the purpose of earning money with which to pay the expense of conducting the water to the land. But under the homestead law he can not go away from the land. He must be a constant resident there for five years. So that I say in my judgment the desert-land act is absolutely necessary for irrigation through private enterprise.

Mr. STEWART. If the Senator will allow me, I wish to ask him a question.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I yield.

Mr. STEWART. Is it possible for him to go on under the homestead law and stay there with no water on the land?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. No; it is not.

Mr. STEWART. It is impossible; he could not live there.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Certainly not; there would be nothing there for him to live upon.

Mr. STEWART. He would probably have no water to drink.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. So much for the desert-land act.

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator will explain to those of us who do not understand the situation his response to the inquiry of the Senator from Nevada as to why that is true.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The Senator from Nevada asked me if it was possible for a man to reside upon 160 acres of land constantly in the arid region without irrigation. I answered the Senator that it was not, of course.

Mr. BACON. I did not understand the inquiry, or I would have known the reason of the reply.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Now, Mr. President, the Senator from Montana, for whom I have very great admiration on account of his very sturdy qualities and his great persistency, desires to repeal all the land laws except the original homestead law. There was a time when the original homestead law afforded ample opportunity for the then very small number of settlers who desired to go upon the public domain—to go there and make homes under that statute. Forty or fifty years ago a settler would take 160 acres of land, and about all he wanted was a comfortable log house, a good coon dog, and a squirrel rifle, and he was willing to stay there five or any number of years before securing title. But, Mr. President, times have changed; conditions are different. The man who goes upon the public domain to-day wants a white frame house and a big red barn, four horses and a gang plow. That is the difference.

If the settler is required to reside upon the land five years without having the opportunity of borrowing a cent of money, because he has no title to his land and therefore he can give no security, and should meet with misfortunes, as most of the settlers do, such as fire, sickness, loss of crops, etc., what would become of the five-year settler? Why, Mr. President, he would be obliged to abandon his land. That has been the history of public land settlements in the West.

So Congress in its wisdom many years ago enacted what is known as the commutation clause, which permits a settler at the end of fourteen months' residence upon his land to make final proof, pay the Government $200 for the 160 acres, secure title, and thus he is at liberty to do as he pleases with his property.

Mr. GIBSON. Will the Senator from North Dakota allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Certainly.

Mr. GIBSON. I should like to ask the Senator if he is aware of the fact that for ten years after North Dakota became an independent State the commutations there amounted to only 7½ per cent every year? For ten years from 1889 up to 1900 the commutations of homesteads in North Dakota were only 7½ per cent.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Seven and one-half per cent of the total homestead entries?

Mr. GIBSON. Of the total homestead entries during that time.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Very well.

Mr. GIBSON. Now, if the Senator will allow me a little further——

Mr HANSBROUGH. Certainly.

Mr. GIBSON. From 1900 up to the end of the fiscal year 1903 the commutations increased very rapidly. Last year they amounted to 60 per cent of the homestead final proofs. Sixty per cent were commuted. I wish to submit that those entries were made in the western portion of North Dakota upon lands similar in character to the lands of eastern Montana; that it is my belief that those lands have been entered largely in the interest of stock growers, and that this extraordinary increase of commutation has been in the interest of men who are taking up and getting control of large bodies of land. I can account for it on no other ground, and I should like to have the Senator explain it.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I shall be very glad to do so.

Mr. President, I have not looked up the percentages to which the Senator from Montana refers. I went to what is now North Dakota in 1881. I have lived there ever since, and I think I know something about that State. I think I know something about the methods of settlement upon the public lands of that State. Whatever the Senator has evolved from the record in regard to percentages I do not think will outweigh the fact that the section of country to which he refers in the western part of North Dakota as being very similar to that in Montana is to-day covered by a very large population who have gone in there in the last four or five years to remain permanently.

I will say to the Senator that there is but very little stock raising in North Dakota as compared with Montana. In the extreme western edge of North Dakota there are a few stock ranges, but the settlement of public lands to which the Senator refers, lands on which the commutation privilege has been exercised, is not in the very extreme western portion of North Dakota, and those lands are unlike the lands in the Senator's State.

Mr. President, last spring, less than one year ago, I was in the section of country to which I allude, in what is known as the "Minot land district." I traveled over the railroads in that section for two or three days, and I saw for myself the exact situation. I found the country thickly populated, with a settler upon almost every quarter section of land.

I found, furthermore, Mr. President—and this is the essential point of this argument—that a quarter section of land in that region is worth from $1,500 to $2,000 the moment a man makes entry upon it; and if he does not comply with the law and make strict compliance therewith there will be some one there to contest his right; in other words, the land will be claimed, will be "jumped," to use a local expression. The Senator understands that.

The lands in Montana, which the Senator here claims have been pilfered from the Government, are not the class of lands to which I refer.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota yield to me to state just one proposition, which, I think, will also answer the inquiry of the Senator from Montana [Mr. GIBSON]?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to his colleague?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to state, in addition to what my colleague has just said, that from 1880 until the repeal of the timber-culture act and the preemption act there were three entries allowed to every man. So the system in our State was for a man to first take a preemption. He could commute that in six months, he could borrow enough money upon that and transfer it, and then take his homestead. The money that he got out of his preemption was sufficient to enable him to erect his buildings upon his homestead, and to open it. As soon as we repealed that law that took away the opportunity of borrowing money upon preempted land, and compelled the preemptor, if he wanted to improve his homestead, to borrow upon the homestead.

I think that accounts to a great extent for the fact that, since the repeal of the preemption law, there have been double or treble the amount of commuted homestead entries, and upon the same line that has been argued by my colleague.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Undoubtedly; because it was not necessary to use the commutation law while the preemption law was in force.

But, Mr. President, to revert again to the question of entries, my friend from Montana throughout his speech has not been very particular to exhaust the subject, unless he could make his point so as to convince those who listened to him that the repeal of these laws was absolutely necessary. The Senator's speech was very much like a lot of material which I have been reading in a publication coming to me, purporting to be the organ of what is known as the National Irrigation Association; but I will refer to that a litte later.

Mr. President, I say that the conditions have changed to such an extent as to make it absolutely necessary that we should have something upon the statute book similar to the commutation law, because a man does not at this time desire to live upon a piece of land for five years when his neighbor, who has preceded him and been able to make proof on that land and secure a patent, has had the opportunity of borrowing money to construct houses, to buy teams and farming implements, to clothe his children, to pay his bills, and to live as an American citizen ought to live—the difference, it seems to me, must be very apparent to all those who have studied the question.

Again, the average settler who goes upon a homestead is a poor man. It is a very rare thing that a man who goes upon the public domain has any money; otherwise he probably would not go there. It is a kind of last resort for him. When he goes there, if he is without means, what sort of a situation is it for him if he is required to live five years there without having the opportunity of borrowing money? Suppose the first year he has sickness in his family, which is very likely to happen, or the second year there is a loss of crop, or some of his stock is lost, is either burned by prairie fires or dies from disease—there is a whole train of misfortunes, Mr. President, that may overtake the homesteader, and generally they do overtake him.

It was for that reason, Mr. President, that Congress enacted the commutation law. In my judgment, it was not only a very wise enactment, but it was an act of mercy to the western settlers. It is that law which my friend from Montana would wipe from the statute book at the present time. What object has a man in paying $200 for 160 acres of land if he can get land for nothing? Why would he go in debt? Why would he borrow money? His purpose is, Mr. President, not only to borrow the $200 to pay the Government, but to borrow four or five or six hundred dollars additional with which to improve his farm and start in business. That is his purpose. He does not commute his land in order to defraud the Government; he commutes it because he wants to build up his home, and he pays a premium of $200 to the Government for that privilege, and the receipts in the General Land Office here from the sales of land will show to what extent the commutation law has been availed of.

Mr. FULTON. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. I ask the Senator if he recalls what is the percentage throughout all the public-land States where the commutation clause has been taken advantage of? Before I conclude my question I will say that, as I myself recall, the Commissioner of the General Land Office states that it is about 15 per cent—not to exceed 15 per cent. I am not quite certain about it, however.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, I think it will fall very far below that figure. I have been myself making some calculations on that branch of the question, and I think it is much less than 15 per cent, taking all the public-land States and Territories into consideration.

Mr. President, one would suppose in listening to the Senator from Montana when he gave us, as he did yesterday, those large volumes of figures, in blocks of hundreds of millions, that all the public domain had been taken under the commutation clause of the homestead law, the desert-land act, and the timber and stone act. It seems to me that the Senate ought to be advised as to what amount of lands have been filed upon or have been proved up under these several laws. I have before me here a table, compiled in the General Land Office at my special request some time ago, and from that table I find that in the last twenty-two years over 200,000,000 acres of the public domain have passed to private ownership; that is, up to June 30, 1903. I have the figures here before me, and will later ask to insert them in my remarks.

Of that 200,000,000 acres only 30,000,000 acres have passed to private ownership under the three laws which the Senator from Montana would repeal. It seems to me that this is a very important matter to be considered.

Mr. TELLER. How much did the Senator say?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. About 30,000,000 acres have passed to private ownership under the commutation law, the desert-land act, and the timber and stone act in twenty-two years up to the 30th of last June.

Mr. FOSTER of Washington. What did the Senator say was the total amount that passed into private ownership?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. About 200,000,000 acres of land have passed into private ownership under all the land laws. Now, let us see. The total amount under the timber and stone act in twenty-two years was about 8,000,000 acres; under the desert-land act in twenty-two years about three and three-fourths million acres; in twenty-two years, under the commutation clause of the homestead law, about 19,000,000 acres; under the final or the five-year homestead law, where the settler resides on his land for five years and secures title without paying anything to the Government, about 77,000,000 acres in twenty-two years. These are the principal land laws that are under consideration here and that are involved in this controversy.

Mr. President, during the same period patents have been issued to the several States under laws providing for State selections and providing for educational and public purposes about 13,000,000 acres in twenty-two years, and in the same period 67,000,000 acres have been patented to land-grant railroads; wagon-road grants patented, about one and one-half million acres, and under the swamp-land improvement act, about 14,000,000 acres.

So, Mr. President, we have almost as much public land passing into private hands and passing to the States under the swamp-land act as we have under the commutation law, but we hear nothing about frauds under the swamp-land act. I will ask to have the table to which I have referred inserted in my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection. The table referred to is as follows:

Statement showing the acreage of public lands of the various classes specified below disposed of between July 1, 1881, and June 30, 1903, inclusive, in the several States and Territories.

State or Territory	Timber and stone lands.	Final desert entries.	Commuted homesteads under sec. 2301, Revised Statutes.	Final homesteads.	State selections approved for educational and public purposes.	Railroad grants patented.	Wagon-road grants patented.	Swamp lands approved.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, I do not want to delay the Senate on this question. There are other Senators who intend to make remarks on the bill, and I suppose the Senate will be prepared to discuss it. I want, however, before concluding, to call attention to the fact that for the past two or three years there has been an organization, with headquarters in the city of Washington, the purpose of that organization being to secure the repeal of these laws. I have been at some pains to inform myself in regard to the motives of the individuals who are connected with that organization. While it is very difficult, of course, to get accurate knowledge on the subject, I am satisfied that the purpose of their propaganda, their campaign for repeal, is to enhance the value of lands in private holdings and to advance the value of land scrip that is now held by a few people. I have not any doubt but that is their purpose.

Mr. President, I do not charge any member of this body with being interested in any manner whatever in that movement. On the contrary——

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I will yield in a moment. On the contrary, I do not believe that any Senator or any Member of the other House has any interest whatever in repealing these laws in that behalf for the purpose of putting up the value of the lands in private holdings and enhancing the value of land scrip; but it is carried on by people who are outside of the two Houses of Congress. I will say further that they have no connection whatever with any Senator or Member of the other House.

Now I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator if he is not aware that this effort to repeal the commutation clause of the homestead act and the desert-land act has been before the people for nearly twenty years; and is he not aware that the officials at the head of the Government, whose opportunities were of the very best to investigate land commutation, have recommended to Congress repeatedly and repeatedly the repeal of these land acts in the interest of the settlers?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I am very glad the Senator has called my attention to that phase of the question. It is true, as the Senator says, that several Secretaries of the Interior and several Commissioners of the General Land Office have, in their annual reports, made recommendations in the direction of the repeal of some of these laws. There is no doubt about that. But, Mr. President, here is the important point in that connection: If we except the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], who was once Secretary of the Interior, we have not had a man in that office for a great many years—covering the entire period to which the Senator from Montana referred—who knew anything about the public-land system from practical experience. I make exception of the Senator from Colorado, because we all know here that he does understand the public-land question. He has lived in a public-land State for many years.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Will the Senator from North Dakota yield to me to make a statement?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Calling attention to the query of the Senator from Montana [Mr. GIBSON], it is true that various Administrations at different times have recommended repeals or modifications of these laws. The Senator, however, is not ignorant of the fact that the last utterance upon this question of repeal has come within the last three or four weeks from the hands of a commission appointed especially for the purpose of investigating the land laws and their operation and to make report to the President. The President and the Secretary of the Interior have sent that report to Congress, and it does not follow out the lines of repeal theretofore recommended. It does suggest some modifications.

I hope that every Senator interested in this matter will send to the document room and get a copy of the report made by the commission to investigate the operation of the land laws under the present Administration within the last thirty days. I will say that this report, to my knowledge, was made after a careful examination not only of the laws, but of the conditions upon the ground and in the States where the land laws apply.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, I believe that the Secretary of the Interior should be not only a good lawyer, but that an additional requirement should be that he should have had some practical experience in the public-land States. Whenever we have had a man in the office of Secretary of the Interior of that character there has been no trouble, or very little trouble, about public-land matters.

Take, for instance, a Secretary of the Interior who comes to that office without such knowledge as I have suggested. He is absolutely without the practical experience or knowledge that he should have with respect to public lands. On whom does he rely for that knowledge? On his inspectors and his general agents, who in many instances themselves know but little about the public lands in question. They go into a community; they are met in the little villages, hamlets, and cities; they are entertained and, to a considerable extent, are made much of.

I have known of my own personal knowledge cases where special agents and inspectors have reported upon land cases upon hearsay, the evidence—if you can call it evidence—being secured in the village or city where they stopped. They did not go upon the land at all; they did not consult the people who lived near the land.

It is upon such evidence that most of the Secretaries of the Interior since I have been in Congress have made their reports, which have been quoted so copiously here by the Senator from Montana [Mr. GIBSON] as an argument in favor of the repeal of these laws.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. QUARLES in the chair). Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I yield.

Mr. GIBSON. I rise to answer briefly the remarks of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK]. He calls the attention of the Senate——

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I hope the Senator will not undertake to inject a speech in the midst of what I am trying to say.

Mr. GIBSON. Just one word.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The Senator was heard yesterday at great length and made a very interesting speech; but I will yield to the Senator for a question.

Mr. GIBSON. I will cut it down to a very few words.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I yield to the Senator for a question.

Mr. GIBSON. I hope the Senator will read the report that has been prepared by the commission appointed by the President. I wish every Senator would read it, and read it carefully. I hold in my hand the report of the Secretary of the Interior delivered to the Senate at the commencement of this session of Congress, and if the Senator from North Dakota will allow me I will read about five lines of it and then stop.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. GIBSON. Here is what the Secretary of the Interior says:

> The Commissioner of the General Land Office in his report calls attention to the fact that it is only in exceptional cases that the homesteader who has settled upon a tract of public land with the bona fide intention of making it his actual and permanent home finds it necessary to abandon it before the expiration of five years from the date of his settlement, and he recommends—> for reasons stated, the repeal of the timber and stone act and the commutation clause of the homestead act.

That is, the Commissioner of the Land Office recommends—

That is his last report.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I am familiar with that recommendation, Mr. President.

Mr. GIBSON. But the Senate may not be.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota permit me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I yield.

Mr. SPOONER. Of course I heard what the Senator said about what should be the qualifications of the Secretary of the Interior——

Mr. HANSBROUGH. That is only my individual opinion.

Mr. SPOONER. Well, I used to be very strongly of that opinion myself; but I think we have never had a more efficient Secretary of the Interior than Cornelius N. Bliss.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. That is very true. He was a very efficient man, and had an unusual amount of good common sense.

Mr. SPOONER. He came from the city of New York, and he had no experience whatever in dealing with the public lands. I suppose it will hardly be challenged that Secretary Chandler was also a very efficient Secretary.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. That was before my time, and before the time of this agitation.

Mr. SPOONER. Well, the record is open and his reputation will settle that. He made an admirable Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. HOAR. If I may be allowed to say one word, the late Secretary Chandler, in my opinion, was one of the greatest executive officers we have had since the organization of the Government.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. That is true also in regard to Secretary Bliss. He was a great executive officer, and he could weigh with expert skill the conflicting reports that came to him. He never became hysterical over alleged land frauds.

Mr. SPOONER. I agree with the Senator. By referring to these two gentlemen I do not wish to be considered as agreeing that the present Secretary of the Interior is their inferior. But what I rose to ask the Senator was this: The Commissioner of the General Land Office, it seems, recommends——

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. If the Senator will allow me, I call the attention of the Senator from Montana [Mr. GIBSON] to the statement which I am about to make. The Secretary of the Interior, as I understand it, in his report which was read here, says that the Commissioner of the General Land Office approves this repeal. I have hunted in vain, page by page and line by line, through the report made by the Commissioner of the General Land Office to the Secretary of the Interior to find any such recommendation as the Secretary says was made by the Commissioner of the General Land Office. I suppose it must be a mistake in the printing or a mistake in the reference. At any rate, I have been unable to find in the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to the Secretary of the Interior any such recommendation, and if any such report can be pointed to I should be very glad to hear it for my own information.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Not only that, Mr. President, but I have in my hand here the most recent utterance on the public-land question from an executive officer, or rather from three executive officers, who form the Commission appointed by the President of the United States. The Commission was appointed by the President and was headed by the Commissoner of the General Land Office, Governor Richards, who is a most practical man, having a wide range of knowledge on these questions. The Commission has this to say on the subject of the commutation law:

> Much evidence has been submitted tending to show that in the prairie States, where it has been most used, the commutation clause of the homestead act has been of advantage to the settler without causing serious loss to the Government. On the contrary, the Government has been pecuniarily benefited by it, because under this act the land is paid for in cash after fourteen months' residence, while without commutation the entryman would receive a patent after five years' residence without paying for the land. It is no doubt true that the great majority of commutations are made in order to get a title to the land upon which money could be borrowed for its improvement.

That is the most recent utterance on the commutation law by any executive officer or body, and, to my mind, it is the most sensible utterance for many years.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GAMBLE. I have in my hand Document No. 130, Fifty-seventh Congress, second session. It is a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, dated January 5, 1903, to the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate in response to an inquiry concerning this legislation. I observe on page 10 in that document a table headed:

> Commuted homestead and desert-land entries investigated by special agents and canceled on their reports between June 30, 1892, and June 30, 1902, on grounds of entrymen's fraudulent speculative intent.

The table covers a period of ten years, and it appears from it that the number of cases investigated was 132.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. In all the public-land States.

Mr. GAMBLE. In all the public-land States on commutations.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. And that covers a period of ten years.

Mr. GAMBLE. Only thirty-one of those investigated were canceled. So it seems to me that the wholesale charge made is not borne out by the facts, if we are to rely upon the statement that is submitted. And I would call the attention of the Senator from North Dakota to the further recital in the same communication:

> These tables—
> After a number of them have been given in this report—
> These tables will show that the number of commuted homestead entries attacked during that period was less than seven-tenths of 1 per cent of the number of entries made during that period; that of the 210 attacks on entries of this class, only forty, or about 19 per cent thereof, resulted in the cancellation of the entries; while the entries canceled were about one-tenth of 1 per cent of the number of entries of that class made during that period.

A period which covers ten years. I am sorry to have interrupted the distinguished Senator. I do not pretend to be familiar with the land laws, the timber and stone act, or the desert-land law, but I do pretend to have some knowledge of the situation so far as my State is concerned, and I think, from my experience in the State on the commutation feature of the homestead law, that the charges made have been very much exaggerated.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I prefer not to yield. I should like to go on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota declines to yield.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, I was aware of the document to which the Senator from South Dakota has called my attention and proposed to refer to it later on. However, I am very glad the Senator called my attention to it, as it will save me the trouble, because he has stated it much better than I could. It is a communication addressed to me as chairman of the Committee on Public Lands in answer to a letter of inquiry.

Before leaving the question to which the Senator from Montana called my attention, in regard to reports by various Secretaries of the Interior, I desire to say that I do not wish to be understood as reflecting in the slightest particular upon any gentleman who has held that position at any time. I am very particular about matters of this kind, and I especially do not wish to be understood as reflecting upon the present incumbent, against whom we have all heard a great many complaints. But as to these complaints, as in cases of complaints in other directions, I have reached the conclusion that perhaps a great many of them are unfounded.

Mr. STEWART. Most of them.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Most of them; and the same rule will apply, I think, to the outcry in certain quarters against the commutation clause of the homestead law.

But I want to say on this subject—and I insist upon the position I have taken with respect to the qualification of a man to fill that office—that he should be not only a good lawyer, but should also have had some practical experience as respects the public domain. You might as well expect a judge sitting on the bench to decide a case upon the arguments of the attorneys who come before him, being himself deficient in the knowledge of the law or not having any knowledge of the law, as to expect a Secretary of the Interior or any other Secretary to decide a question without some practical knowledge of the facts.

Mr. President, referring briefly, if I may be allowed, to this propaganda, if I may call it such, which has been inaugurated here within the last few years for the repeal of these land laws, on investigation it seems to me I have found that the motive of the men behind the movement is to increase the value of lands in private holding. I found on investigation that one of the individuals chiefly responsible for the agitation in favor of the repeal of these laws has been receiving what might be termed a "princely salary" for the last six years from the land-grant railroads of this country. I find on further investigation that a great syndicate, out on the Union Pacific road, has purchased a large body of land in recent years at about 70 cents an acre.

Mr. TELLER. How much?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. About 70 cents an acre.

Mr. TELLER. That is right.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. And the managers of that syndicate have been here in the city of Washington conferring with gentlemen outside of this Chamber who are interested in repealing these laws, with a view to having them repealed.

I find further, Mr. President, that some of the great lumber-manufacturing establishments of the country—corporations, syndicates, and individuals—who own large tracts of land, however they may have been acquired, have been in favor of the repeal of the timber and stone act and did not want anything put in in its place. What they wanted to do was to stop these little private sawmill enterprises, and they are very numerous in three or four of the Western timber States, with a view, of course, of putting up the price of the lumber and of timber in their hands.

So, Mr. President, when Senators come here and talk about syndicates, and cattle thieves, and land barons, and corporations, and when the people responsible for this agitation outside of this body talk about Senators and Members being the agents of these institutions—these land barons and cattle thieves, etc.—I think it is no more than fair that attention should be called to other syndicates in other directions, which are interested in the repeal of these laws. I make no reflection upon any member of this body nor upon any Member of the House of Representatives.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I should like to ask my colleague one question, and that is if he knows of any syndicate which has been formed in the United States to take up agricultural lands for the purpose of farming them? Is it not a fact that the agricultural interest is the only interest that is not under or inviting the attention of any syndicate?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. My colleague is absolutely correct in that statement.

Mr. President, if the syndicates referred to by my friend the Senator from Montana existed at all, I think I would know something about them so far as concerns the State of North Dakota. There are no such syndicates there. There are no corporations there acquiring land in large bodies, as the Senator suggested. If it were true that syndicates and corporations are acquiring those lands under the commutation clause of the homestead law, I ask the Senator how it is that the population of the State of North Dakota has increased from about 40,000 in 1882 to over a half million people at the present time?

I will tell you, Mr. President, how the population of North Dakota increases and how it has increased. Every man who goes there, or nearly so, does so with the view of making a home on the public domain, and he remains there. He makes that his home. That is why the population of North Dakota has increased from 40,000 to 500,000 in a little more than twenty years, and that answers, it seems to me, the contention of the Senator from Montana as respects any of the States that have increased rapidly in population and which are in what is known as the "humid belt" of the country.

Mr. President, I have not any doubt that out in the State of Montana on some of the arid lands there—and most of the State is arid—the cattle rangers have taken advantage of these laws to secure additional quarter sections in order to round out their grazing lands or to acquire a piece of land on a stream in order to secure water for their stock. I have not any doubt that something of that kind has occurred there. But if the land so acquired was worth anything, there is not any doubt that there would be somebody to contest the right of any man who took the land in that way and had failed to comply with the law.

I can understand that as to the arid lands in Montana and in other States, lands that lie up far above the water line, where they never can put water upon them and convert them to agricultural uses, where there is no population, there is no one to contest the entry of a man who goes upon the public domain or of a man who takes 160 acres of land in that locality. And I say further to the Senator, it is just as easy for the stockmen under these circumstances to violate the original five-year homestead law as it is for him to violate the commutation law. Indeed, it is a little easier for him to do it, and it costs him far less, And I can very well understand how a big ranger, in order to get a few quarter sections of land, could locate his cowboys upon different quarters and let them make a filing and make their homes or assume to make their homes there—and who would know whether they complied with the law or not? They are about the only people in that community. The land is worthless. There is nobody to contest it or to see that they comply with the law. A special agent never goes there to inquire into the situation. I can well understand how that might occur, but it will occur under the original five-year homestead law just as easily as it will occur under the commutation law.

So far as residence and cultivation are concerned, there would be no question about residence and cultivation in a locality of that kind where the land is worthless, because there will be no one there to contest the right of the settler. Indeed, I doubt if he would be required to live on the land. I doubt if he would live on the land five years. I doubt if he would live there five days. He would build a little cabin and say, "That is my home," but he would live at the headquarters of the ranch. There is no one there to say nay; no one to contest. He gets his title at the end of five years, and then sells to the stockman if he chooses to do so. I can understand that such things may happen in Montana and other States in the arid section, but they could happen under the original five-year law just as easily as under the commutation law.

I do not know that I have anything further to say on this question at the present time. I assume that the bill will lie on the table and will be called up by other Senators, and that there will be further discussion upon it, and I also assume that it is the intention of the Senator from Montana at the proper time to have the bill go to the Committee on Public Lands, and if it should come back here it would again come up for discussion.

I wish to say, Mr. President, that in my judgment it would be utterly impossible to pass such an act at this session. Indeed, I doubt if any session of Congress in the next half a dozen years would consent to so sweeping a measure. The effect of the repeal of these laws would be to deprive a vast number of the people who are coming into this country now seeking homes of the opportunity of acquiring a home on the public domain except under the five-year homestead law, which, as I have undertaken to show, is somewhat antiquated and which is not calculated to serve the purpose of the class of people who are seeking to better their condition.

Another effect of the repeal of this law would be that the tide of immigration which is coming to this country would be turned into Canada—into the Northwest Territory—where the most flattering inducements are being offered to people to settle on public lands; and to-day the agents of the Canadian government are in this country soliciting such immigration. I met one of these agents about a year ago in St. Paul, and he asked me particularly about the repeal of these laws. He did not say he was hopeful they would be repealed, but what are we to infer from his question? Of course he would like to have the land laws of the United States repealed, because he would be glad to see it made more difficult for the settler to acquire a home in the United States, inasmuch as that would turn him to Canadian territory, along the proposed new line of road which is to be built in that section by the Dominion government.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Dakota that this bill may still lie on the table? The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. ALLISON, Mr. NEWLANDS, and Mr. DUBOIS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I wish to obtain recognition for a few minutes to address myself to the pending bill.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Nevada desires to speak for a few moments upon the question which has been under discussion by the Senator from North Dakota. Of course I do not wish to interfere with a brief discussion of that matter, but I do not want to yield to many this morning upon the subject. I yield for a few moments to the Senator from Nevada, and then I hope Senators will allow the District of Columbia appropriation bill to be proceeded with. I will yield later and at some other time to the Senator from Idaho if he wishes to speak upon the subject, but I should like to make a little progress with the appropriation bill this morning.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I thank the Senator from Iowa for his courtesy, and I shall certainly be very brief.

Mr. President, I am very solicitous that nothing shall be done regarding our land laws that will retard the development of the West, and I am also solicitous that there should be no such administration of those laws as will result in the concentration of large areas of land in single ownership, for I can imagine nothing that will retard the development of the West so effectively as such a condition of things.

I realize the fact that the United States has, to say the least, been careless in its administration of this great asset, the public domain. This has been due to the fact that we had but few people and a very large area of land, and hence the care has not been exercised in the past which should have been observed in the preservation of this domain for home builders.

We have been careless in our grants of land—in our grants of land to the States—without proper restraints and limitations as to home building. We have been careless in our grants to the great railroad systems of the country. We have allowed, as the result of our carelessness, in certain States of the West a system of land monopoly to grow up, which has been effectually retarding the development of the West.

Mr. DUBOIS. May I interrupt the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. DUBOIS. We may possibly have been careless in regard to land grants to the States in the early days, but that, certainly, does not apply to the new States, because no land was granted to any of our new States without the express condition that not an acre should be sold for less than $10 an acre.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will say to the Senator from Idaho that I was simply referring generally to the history of our legislation. I have no charges of fraud to make regarding the administration of the land laws. I simply assert that in the past our administration of them has been a careless one. It has only been of late years that the attention of this country has been called to the subject and a propaganda has been made which has resulted already in very efficient revision of the land laws, and which, I trust, will result in more.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator when this efficient revision took place—how recently? I am not aware, as a member of this body, that there has been any material change in the land laws for a good many years.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will state to the Senator from Colorado that I hold the floor by the indulgence of the Senator from Iowa, and I do not wish to extend the period of my remarks. But if the Senator will hear me through I think I will cover that question.

Mr. TELLER. I will give the Senator a week in which to get ready to tell me.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will cover that question now. I will state briefly in reply to the Senator from Colorado that I regard the irrigation act as a distinct step in the line of the revision of the land laws, for under the irrigation act the commutation clause does not apply, and the very purpose of that act is to promote and secure home building in this country.

I will also state, in reply to the Senator from Colorado, since he challenges me to give him the information, that we have recently reported from the Public Lands Committee of the Senate a bill absolutely withdrawing timber lands from sale.

Mr. TELLER. I did not ask the Senator what he had done or what the committee had done. I asked what Congress had done.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I simply say that in addition to the irrigation act steps are being taken in the line of the revision of these land laws, and I think that important action has already been taken in the line of reform, and I have no doubt that other reforms are in progress.

Mr. FULTON. Did I understand the Senator from Nevada to say that a bill had been reported which absolutely withdrew timber lands from entry; that is, doing away with any provision for entering timber lands?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Not at all. I was about to complete that statement when I was interrupted by the Senator from Colorado. The bill reported repeals the law providing for the sale of timber lands, and as a substitute for it the timber is to be sold by the Government of the United States, the proceeds being paid into the irrigation fund, and the land itself is to be subject to homestead entry without commutation, and I call that a step in the line of reform, for the——

Mr. FULTON. I think the Senator is mistaken about the commutation clause.

Mr. NEWLANDS. That is my recollection.

Mr. FULTON. That only applies, as I recall the bill which was reported, to lands which are homesteaded within forest reserves. There is a bill pending, but whether it has been reported or not I do not know, which authorizes agricultural land in forest reserves to be entered under the homestead act, and to such entries the commutation clause does not apply. If the commutation clause does not apply to the bill which was reported and passed the Senate, I was mistaken in regard to its terms.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The bill to which the Senator refers was not only reported to but was passed by the Senate a few days since, and it contains the provisions to which I have referred. The effect of this bill will be to stop the concentration of our timber lands in the great syndicates and corporations that have acquired such vast areas during the past.

Now, Mr. President, I have stated that we have been careless in the administration of this great asset of the Government and that of recent years an agitation has arisen for reform upon the subject, and steps have already been taken in the line of reform. That carelessness has all arisen from the fact, as I have stated, that the population of the country was small and that the area of its lands was very large, and hence under the existing conditions it was not a matter that aroused very serious attention.

But if we look back to history we find that monopoly of land has been the cause of many of the serious wars and revolutions of the world. We all know that in France prior to the Revolution one-third of the land was held by the nobility, one-third by the church, and another third, the poorer third, was held by the common people, and that the taxes of the entire country were imposed upon the poorer third. The result was the French Revolution, and one of the consequences of that upheaval was a readjustment of the landed system of France. So to-day they have peasant proprietorship, the ownership of the land in small tracts, which are constantly being divided and subdivided, and we find in that country the most important economic development since that period which has occurred on the continent of Europe.

We also know that the long protracted agitation in Ireland arose from the land system. The land in Ireland has been held by English landlords in large tracts, and the people of Ireland have been tenants. The country became overpopulated, the price of farm products fell, and the result has been a land agitation which has lasted for years, and which has cost England millions of money and many lives, and finally England has been compelled to practically take away the land from the landlords and turn it over to the tenants under the purchase act which was recently passed. And there a system of peasant proprietorship is gradually being inaugurated under this law which is the outcome of persistent agitation and revolt, varied occasionally by bloody strife, for a long period.

So also in the Philippine Islands. The contest there was not so much against the dominion of Spain as it was for a reform of the land system. The rich and fertile lands in Luzon had fallen into the possession of the church, and the Tagals were simply tenants of the church, and the agitation and revolution which existed there had its source in the monopoly of the best lands by the friars. Our Government has been compelled to correct this by providing for the purchase of those lands for the sum of $7,000,000 and for their division amongst the Philippine people.

So it was in the countries of South America and Central America and in Mexico under Spanish dominion. The church came into possession of large areas of land, and the agitation against the church arose in almost all those countries. The church is no longer a state institution in many of them. Why? Not because those people were not devoted to the Catholic Church, for they remained its adherents, but they simply made war against this land system, the system of land monopoly which had gradually concentrated the lands of these countries in the hands of the church, and they broke it up and took away the lands from the church.

Now, in this country land monopoly has not become a serious evil simply because we have such a large area of country over which our people can spread. But when population increases it will be a serious question unless we carefully guard the future. As the result of loose laws and careless administration, large areas of timber land, large areas of agricultural land, in the Pacific coast and mountain States have fallen into the hands of individual proprietors.

In California itself, as a result of the old land-grant system of Mexico, all the best lands of the State were concentrated in such ownership in ranches of from 50,000 to 500,000 acres. I do not think there is a man who has lived in California for years who has not realized that that concentration of land has prevented the proper development of the State.

In addition to that concentration, there has been another form of concentration going on in the great San Joaquin and Sacramento valleys of that State. Under the early land laws of this country, which provided for the sales of land in large quantities and under grants made by Congress to the State, the State being eager to sell the lands in order to provide for its school fund, a concentration has taken place in the San Joaquin and Sacramento valleys similar to these Spanish land grants, and the same thing has happened in the mountain States generally.

As it was essential in the early stages of the development of the cattle industry that the owners of cattle should conduct their operations upon a large scale, should have large areas of land over which to graze their cattle, large concentrations of land have taken place there, and under existing conditions, as there was no law permitting the acquisition of lands directly from the Government in large tracts or permitting the leasing of these lands, they have been compelled for the protection of their interests to go along the streams and the tributary streams and take up the lands which control the water, and in doing this they have made use not only of the railroad grants and the State grants but also of the desert-land act and the homestead law, parties in their interest making the entries and thus securing title. The commutation clause of the homestead act has been serviceable to them, for under it the entryman, instead of living on his entry for five years and thus acquiring title without cost, can secure title after living on the land for fourteen months by paying $1.25 per acre, and then he can make title immediately to the man in whose interest he has made the entry.

Now, I have always had a tolerant view of the action of these men, who have yielded simply to the necessities of the conditions in the development of an industry that necessarily was conducted upon a large scale. All I can say is that the concentration of these large areas of land necessarily retard the population development of a State. They constitute simply one era in the development of a State; but a subsequent era is desirable and which ought to be marked by an increase of small homes.

Unfortunately, many of them do not realize this fact. They yield very reluctantly to this movement of the settlers; they embarrass it and retard it in every way possible, for they fear the breaking up of their large cattle and sheep ranges.

So when we came to the national irrigation act we not only provided for the reclamation of Government lands but we also realized that intermingling with the Government lands and adjacent to them were large areas of land held in private ownership, and that the development of the country required that those lands should have water just as much as the lands in Government ownership. What we wished to avoid was storing water and distributing it for the advantage of large land owners, and what did we provide? We provided in that act that wherever land was in private ownership the owner of the land could obtain water for only 160 acres.

The result is, that when the distributive system of water is brought in reach of a great area of land the very fact that the water can be secured adds value to the land. The owner of the land finds that he can not water the land himself, because he can only secure a water right for 160 acres. He is therefore induced by self-interest to divide up his land and sell it to actual settlers; and the Government in those instances will grant to each settler a water right for only 160 acres, and compel the gradual repayment of its cost. So the very policy of the Government, as shown in that act, is in the line of breaking up the existing system of land monopoly and of land concentration in that region. Then we guard against future monopoly of Government lands under the irrigation act by allowing entry only under the homestead act, without commutation, thus compelling five years' bona fide residence and cultivation before title can be secured. The land monopolist can not easily twist such an act to his purpose.

Now, we have made another step in the line of progress by the report to and passage in the Senate of the bill to which I have referred—repealing the timber act—and I trust that that act will be passed by the House. There are two acts which remain—the desert-land act and the homestead law. I am of the opinion that so far as the settlement of the future is concerned the homestead law is sufficient. Its very purpose is to create homes. The man who enters land under the homestead law must live upon it for five years and create a home before he can get title: and whilst in many cases it is very convenient for the homesteader to commute at the end of fourteen months by paying a dollar and a quarter an acre for his land, $200 for a quarter section, and getting title, yet in many cases that commutation clause furnishes the machinery by which the man who desires either to maintain an existing concentration of land or who wishes to create one by selecting land upon the various streams and tributaries and thus controlling the public domain around it can carry out his purpose.

So far as I am concerned, I do not wish to take from the home builder any existing method of acquiring a home, but I do wish to prevent men, under the guise of home building, from securing lands which they can turn over to those who desire to concentrate lands in large holdings, when those large holdings practically retard the development of the West and will create an agitation for land reform, such as other countries have witnessed. And so I favor the repeal or the modification of the commutation clause of the homestead act.

So it is with the desert-land act. We originally allowed 640 acres to be entered under the desert-land act, and we have cut that down now to 320 acres, and we require strict proof as to reclamation, etc. I am told by those who seem to be informed on the subject, though I have no personal information myself, that that law has been often evaded, that title has been secured where no actual reclamation has been made, that you will now find large areas of land to which title has been secured under the desert-land act over which ditches have been run ostensibly for the purpose of reclaiming the land, and the ditches are absolutely empty.

Mr. TELLER. I wish the Senator would give us the details where that occurs, so that we might investigate if we should so desire.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I stated that I had no personal knowledge on the subject, but I have heard this statement from many who had the sources of information, and I believe it to be the fact in a great many cases. I doubt whether it is a fact in a very great degree in the State of Colorado, and I do not believe that so far as the State of North Dakota is concerned there has been much evasion of the homestead law. But I believe there has been in the mountain regions, wherever there has been a temptation or an inducement to concentrate these lands in very large holdings for the cattle industry.

Now, so far as the desert-land act is concerned, remember it was passed before the national irrigation act had been passed. It covers practically the same ground. Its purpose was to enable private parties to reclaim desert land.

Under the national irrigation act the Government is going to do that work, and it is going to do it on a very large and comprehensive scale, and where private enterprise will take hold simply of the smaller project, the execution of which might afterwards block the greater project, the Government proposes to inaugurate the greater project and thus include smaller projects.

It seems to me that a comprehensive system of reclaiming the desert lands requires that the United States should be untrammeled in its efforts in this direction, and an intelligent execution of the irrigation act will result in the absolute prevention of land monopoly.

The Geological Survey is proceeding with a very large force of men in all the arid and semiarid States and is working out these engineering problems with a view to the greatest possible development of the West, and I fear that private enterprise under the desert act will simply retard that development instead of advancing it. The fund provided for by that act is ample and is growing every day; and I have no doubt that without further legislation that act will accomplish all that was intended in aiding home building.

I see that the Senator from Iowa is impatient to go on with the appropriation bill. I believe I have already taken up much more time than I ought, so I will yield the floor.

Mr. NEWLANDS subsequently said: I wish to ask unanimous consent to insert in my remarks of to-day on the public-land laws certain remarks made in the recent Utah irrigation congress upon State cooperation in national irrigation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada asks unanimous consent that he may insert in his speech of to-day certain remarks made at the Utah irrigation congress upon State cooperation in irrigation.

Mr. WARREN. May I ask what portion of the remarks made before the Utah convention the Senator proposes to insert—those made by himself?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Simply those made by myself in reference to a statute that is intended to secure cooperation between the States and the National Government on the subject of irrigation. I will say to the Senator that there has been a great deal of inquiry for those remarks and for the Nevada statute passed in aid of such cooperation, which is an appendix thereto. It is intended to be suggestive to other State legislatures in the arid and semiarid region.

Mr. WARREN. I have no objection to the insertion of such remarks as the Senator desires from those he made at the Utah convention, and I presume at a later date others may wish to draw from remarks made by others in the same way as the Senator now proposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. ALLISON. I think, as a rule, we are inserting in the RECORD too many things that are said elsewhere. But I have no objection, of course, to the suggestion of the Senator that a portion of his own remarks made in another place be inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the order is made.

The matter referred to is as follows:

STATE COOPERATION IN NATIONAL IRRIGATION.

[Address of Hon. FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS, of Nevada, at National Irrigation Congress, Ogden, Utah, September 18, 1903.]

MR. PRESIDENT AND GENTLEMEN OF THE ELEVENTH NATIONAL IRRIGATION CONGRESS: It gives me great pleasure to attend a meeting of the irrigation congress in the State of Utah. Eleven years ago, in common with many whose faces I see about me, I attended the first session of the irrigation congress in the Territory of Utah; and we there received the inspiration which through ten years of temporary discouragement and continuous effort sustained us, until we finally placed upon the statute book of the United States an act, not simply providing an appropriation for an individual project, the whole force and strength of the movement to be stayed until the success of that project was demonstrated, but a general and comprehensive law, operating through all time, so long as an acre of land capable of irrigation remained unreclaimed; providing an ample fund for the present and the future, depending in the future upon none of the accidents of legislation or caprice of public policy—a statute which had as its essential spirit and motive home-building, limitation of entry to the amount of land necessary for and capable of supporting a family, and the protection of every irrigation project against the schemes of speculation and monopoly.

It is fitting, therefore, as the first irrigation congress was held in the State which, under the guidance of Brigham Young, gave to the country an illustration of the beneficial effects of irrigation, that this congress, called together after the passage of that triumphant act, should meet here for the purpose of deliberation and counsel as to the best method of carrying it into effect and of securing its comprehensive and beneficent administration. That the Government of the United States, representing the entire people, has done everything that statute can do to forward this great work is evident by a review of its provisions. It provides a perpetual reclamation fund in the Treasury, derived from the sale of public lands in thirteen States and three Territories. These receipts are forever dedicated to irrigation. The receipts of this year, of next year, of all the future years, are appropriated now to the construction of irrigation works. We have the unit of entry fixed at the number of acres capable of supporting a family—from 40 to 160, according to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior. We have provided that only those can obtain title who live upon the land for five years and reclaim the land. The commutation clause of the homestead act, which has been the means of fraud in the securing of land titles throughout this entire region, is repealed, so far as the lands coming under this act are concerned; and residence for five years—honest work for five years—is required as the condition of title. Thus this work is dedicated forever to the home builders.

Then as to the water rights. The Government stores the water, accumulates it in vast reservoirs, leads it out from the reservoirs in great ditches, brings it within the reach of the settler, and then grants him a water right, payable in ten years without interest, in annual installments of one-tenth each. Then the Government for all time will administer these great reservoirs, surrendering, however, final control of individual projects to a government of home rule, created by the settlers themselves, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. The existing landowner, also, is not neglected. The sentiment which at first prevailed that this act should be applied only to Government lands was overcome, and we have a provision, ample and comprehensive in its character, which permits the Interior Department to grant water rights as to land now in private ownership.

But even there it secures the country against the evils of concentration of land in single ownership and of land monopoly; for instead of selling the large landowner a water right covering his entire tract, the act provides that the right can be granted for 160 acres only. But whilst the large landowner can secure a water right for only 160 acres, he can divide his tract into 160-acre farms, and each grantee can buy from the Government a water right, payable in ten annual installments, and thus large tracts of land in private ownership to-day, lacking the water sufficient to give them value, and for that reason lacking a market, will be brought into the market. The owners will be able to dispose of them by subdivision into 160-acre farms, for the Government stands behind ready to sell each grantee of the large landowner a right for water which will be perpetually appurtenant to his farm. We have given those who now own large tracts of land and are land poor a chance to realize money for land, and at the same time we have created, in this very act, by these provisions appealing to the self-interest of these large land proprietors, the machinery that will force and compel the subdivision of these great areas of land now standing in single ownership and constituting a menace to the development of our States and Territories.

The National Government has done everything. The National Government stands as the benefactor. We stand as the beneficiaries, present and prospective. What can we, the beneficiaries, do, then, to sustain and support the Government in its great work? This involves the question of State cooperation in national irrigation. I take it that it is the sense of every man in this Congress that no means should be neglected of securing the friendly aid of the Government in each State and Territory. I take it for granted that the spirit of cooperation exists everywhere. The only question is, How can that spirit be shown and demonstrated? Let me say a few words upon that subject and give you from time to time illustrations derived from the experience of my own State.

In the first place, I contend that we can do much in the shape of friendly legislation. What does the Government propose to do? It proposes, upon every river in this region where the water supply is insufficient during the period of cultivation, and where that water supply can be increased during the period of cultivation, by storage, to construct reservoir and irrigation works for the purpose not only of filling out and completing existing rights which are insufficient, but to aid in the building up and development of the State by bringing new areas now arid and unproductive into cultivation and productiveness. In doing this work it finds that land is already under cultivation, that water has already been appropriated, that water rights already exist, and it becomes a matter of importance for the Federal Government to ascertain the area of that cultivation, the nature of those rights, the extent of those appropriations, and the economy exercised in the use of water, and it is called upon to determine these problems, first, in order to determine the financial problem as to how extensive the contemplated work should be, how large the area of new land which it shall cover, and the extent of the available water supply.

To reduce these to mathematical exactness, inquiry into existing water rights, their extent and nature, is an essential part of the great irrigation work. These water rights exist under State laws, under domestic laws relating to appropriation of water; and the question of beneficial use largely depends upon State laws, whether that use shall be in the highest degree economic, enabling the utilization of the largest area of lands, or extravagant and wasteful, minimizing the beneficent action of this law. Therefore the State should cooperate with the Federal Government in the ascertainment of these facts and aid it in that work in every way possible. Such is the spirit in my own State. Fortunately we have there no code of laws relating to stream control. We have no board of control, no board of engineers, no officials likely to antagonize the Federal work. We have no system to which the people themselves are wedded by custom. We therefore determined to do the best thing we could to welcome the National Government into the domain of that State and to show in every way by our legislation that we cooperated with it in the great work.

At the last session of the Nevada legislature committees on irrigation were appointed by the senate and assembly, which met in joint conference. They did me the honor to invite me to take part in their deliberations, and, with the water laws of neighboring States before us, we started upon our work. Before closing it we had a joint conference of both houses of the legislature, at which Governor Sparks presided, and many of us presented our views in a tentative way, inviting suggestion and opinion. It was pointed out that the National Government stood in the position of a projector not of an enterprise intended for its profit, but of a great scheme of internal improvement, intended to develop the arid West on broad and comprehensive lines, and in such a way as to avert the evils of land monopoly and to promote the division of the public domain into homes for the advancing army of settlers; that it intended no injury to existing users of water, but, on the contrary, to recognize and secure them, whilst at the same time saving the torrential waters and holding them for use, both in the old and the new settlements, until the time when they would be most needed. The result of this conference was a general expression to the effect that the National Government should receive the cooperation of the State in its work, and that everything possible should be done by helpful State legislation to avoid unnecessary friction between State and Federal officials; to adopt some system by which existing rights could be ascertained and regulated; to institute some degree of stream control, so that the Government could know what water belonged to private users and what was necessary to make their existing rights full and sufficient and what would be available by proper storage and stream control and economical use for new projects, and thus to weld the State and Federal officials into one cooperative machine, working for the common good. And so we drew and the legislature passed an act on these lines, in the preamble of which we put the entire national irrigation act, section by section, and declared that it was the purpose of the State of Nevada to cooperate with the Federal Government in every way; that while the work of construction was going on unity of stream control was essential.

It is just and proper that the Federal Government should have some degree of supervision over the stream whose flow it is largely augmenting, and public policy requires that the State should advance in every way the efforts of the Federal Government. And so under this act the State of Nevada, through its governor, appoints the State engineer, upon the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior. The governor can reject the nomination of the Secretary of the Interior and compel another nomination, but the man when finally appointed must be recommended by the Secretary of the Interior. We thus obtain a man upon whom the judgment of both the National Government and the highest State official has united as the man best fitted for the place. We also provide for the organization of the State board of irrigation, consisting of the governor, attorney-general, and surveyor-general, with the State engineer as a fourth member. I was recently present at a meeting of the State board of irrigation in which these four officials sat—three of them officials of the State, the other an official of the State recommended by the National Government—all engaged in harmonious discussion regarding these projects for the development and advancement of the State.

Under this law the State engineer is charged with the duty of making a list of priorities. That is not a judicial action. It is simply executive and administrative. Some one must make a list of these water claims; some one must write them down in the order of priority. We assigned that duty to the State engineer; but we provided that any water user taking exception to the list prepared could go into court, make all other water users and the State engineer party to the action, and determine his right, the purpose of this being to secure every man his existing vested rights.

The State engineer is permitted to appoint as assistant engineers men who shall be recommended to him by the Secretary of the Interior, and he is now availing himself of the services of a number of hydrographers, scientific skilled men in the employ of the United States Geological Survey, acting as assistants to the State engineer. These Federal engineers act for the State, though it involves no expense to the State. The State thus has a corps consisting of a chief engineer and assistant engineers, the chief and the first assistant paid by the State, the others paid by the Federal Government, all commissioned by the State to inquire into this question of existing water rights and map the claims of the different users. In our State we found that whenever we attempted to pass a bill providing for the ascertainment of water rights, it was a matter of great vexation to the farmers.

The man who cultivates the soil, as a rule, stands in dread of a statute. If he finds he is compelled by that statute to make a statement of his claim, to have a survey made of the area of land covered by it, to have a map made of his ditch and land, he stands aghast. It involves with him the employment of a lawyer, an engineer, and much vexation of spirit. We have passed one or two laws in the history of the State and have been compelled by the popular clamor to repeal them before they went into effect. In this case the purpose of the act was to make that work easy for the settlers themselves, to give them the friendly aid and cooperation of the Federal Government, and as the result of this act the Government hydrographers, acting as assistant State engineers, move about among the farmers, ascertain their rights, explain the law, do away with the misapprehension that existed in their minds, and perform a real service to the farmers without expense to them. The result is that when the work is done each settler will simply sign his name to the record made by the Government engineers—a record made in all honesty. And while there may be some contention, my judgment is that in this process of personal instruction and personal presentation that is going on throughout the entire State, all difficulties in this matter will entirely disappear.

Then we have provided for district commissioners. These are to act after the rights are ascertained; to act on each stream according to this list of priorities, and to serve each man his water according to his right, and to serve the Government and its grantees their water according to their rights. We think that it would be grossly impudent in us to claim that State officials alone should undertake to carry out this work. Take the Truckee River, for instance, upon which one of the projects recommended by the Interior Department is now being constructed. There we have only 40,000 acres under cultivation. The crystal waters of that stream, issuing from the mountains, rush through our valley in a turbulent stream when the waters are not needed, and the stream is reduced to a thread when the waters are most needed. Mathematical computation has shown that if these waters are properly stored and conserved, this area of reclamation of 40,000 acres now existing, and which has reached its limit under present conditions, will be extended to seven or eight hundred thousand acres; and the project now under contemplation involves the actual watering of over 300,000 acres.

Think of that! The existing settlers have water for the use of 40,000 acres: the Government is about to create water there that will supply seven or eight hundred thousand acres. Would it not be colossal effrontery upon the part of the owners of that 40,000 acres to demand that they should have the absolute control over the stream: that Uncle Sam should be compelled to spend millions of dollars in storing water and absolutely lose all control of it as soon as it disappears from the reservoirs? It was in the spirit of amity and cooperation that we provided that the water commissioners under that statute should be recommended by the Secretary of the Interior, and we had two purposes in view: One was that it was but just to give the creator of the majority of the water something to say regarding the administration of it, and the other was we felt assured it would be for the benefit of our own people to have such men as are in the geological service—trained engineers, experienced men, and, above all, impartial men—administer the control of the stream.

I remember when we were framing this act I felt there would be some hesitation on the part of the people with reference to this matter: that a provision that I thought just might appear to them to be, as it was termed by some one, a surrender of the sovereignty of the State, and I questioned a farmer who was on the committee as to what system of water administration he would prefer; whether he preferred a system of home rule, in which the voters of the community would select the water commissioners, or that they should be appointed by the governor, or be appointed by the governor upon the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior, thus utilizing the great national forces in this work. He was puzzled for a moment, and then said: "Well, if the governor appoints, that may be politics; and if we appoint, it will be a fight between the upper stream and the lower stream, between ditch A and ditch B, as to who shall select the water commission. We can't trust each other, but we can all trust Uncle Sam."

Now, this act is upon our statute books. It is now being administered without friction. While I can not expect all States of this region, which have, through much toil and trouble, worked out a system of legislation regarding stream control, to abandon their chosen method and adopt ours, I yet take the liberty of suggesting that there are many things in this act, and particularly in the spirit of this act, that can be emulated by our sister States and Territories. I was glad to see that President Roosevelt, when recently in Nevada, referred to this act as a model of legislation for other States.

I wish to say a word to the State of California, in which I lived for many years and with whose prosperity that of Nevada is strongly identified. I observed that during the last session of the legislature they were in contention there regarding a State irrigation law intended to determine existing rights and to secure the proper administration of stream control: and that there the south was against the north: the north was against the south; the large interests against the smaller; and the interests which now controlled the scanty water supply were fearful that the enlarged water supply of the future might not be administered to their advantage, and the result was that the bill failed. I have nothing to say either in defense or criticism of that bill. All I can say is that it is a pity that some bill for the ascertainment of existing rights and for the administration of stream control for regulation and economical use of water was not passed. The people of California can not expect the Government of the United States to have no authority in this matter.

As an individual, I say they have no right to expect the Federal Government to come within their boundaries and do this great work for the development of their State and the increase of its population unless that State is at peace with itself. California is to-day struggling with extraordinary difficulties. The streams which flow from the Sierra Nevada Mountains to the ocean have been appropriated over and over again. The utmost limit, I believe, of cultivation under existing conditions has been reached. Hundreds and thousands of acres of land have been sold in that State, with supposed water rights attached, which under existing conditions do not furnish sufficient water to permit of cultivation. The forests of that State have been largely cut down. The snows in the mountains, which, protected by the forests, once constituted natural storage reservoirs of water, now melt rapidly. Torrential streams come now where the water used to flow equally and gradually, and the development of the State of California absolutely depends upon the conservation of these waste waters, vast in quantity, that now make their way to the ocean.

These projects are all expensive. Two or three of them involve more than $2,000,000 each. So the problem is a difficult one; and in addition to that is the fact that in that State there is little public land left. The very primary purpose of this act was to irrigate public land, and connected with that was the power to irrigate private lands; the purpose of the act was to protect existing settlements, as well as to create new ones. But as long as the private land owners are in contention as to the method of stream administration, how can the Government of the United States, without any public lands to which it can apply its waters, be safe in expending millions of dollars, unless the State of California shows the spirit of cooperation that has been shown by this Nevada statute and invites the Federal Government within its boundaries, and by State law protects it in the administration of stream control?

The reasoning which I have applied to that State would apply to others. It applies to every community, particularly where existing water rights are insufficient and where Government aid is required to complete them; and I urge upon all of you when you go back to your homes to raise this question as to harmonizing your State laws with the Federal purpose and of extending to the Federal Government a cordial invitation and cooperation. We can also aid in other matters in the public sentiment prevailing regarding our land laws. Unfortunately the land laws of this country have been maladministered in many cases. The purpose of the Government was always beneficent, but the laws have been so maladministered in some cases as to tend to land monopoly. Every movement for the reform of these land laws is met with opposition from our region; opposition many times honest and often interested. Let us see to it that the reform legislation of the future regarding these lands is not aimed against us by an indignant East, but is framed by a candid West.

I have nothing particular to say regarding the discussion now going on as to the propriety of repealing some of these laws. My mind is not fully made up, because I have not thoroughly investigated; but I apprehend, from all I have heard, that there must be faults both in the law itself and in the administration which must be corrected, otherwise I can not understand the difference in opinion between the Congressman from Wyoming, who stands up for the present system, and the Senator from Montana, who insists that the system is iniquitous and that our lands are being absorbed by speculators and monopolists. The same laws exist in both States. Are we to infer, then, that the law is well administered in Wyoming and badly administered in Montana. But how can we assume that when the law is administered by the same officials, the same land department of the United States. I assume, therefore, when Mr. MONDELL says no such cases of fraud have been brought to his attention that he is entirely sincere in his statement, and I assume when Senator GIBSON says that numerous cases of fraud and monopoly have been brought to his attention that he knows what he is talking about. And so I must assume that there are abuses to be corrected, and all I can say now is that the people of this region should enter upon that inquiry with impartial and candid minds and with the determination to guard well the development of the future.

Now, my friends, we all listened with delight to Commander Booth-Tucker, of the Salvation Army, when he presented that magnificent address, so business-like in character, and yet adorned by humor, wit, and fancy in the highest degree. I think there was not one of us who did not feel his pulse stir. I think there was not one who did not feel that Utopia was almost within realization. We have a vast domain here, aggregating more than one-third of the entire area of the United States, that is capable of sustaining a vast population. We have passed through an era of development which in itself is educational. We know, or ought to know, the evils we are to avoid. We ought to know that this place should be made the home not of concentrated wealth but of distributed wealth. We know we have to do with the making of a policy that will create individual homes throughout this entire region, that will make the home the very basis of our educational, social, and business life. This act is a step in that direction. Through the beneficent operation of that act, under a beneficent government, we may well expect to reach out for and accomplish all that the imagination and the logic and the reasoning power of Commander Booth-Tucker have depicted; but this work rests with us. We are the people who are to instruct the East as to legislation relating to the West. We are the people who are to see to it that this law is wisely administered. We are the people who are to extend the hand of welcome and fellowship to the Federal Government; and if we simply pursue the spirit of cooperation, and permit that spirit to take possession of us, animating us everywhere in the development and upbuilding of this great region, the future will have no word of reproach against this generation.

APPENDIX.

THE NEVADA STATUTE.

An act providing for the cooperation of the State of Nevada with the Secretary of the Interior of the United States in the construction and administration of irrigation works for the reclamation of arid lands in the State of Nevada, for the measurement, appropriation, and distribution of water, determination of water rights, preserving and certifying records thereof, creating offices for the enforcement hereof, defining the tenure of office, powers, and duties, and fixing their compensation; providing for penalties for infringements hereof, and enacting a standard measure of water, and conferring upon the Secretary of the Interior such rights and powers under the laws of Nevada as are necessary to enable him to carry out and execute an act of the Congress of the United States, approved June 17, 1902, entitled "An act appropriating the receipts from the sale and disposal of public lands in certain States and Territories to the construction of irrigation works for the reclamation of arid lands," approved February 16, 1903.

Whereas the Congress of the United States did, by an act approved June 17, 1902, enact the following law:

"Be it enacted, etc., That all moneys received from the sale and disposal of public lands in Arizona, California, Colorado, Idaho, Kansas, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Dakota, Utah, Washington, and Wyoming, beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, including the surplus of fees and commissions in excess of allowances to registers and receivers, and excepting the 5 per cent of the proceeds of the sales of public lands in the above States set aside by the law for educational and other purposes, shall be, and the same are hereby, reserved, set aside, and appropriated as a special fund in the Treasury to be known as the 'reclamation fund,' to be used in the examination and survey for and the construction and maintenance of irrigation works for the storage, diversion, and development of waters for the reclamation of arid and semiarid lands in the said States and Territories, and for the payment of all other expenditures provided for in this act: Provided, That in case the receipts from the sale and disposal of public lands other than those realized from the sale and disposal of lands referred to in this section are insufficient to meet the requirements for the support of agricultural colleges in the several States and Territories, under the act of August 30, 1890, entitled 'An act to apply a portion of the proceeds of the public lands to the more complete endowment and support of the colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts, established under the provisions of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862,' the deficiency, if any, in the sum necessary for the support of said colleges shall be provided for from any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

"SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to make examinations and surveys for, and to locate and construct, as herein provided, irrigation works for the storage, diversion, and development of waters, including artesian wells, and to report to Congress at the beginning of each regular session as to the results of such examinations and surveys, giving estimates of cost of all contemplated works, the quantity and location of the lands which can be irrigated therefrom, and all tracts relative to the practicability of each irrigation project; also the cost of works in process of construction as well as of those which have been completed.

"SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior shall, before giving the public notice provided for in section 4 of this act, withdraw from public entry the lands required for any irrigation works contemplated under the provisions of this act, and shall restore to public entry any of the lands so withdrawn when, in his judgment, such lands are not required for the purpose of this act; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, at or immediately prior to the time of beginning the surveys for any contemplated irrigation works, to withdraw from entry, except under the homestead laws, any public lands believed to be susceptible of irrigation from said works: Provided, That all lands entered and entries made under the homestead laws within areas so withdrawn during such withdrawal shall be subject to all the provisions, limitations, charges, terms, and conditions of this act; that said surveys shall be prosecuted diligently to completion, and upon completion thereof, and of the necessary maps, plans, and estimates of cost, the Secretary of the Interior shall determine whether or not said project is practicable or advisable, and if determined to be impracticable or unadvisable he shall thereupon restore said lands to entry; that public lands which it is proposed to irrigate by means of any contemplated works shall be subject to entry only under the provisions of the homestead laws in tracts of not less than 40 or more than 160 acres, and shall be subject to the limitations, charges, terms, and conditions herein provided: Provided, that the commutation provisions of the homestead laws shall not apply to entries made under this act.

"SEC. 4. That upon the determination by the Secretary of the Interior that any irrigation project is practicable, he may cause to be let contracts for the construction of the same, in such portions or sections as it may be practicable to construct and complete as parts of the whole project, providing the necessary funds for such portions or sections are available in the reclamation fund, and thereupon he shall give public notice of the lands irrigable under such project, and limit of area per entry, which limit shall represent the acreage which, in the opinion of the Secretary, may be reasonably required for the support of a family upon the lands in question; also of the charges which shall be made per acre upon said entries, and upon lands in private ownership which may be irrigated by the waters of the said irrigation project, and the number of annual installments, not exceeding ten, in which said charges shall be paid, and the time when such payments shall commence. The said charges shall be determined with a view of returning to the reclamation fund the estimated cost of construction of the project, and shall be apportioned equitably: Provided, That in all construction work eight hours shall constitute a day's work, and no Mongolian labor shall be employed thereon.

"SEC. 5. That the entryman upon lands to be irrigated by such works shall, in addition to compliance with the homestead laws, reclaim at least one-half of the total irrigable area of his entry for agricultural purposes, and before receiving patent for the land covered by his entry shall pay to the Government the charges apportioned against such tract, as provided in section 4. No right to the use of water for land in private ownership shall be sold for a tract exceeding 160 acres to any one landowner, and no such sale shall be made to any landowner, unless he be an actual bona fide resident on such land, or occupant thereof residing in the neighborhood of said land, and no such right shall permanently attach until all payments therefor are made. The annual installments shall be paid to the receiver of the local land office of the district in which the land is situated, and a failure to make any two payments when due shall render the entry subject to cancellation, with the forfeiture of all rights under this act, as well as of any moneys already paid thereon. All moneys received from the above sources shall be paid into the reclamation fund. Registers and receivers shall be allowed the usual commissions on all moneys paid for lands entered under this act.

"SEC. 6. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to use the reclamation fund for the operation and maintenance of all reservoirs and irrigation works constructed under the provisions of this act: Provided, That when the payments required by this act are made for the major portion of the lands irrigated from the waters of any of the works herein provided for, then the management and operation of such irrigation works shall pass to the owners of the lands irrigated thereby, to be maintained at their expense under such form of organization and under such rules and regulations as may be acceptable to the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That the title to and the management and operation of the reservoirs and the works necessary for their protection and operation shall remain in the Government until otherwise provided by Congress.

"SEC. 7. That where in carrying out the provisions of this act it becomes necessary to acquire any rights or property, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to acquire the same for the United States by purchase or by condemnation under judicial process, and to pay from the reclamation fund the sums which may be needed for that purpose, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General of the United States, upon every application of the Secretary of the Interior under this act, to cause proceedings to be commenced for condemnation within thirty days from the receipt of the application at the Department of Justice.

"SEC. 8. That nothing in this act shall be construed as affecting or intending to affect or to in any way interfere with the laws of any State or Territory relating to the control, appropriation, use, or distribution of water used in irrigation, or any vested right acquired thereunder, and the Secretary of the Interior, in carrying out the provisions of this act, shall proceed in conformity with such laws, and nothing herein shall in any way affect any right of any State or of the Federal Government or of any landowner, appropriator, or user of water in, to, or from any interstate stream of the waters thereof: Provided, That the right to the use of water acquired under the provisions of this act shall be appurtenant to the land irrigated, and beneficial use shall be the basis, the measure, and the limit of the right.

"SEC. 9. That it is hereby declared to be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior in carrying out the provisions of this act, so far as the same may be practicable and subject to the existence of feasible irrigation projects, to expend the major portion of the funds arising from the sale of public lands within each State and Territory hereinbefore named for the benefit of arid and semiarid lands within the limits of such State or Territory: Provided, That the Secretary may temporarily use such portion of said funds for the benefit of arid or semiarid lands in any particular State or Territory hereinbefore named as he may deem advisable, but when so used the excess shall be restored to the fund as soon as practicable, to the end that ultimately, and in any event, within each ten-year period after the passage of this act, the expenditures for the benefit of the said States and Territories shall be equalized according to the proportions and subject to the conditions as to practicability and feasibility aforesaid.

"SEC. 10. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to perform any and all acts and to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary and proper for the purpose of carrying the provisions of this act into full force and effect."

And

Whereas the Secretary of the Interior of the United States, acting by and through the United States Geological Survey, has entered upon the examination, survey, and location of irrigation works on the Truckee, Carson, Walker, and Humboldt rivers, in the State of Nevada, as provided for in section 2 of said act, and is or soon will be prepared to let contracts for the same as provided in section 4 of said act; and

Whereas a sum approximating $10,000,000 is now collected in a special fund in the Treasury of the United States, known as the "reclamation fund" referred to in section 1 of said act, and is applicable to the construction and maintenance of irrigation works for the reclamation of arid and semiarid lands in the arid and semiarid States and Territories, and it is desirable that a portion thereof be immediately applied to the construction, maintenance, and operation of irrigation works in and for the State of Nevada; and

Whereas it is estimated by the United States Geological Survey that the waters of the Truckee River, now irrigating only 42,000 acres of land in Nevada, can, by conservation and economical use, be made to supply 280,000 acres; and the Carson River, now irrigating in Nevada only 50,000 acres, can, by conservation and economical use, be made to supply 175,000 acres; and that the waters of the Walker River, now irrigating 40,000 acres in Nevada, can, by conservation and economical use, be made to supply 200,000 acres; and that the waters of the Humboldt River, now irrigating in whole or in part 300,000 acres, can, by conservation and economical use, be made to supply 750,000 acres; thus increasing the total irrigated area of the aforesaid rivers from 432,000 acres to 1,405,000 acres of land in the State of Nevada, thus vastly increasing its population and wealth; and

Whereas similar work of examination, survey, and location is being done in other arid and semiarid States and Territories, and each and every of said States and Territories is applying to the Secretary of the Interior for the immediate commencement of work and construction; and

Whereas it is within the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior to expend the whole or any part of said fund in any arid or semiarid State or Territory; and

Whereas it is understood to be the disposition of the Secretary of the Interior to commence work immediately upon such irrigation projects as are feasible and along the lines of least resistance, and which are located in such States and Territories as indicate by their laws and the action of their public officers the best spirit of cooperation and helpfulness; and

Whereas in section 6 of said act the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to use the said reclamation fund for the operation and maintenance of all reservoirs and irrigation works constructed under the provisions of said act: Provided, That when the payments required thereby are made for the major portion of the lands irrigated from the waters of any of the works therein provided for, then the management and operation of such irrigation works shall pass to the owners of the lands irrigated thereby, to be maintained at their expense under such form of organization and under such rules and regulations as may be acceptable to the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That the title to and the management and operation of the reservoirs and the works necessary for their protection and operation shall remain in the Government of the United States until otherwise provided by Congress; and

Whereas it is deemed advisable by the State of Nevada that during the period of the construction of such works in or for the State of Nevada by the Federal Government, and during the operation, management, and maintenance thereof by the Federal Government, unity of control of the river on which such works are constructed is essential, and it is desirable that such unity of control be exercised by the Secretary of the Interior until the management, operation, and maintenance of such works shall pass to the owners of the lands irrigated thereby, as provided in section 6 of said act; and

Whereas it may become necessary for the Secretary of the Interior in carrying out the provisions of said act to proceed to condemn rights or property in the State of Nevada, and it is desirable that every facility should be given to the Secretary of the Interior for the speedy adjudication of such proceedings in the courts of Nevada; and

Whereas it is expressly declared by section 8 of said act that nothing therein shall be construed as in any way interfering with the laws of any State or Territory relating to control, appropriation, use, distribution of water used in irrigation, or any vested right acquired thereunder; and

Whereas it is the purpose of the Secretary of the Interior not to impair or injure vested rights, but on the contrary to confirm the same, and to provide by storage such an abundance of water as to make such vested rights more full, certain, and assured in their beneficial operation than at present; and

Whereas it is essential that the Secretary of the Interior, before proceeding to actual construction on any river in Nevada, shall be informed as to the extent of the present actual appropriation and beneficial use of water by existing communities, in order that the Secretary of the Interior may be informed as to what quantity of water will be necessary to fully supply existing uses, and what quantity of water will be available for the supply of new lands and new uses; and

Whereas it is the desire of the State of Nevada to cooperate in every way with the Secretary of the Interior in the construction, operation, management, and maintenance of irrigation works in the State of Nevada under said act, and it is to the interest of the State of Nevada that every inducement should be held out to the Secretary of the Interior by cooperation and helpful State legislation to enter upon the work of construction, operation, management, and maintenance as aforesaid: Now, therefore,

The people of the State of Nevada, represented in senate and assembly, do enact as follows:

SECTION 1. All natural water courses and natural lakes and the waters thereof which are not held in private ownership belong to the public and are subject to appropriation for a beneficial use, and the right to the use of water so appropriated for irrigation shall be appurtenant to the land irrigated, and beneficial use shall be the basis, the measure, and the limit of the right. The use of all water now appropriated, or that may hereafter be appropriated, is hereby declared to be a public use.

SEC. 2. The maximum quantity of water which may be appropriated or used for irrigation purposes in the State of Nevada shall not exceed 3 acre-feet per year for each acre of land supplied.

SEC. 3. The office of State engineer is hereby created. He shall be appointed by the governor, and shall receive a salary not exceeding $2,400 per annum, payable in equal monthly installments by the State treasurer upon warrants drawn by the State controller. He shall keep his office at the State capitol. No person shall be appointed as such State engineer who does not have such training in hydraulic engineering and such practical skill and experience as shall fit him for the position; nor shall any person be so appointed save upon the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior or the Director of the United States Geological Survey, unless after thirty days' notice to such officials they shall fail to make such recommendation. He shall hold his office at the pleasure of the governor, but his successor shall, in all cases, have the foregoing qualifications and recommendations. He shall not be permitted to accept any private employment.

SEC. 4. Before entering upon the duties of his office the State engineer shall take and subscribe an official oath such as is provided by law for said officers before some officer authorized by the law of the State to administer oaths, and shall file with the secretary of state said oath and his official bond in the penal sum of $5,000, with not less than two sureties, to be approved by the governor of the State, and conditioned for the faithful discharge of his official duties, and for the delivery to his successor, or other person appointed by the governor to receive the same, all moneys, books, and other property belonging to the State then in his hands and under his control or with which he may be chargeable as such officer.

SEC. 5. The State engineer shall perform such duties as are prescribed herein. He shall become conversant with the State and the needs of the State as to irrigation matters, and in his reports to the governor he shall make such suggestions as to the amendment of existing laws or the enactment of new laws as his information and experience shall suggest, and he shall keep in his office full and proper records of his work, observations, and calculations, all of which shall be the property of the State. He shall cooperate with the Secretary of the Interior in all work of construction, operation, maintenance, and management of irrigation works constructed by the Secretary of the Interior in and for the benefit of Nevada, under an act of Congress of the United States approved June 17, 1902, entitled "An act appropriating the receipts from the sale and disposal of public lands in certain States and Territories to the construction of irrigation works for the reclamation of arid lands," and shall in every way facilitate the work of the Secretary of the Interior in carrying out the provisions of said act in the State of Nevada.

SEC. 6. The State engineer shall have the power to employ an assistant engineer at an expense not to exceed $1,200 per annum, and to employ other assistants at a total additional expense not to exceed $500 per annum; such assistant engineer and such additional assistants to be paid out of any money appropriated for that purpose, on the certificate of the State engineer and the approval of the State board of examiners. He may also appoint as assistant engineers and as additional assistants such persons in the service of the United States Geological Survey as may be designated by the Secretary of the Interior or the Director of the United States Geological Survey; but such assistant engineers and such additional assistants shall be entitled to no pay from the State of Nevada.

SEC. 7. When the State engineer or his assistant engineer is called away from his office he shall be entitled to his actual traveling expenses, which shall be paid out of any money appropriated for that purpose, on the certificate of said State engineer approved by the State board of examiners.

SEC. 8. The State engineer shall prepare and render to the governor biennially, and oftener if required, full and true reports of his work touching all the matters and duties devolving upon him by virtue of his office, which report shall be delivered to the governor on or before the 31st day of December of the year preceding the regular session of the legislature.

SEC. 9. Such State engineer shall prepare for each stream in the State of Nevada a list of the appropriations of water according to priority, and in order to make such list he shall inclose to each person having a claim to the waters of such stream a blank form on which said claimant shall present in writing all the particulars showing the amounts and dates of appropriations to the use of water of said stream to which he lays claim, the said statement to include the following:

The name and address of the claimant.

The nature of the use on which the claim for an appropriation is based.

The time of the commencement of such use, and if distributing works are required.

The date of beginning of survey.

The date of beginning of construction.

The date when completed.

The date of beginning and completion of enlargements.

The dimensions of the ditch as originally constructed and as enlarged.

The date when water was first used for irrigation or other beneficial purposes and, if used for irrigation, the amount of land regained or irrigated the first year; the amount in subsequent years, with the dates of reclamation, and the amount of land such ditch is capable of irrigating. The character of the soil and the kind of crops cultivated, and such other facts as will show a compliance with the law in acquiring the appropriation and the rank of priority claimed.

SEC. 10. Each of said claimants shall be required to certify to his statements under oath, and any officer authorized to administer oaths is hereby authorized to administer such oath.

SEC. 11. The failure of any claimant to make such a sworn statement within sixty days after notice that such statement is required by the State engineer shall be punishable as a misdemeanor on the complaint of the State engineer or any of his assistants.

SEC. 12. It shall be the duty of the State engineer or some qualified assistant as soon as practicable to make an examination of such stream and the works diverting therefrom, said examination to include the measurement of the discharge of said stream unless adequate proof is available from the measurements made by the United States Government, and of the carrying capacity of the various ditches and canals diverting water therefrom; an examination of the irrigated lands, and an approximate measurement of the lands irrigated or susceptible of irrigation from the various ditches and canals, which said observations and measurements shall be reduced to writing and made a matter of record in his office, and it shall be the duty of the State engineer to make or cause to be made a map or plat on a scale of not less than 1 inch to the mile, showing with substantial accuracy the course of said stream, the location of each ditch or canal diverting water therefrom, and the legal subdivisions of lands which have been irrigated or which are susceptible of irrigation from the ditches and canals already constructed. In performing such work the State engineer or his assistant may avail himself of the works, records, and information of the United States Geological Survey.

SEC. 13. Within thirty days after the preparation of the list of priorities of appropriation of the use of waters of any stream it shall be the duty of the State engineer to issue to each person, association, or corporation represented in such list a certificate, to be signed by said State engineer, setting forth the name and post-office address of the appropriator, the priority number of such appropriation, the amount of water appropriated, and amount of prior appropriations, and, if such appropriations be for irrigation, a description of the legal subdivisions of the lands to which said water is to be applied. And he shall also send such certified list, by registered mail, to the county recorder of the county in which such appropriations shall have been made, as well as to the county recorder of the county in which the waters appropriated are used, and it shall be the duty of said county recorder, within ten days after the receipt of such certificate, to record the same in a book specially prepared and kept for that purpose, and the fee for such record shall be fixed by the governor and shall be allowed and paid by the board of examiners out of funds in the treasury applicable thereto.

SEC. 14. Any party, or number of parties, acting jointly, who may feel themselves aggrieved by the determination of the State engineer, may bring an action in any court having jurisdiction against such State engineer and all persons having interests adverse to the party or parties bringing the action to have their respective rights determined. Such action must be brought within two years after the record of such list of priorities of appropriation has been recorded. Such action shall be tried as speedily as possible, and the court is hereby authorized to employ a hydraulic engineer or other expert to examine and make report under oath upon any subject-matter in controversy, the cost of such employment to be equitably apportioned by the court and charged against the parties to the suit as costs.

SEC. 15. The water commissioners hereafter provided shall make apportionment of the waters of such stream according to the list of priorities recorded as aforesaid, unless such list be corrected by the judgment of some court having jurisdiction of the subject-matter.

SEC. 16. Within sixty days from the passage of this act it shall be the duty of the county recorder in each of the counties of this State to prepare a full and complete transcript of all the claims and appropriations of water now on file in their respective offices, and to transmit the same, without delay, to the State engineer by express or registered mail. It shall also be the duty of the clerk of each district court in the State, within thirty days of the passage of this act, to transmit to the State engineer, in like manner, certified copies of all decrees of said district courts affecting water rights on file in the offices of the said clerks of the said district courts of the State. The State engineer shall also obtain copies of all decrees of the United States court for the district of Nevada affecting water rights. Said recorders and said clerks of the said State district courts shall receive, in compensations for their services in the preparation of said transcripts and copies, 12½ cents per folio, which shall be paid by the county in which such court is situated; and the same allowance shall be made for certified copies of decrees of the United States court for the district of Nevada, and shall be paid out of the State treasury.

SEC. 17. The State engineer shall be a member of the State board of irrigation created by an act of the legislature of the State of Nevada approved March 16, 1901, entitled "An act to provide for the measurement of streams, the survey of reservoir sites, the determination of irrigation possibilities, and for the best methods of controlling and utilizing the water resources of the State of Nevada in cooperation with the United States Geological Survey and the United States Department of Agriculture and the Nevada Experiment Station." The said State engineer shall be the secretary of said board of irrigation and shall keep the records thereof in his office.

SEC. 18. The said board of irrigation shall divide the State of Nevada into such water divisions or water districts as seem to it advisable, and may change the same from time to time. It may appoint water commissioners whose duty it shall be to measure and divide amongst the appropriators the water of such streams according to priority of right and the amount to which each is entitled. It may make such rules and regulations as to it shall seem advisable for the proper and economical administration of the waters of such streams, and may fix penalties for the violation of such rules and regulations. Such appointment as water commissioners shall be made upon the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior or the United States Geological Survey, and may include persons in the service of the United States Geological Survey; but if after thirty days' notice the Secretary of the Interior or the said Geological Survey shall fail to make such recommendation, it shall have the power to appoint such commissioners without such recommendation.

SEC. 19. The board of irrigation shall determine the number and compensation of the water commissioners appointed under this act, and said water commissioners shall be and act under the direction of the State engineer. The compensation of said water commissioners shall be paid, upon the approval of the board of irrigation, by the county in which the work of such commissioners is performed, in the same manner as other county bills are presented and allowed.

SEC. 20. Any person interfering with, obstructing, or resisting the State engineer, assistant State engineer, or any water commissioner in the performance of his duty or duties, as prescribed by this act, or by the rules or regulations adopted by the board of irrigation, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor.

SEC. 21. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and empowered to institute proceedings in any of the courts of the State of Nevada for the condemnation of any rights of property deemed by him to be necessary for any of the works to be constructed by him or under his direction, under the said act of Congress of June 17, 1902, or necessary to carry out the provisions of said act. Such proceedings shall be expedited by said courts as rapidly as possible.

SEC. 22. The sum of $15,000 is hereby appropriated for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 23. All acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the appropriation bill.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President——

Mr. TELLER. Is that bill before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is before the Senate.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, I do not care to make an extended speech, but I wish simply——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. TELLER. I wish to say that the bill is before the Senate, and I suppose it is in order for the Senator from Idaho to discuss it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was only temporarily laid aside in order that the Senator from North Dakota might speak, and then it was temporarily laid aside in order that the Senator from Nevada might speak.

Mr. TELLER. The bill is now regularly before the Senate, is it not?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill before the Senate is the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

Mr. TELLER. That is what I meant.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was temporarily laid aside.

Mr. TELLER. On that the Senator from Idaho has a right to address the Senate. If he has not, I have.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair recognized the Senator from Iowa——

Mr. DUBOIS. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Because the appropriation bill was only temporarily laid aside, and the Chair asks the Senator from Iowa if he yields to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. ALLISON. I will yield to the Senator from Idaho.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I want to say that it is not necessary to have any yielding at all. The bill is now before the Senate.

Mr. CULLOM. No, I think the Senator is mistaken. Or does the Senator refer to the appropriation bill?

Mr. TELLER. I refer to the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The District of Columbia appropriation bill is the bill before the Senate.

Mr. TELLER. It is the right of the Senator from Idaho to discuss the question, and it is my right to discuss it, and I shall proceed to do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado need not raise any question with the Chair on that point. The Chair simply asserted that the District of Columbia appropriation bill is before the Senate. Of course the Chair understands that the Senator can discuss anything he pleases on any bill, it makes no difference what the bill is.

Mr. TELLER. I want to assert that right, and I do not want the Senator from Idaho to establish a precedent by asking permission to make a speech on this bill.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Colorado will recollect that I have the floor. I would be very glad to make a few observations myself on the District of Columbia appropriation bill, but I take pleasure in yielding to the Senator from Idaho, and I will take pleasure in yielding to the Senator from Colorado, who says he also wants to speak on this bill.

Mr. TELLER. I will wait until the Senator finishes his speech, and then I will make mine.

Mr. ALLISON. After the Senators have concluded, I myself wish to say a few words on the District of Columbia appropriation bill before proceeding to consider the amendments of the committee.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, I feel that I am conferring a distinct favor on the Senate by making a few remarks now, because if I waited until to-morrow I might make a long speech.

I am reminded by the remarks made by the Senator from Montana [Mr. GIBSON] and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] of the "milk sick" which they used to have in Indiana. In the early days we heard a good deal about the "milk sick." It was supposed to be a very deadly malady, and people were warned about running against the "milk sick" in some county in Indiana. Dubois County, they said, was one of the counties, but when you got to Dubois County you found the "milk sick" was in the next county, and on going into that county the "milk sick" was in the next county, and finally chased it clear out of the State, and could not locate it at all. The frauds can not be located. They are always somewhere else.

Now, if these sweeping assertions which the Senators make in regard to the abuse of all our general land laws are true, if all these fraudulent entries have been going on so long, it proves conclusively that our land laws have been very badly administered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will suspend one moment. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 1508) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection thereon of a public building to be used for a Department of State, a Department of Justice, and a Department of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I ask that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside in order that the Senate may proceed with the consideration of the appropriation bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. DUBOIS. I regard this assertion as a sweeping indictment not only of the present officers who have charge of the administration of the general land laws, but of previous administrations since these laws were enacted, and I want to resent the truthfulness of these charges. The conditions are different in Nevada from the other arid States. The Government gave to Nevada a great deal of land which they leased out, and the lands are now under lease to large cattle owners and others, and in that way the State derives a rental from the lands.

Mr. STEWART. The State sold them at $1.25 an acre and gave twenty-five years to pay for them, paying interest, and the State derives a profit from the income.

Mr. DUBOIS. I thank the Senator for the correction. But with that exception I think the United States Government has not turned over to any of these States lands which the States could dispose of as they saw fit. On the contrary, when the Dakotas, and Washington, and Montana, and Idaho, and Wyoming came into the Union, Congress provided that none of these States shall sell any of their lands given them by the General Government at less than $10 an acre, and in my State these lands are readily being sold for $10 and more an acre.

Now, so far as the desert-land act is concerned, the arid States of Colorado, Idaho, and Utah have been built up practically under that act.

Mr. STEWART. And Wyoming.

Mr. DUBOIS. And Wyoming. Ten years ago Idaho had 86,000 people. To-day it has easily a quarter of a million. There is not a town in our State of 15,000. From that you drop to another one of five or six thousand, and then down to the villages.

Our people have gone on the public domain and taken up farms. They have taken them mostly under the desert-land act, and I have never known of a case of fraud in Idaho under the desert-land act. It is very easy to see why there could not be any fraud. If a man takes up desert land which is valuable and is undertaking to evade the law, he is contested at once by some one who wants that land. Contests are going on constantly, men charging that those who took up the land originally are not complying with the law. The neighbors themselves protest. They are looking after their own interest, and unless they observe the requirements of the law in making their entries and in keeping them up they are contested by others who want their land.

I think no one was more earnestly in favor of the irrigation law than myself. I had the honor of presiding over almost all the deliberations of the members who framed that bill, but we do not know whether it is a good law or not. There has not been a single enterprise yet inaugurated and pushed to a conclusion under that law. If you repeal the desert-land act, we can only hope, in the arid States, for settlement under this reclamation law, which is in an embryo state. We can not tell whether it is going to work satisfactorily or not, and there would be no other way for our people in the arid section to get their land except under this act, which will not be pushed to sufficient completion for land to be taken under any of the provisions for reservoirs or ditches for several years to come.

The repeal of the desert-land act now would be a complete estoppel for the present of entries of land in almost all the arid-land States. You can not go on a desert tract of land and make a homestead, because you have to put water on the land before you can use the land at all. It requires considerable time. In my State, as in many others, ditches are built through cooperation, and men must go out and make money in order to build their ditches and get water on the land. They absolutely can not raise anything on the land until they get the water on it, clearing it first of sage brush and putting water on it, and then having crops grow, which takes three or four years before they can derive any pecuniary benefit from the land at all.

In addition to that, if you are going to restrict people who want to go to that western country and make homes, why did you not commence when the rich lands of Illinois and Iowa and all our western country were open?

Now, almost all of the desirable lands have been taken, and we ought to encourage in every way by lenient laws those who will go there now and take this remnant of land for homes. It is hard enough under any conditions, no matter how favorable you may make them, for the settlers. This is not a good time to make it harder for the home seekers in the West, because, as I said, the best lands have been parted with by the Government.

Senators talk about large ownerships of land under the present laws, of large tracts of land getting into the hands of corporations and syndicates. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] located them in Ireland, and also in California under the old Spanish grants, where they took 50,000 and 100,000 acres of land. None located these large holdings under the present land laws. So far as Idaho is concerned, it has grown faster in percentage in the last ten years than any State or Territory in the Union, and the growth has been all on the farms.

So far as that State is concerned, I can not recall a single individual or corporation in the whole State owning as much as 1,500 acres of land. There are no corporations or syndicates there getting lands, and these gentlemen have not pointed out any place where they have gotten agricultural lands. They may have taken land along the streams to save the water supply, and in that way get a range back for their cattle; but the progress of settlement stops that. Men can go in there and stay on these lands if they want, if they can get water on them. The days of large holdings of cattle also have passed away, because people are fencing in the country and making farms, and the cattle must be fed in the winter months.

I can not understand why this agitation for the repeal of these land laws is being pressed so constantly. The great trouble with us in the West is not the land laws. The great difficulty that we encounter now is the scripping of land. The Government gave to railroad corporations large tracts of land in alternate sections. Some of those lands were found to be mineral; others were put in Indian reservations; some were put in forest reserves.

The owners of the land grants were allowed to take lands in lieu of those lands, and they got scrip, which they sell for five or six dollars an acre. Almost all of this scrip is owned by the railroad corporations. The difficulty that we encounter is the danger from the scripping of these lands by the railroad corporations or by people who buy the scrip from them. I should like to have these reformers—and I will gladly join with them—direct their attention to the scripping of land, which is the hardest thing we have to contend against in our country, and is the only possible way I can think of by which large tracts of land can be secured by corporations or individuals.

I am suspicious sometimes that the owners of this scrip are pressing for the repeal of these beneficent land laws. It is apparent that if all the land laws, excepting the homestead, were repealed and the commutation clause of the homestead act done away with, the scrip would become vastly much more valuable. With this scrip you can locate any kind of public land in any part of the country.

Mr. ALLISON. I will yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. TELLER. I do not desire to make a speech on this subject now. It is a subject of so much importance to the people whom I in part represent that I mean to take occasion to enter a very positive protest against some of the statements which were made with reference to the execution of land laws in this country during the last fifteen or twenty years. I will not do it on the appropriation bill, but I will endeavor to do it some time next week.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12833) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, before the Secretary begins the reading of the bill, I wish to make a brief statement as respects the general character of the measure.

Senators will observe that the bill as it came to the Senate from the House appropriated $1,589,155 in excess of the act for the current year. That seems like a large increase over the appropriations of the current year, but when this increase is analyzed it will be found that the principal items in it are absolutely necessary for the conduct of the administration of this District and for the purpose of carrying on the necessary improvements that are being made in the District. These items I wish to state briefly, in order that it may be seen how few of them there are.

Two years ago we provided for a municipal building in this District, the limit of cost being placed at a million and a half dollars, including the site. Last year the limit of cost was increased to $2,000,000, including the site, its construction being provided for under a plan made by the architect selected for that purpose. The appropriation for this year over last for this purpose is $50,000, being $250,000 for the current year and $300,000 for the fiscal year 1905.

It is well known that two years ago there was provision made for a new railway station in this District which will cost when completed a very large sum of money. The object had in view by those who prepared the legislation for it was to get rid of the grade crossings in this District and to provide whatever ought to be provided for by the District as respects the surroundings of the new station. This year the House increased the appropriation for that purpose $300,000 over last year.

The House also made an increase in the bill of $100,000 over the amount appropriated for the current year for the construction of the Connecticut avenue bridge, a bridge being provided for in former appropriation acts.

The House of Representatives also increased the bill over the act for the current year by providing for the reconstruction of the bridge across the Anacostia River, the present bridge having been declared unsafe.

The House also provided an appropriation for the filtration plant, increasing the appropriation for the current year $968,155; this appropriation being the final appropriation to secure the completion of that important project.

There are some other small appropriations which perhaps might be noticed, but I shall not now stop to consider them. The increases which I have named amount to $1,500,000, in round numbers, over the appropriations for the current year. These are increases made by the House of Representatives over the law for the current year. I think there can be no doubt but that all these appropriations are essential and proper to be made.

The Senate committee has increased the bill as it came to us from the other House $1,168,727. These increases the Senate committee believe to be necessary and important in the conduct of the administration of the District.

The most important of these increases is an item of $428,000 for what is known as the "highway bridge," a bridge which is being constructed immediately north of the new railway bridge across the Potomac River. This bridge is turning out to be an expensive project. When it was originally provided for the limit of cost was fixed at $568,000, and an appropriation was made in the act for the whole amount. Two years later it was discovered that this limit of cost was wholly inadequate to construct a proper bridge there, including the approaches, and the limit of cost was increased to $996,000; but no appropriation was made in addition to that found in the original act. Finding that this bridge is already under construction and that it will probably be completed within a year, or, at most, two years, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] yesterday asked for an extension of time for the completion of this bridge one year, and it is, I think, absolutely necessary that the bill for that purpose should become a law. But those in charge of the construction of this bridge estimate that within the next fiscal year they can expend upon it $428,000, which we have provided for in addition to the first appropriation made for it.

I might add, also, that it now appears that this $996,000 will be inadequate for the completion of this structure on the plans adopted by the Engineer Department and approved by the Secretary of War. So a further appropriation of $200,000 will probably be required, but we have not proposed that appropriation in this bill.

We found it necessary to increase the appropriation for country roads and suburban streets $103,200 over the amount appropriated by the other House. We also increase the very large appropriation made by the House for sewerage in this District by $110,000. I will say that the amount appropriated by the House and the amount recommended to be added by the Senate Committee on Appropriations will provide for the early completion of the sewerage system in this District. Probably one more additional series of appropriations will be required for the fiscal year beginning on the 1st day of July, 1905, which will complete the entire sewerage system in this District. So within the next two years the District will be fully provided with a practical, general sewerage system; and it will have on the 1st of December next, I hope—we are promised that we shall have it on the 1st of December next—the completion of the filtration plant, which will enable us to use water fit to be used in this District for all legitimate purposes.

We have also increased the appropriation for schools and school buildings $81,872. We have added $99,800 to the House provision relating to the fire department of the District. I might say the committee was very strongly pressed to begin the construction of what is known as the high-pressure fire-plant system in the District. The recent fire in the city of Baltimore seems to have alarmed the people here very greatly as respects their fire protection, and there seems to be a general concurrence of opinion among the citizens that this new plan of a high-pressure plant, costing $750,000, should be entered upon.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. What is the nature of that plan?

Mr. ALLISON. That plan is intended to provide for a pumping station at or near the reservoir on the north side of the city, which shall pump water into what is known as the "high reservoir" at Fort Reno.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, the pumping station is already provided for. That will not have to be constructed.

Mr. ALLISON. But the water will have to be pumped. The pumping station is provided for in the general plan which we now have. It is intended that the water shall be pumped from that station into a reservoir at Fort Reno, which is 450 feet, more or less, higher than the ordinary level in the District of Columbia below the hills.

It is the intention to provide a new set of pipes for fire purposes, that the water shall be thrown into those pipes by means of gravity only; and it is believed that when that system is completed water can easily be thrown upon the highest buildings in the lower part of this city. Its principal use will be for the business portions of the city between Second street and Eighteenth street, and between K street and Pennsylvania avenue; but we did not feel that we could enter upon that project at this time. In lieu of it, however, the committee propose to increase the appropriation for the fire department beyond that provided by the House $100,000 in round numbers, the chief expense of which will be for a fire boat, to move up and down the river front, which, when a fire occurs, will be equivalent in its results to probably eight or ten ordinary fire engines. That was strongly pressed upon us.

These are the principal increases proposed to be made to the bill by the Senate committee, amounting, in round numbers, to $860,000 on these items.

We have also provided for the purchase of some ground for a police court.

The bill as reported to the Senate, therefore, by the Committee on Appropriations, increases the appropriations over those for last year $2,725,107 in all. One-half of the amount of these appropriations, as Senators know, is paid by the General Government out of the Treasury of the United States, and the other half is paid from the revenue derived from the taxation upon property in the District.

It is estimated that the amount of the District revenues for the next fiscal year, exclusive of those derived from the water department, will be $4,730,935, leaving, in round numbers, if the appropriations as recommended by our committee are finally made by Congress, a deficit of $884,214. Including other items of necessary appropriation in the sundry civil appropriation bill, etc., the increases will probably be greater. We have provided, however, for this deficit in the last section of the bill, which authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to advance, from time to time, this sum to the District, which shall be accounted for and repaid to the Treasury within five years, with interest at the rate of 2 per cent per annum.

It will be noted that this large increase arises chiefly from two or three projects, the principal of which are the filtration plant, the sewage project, and the bridge across the Potomac.

I make this explanation, Mr. President, in order that Senators may see, if they make these comparisons, that although we have made a large increase over the appropriations for the current year it is all for necessary projects that ought to be immediately completed. Unless some Senator desires further information as to its general character, I will ask that the reading of the bill may be begun.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 1, line 6, before the word "for," to insert "in full;" so as to read:

That the half of the following sums named, respectively, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the other half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, in full for the purposes following, being for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, etc.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I suppose it may be considered a question showing my ignorance, but I should like to know the necessity for those two words "in full," which have been inserted. What is the meaning of them?

Mr. ALLISON. They do appear a little odd, I will say to the Senator, but the only object of their use is that in case it should appear somewhere that we have appropriated a less sum for salaries than the statutory sum, the amounts appropriated shall be received in full for the salaries, whatever the compensation may be, and for the time being must be the statutory compensation of those who are paid by salary under this bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "General expenses," on page 2, line 24, after the word "dollars," to insert "permit clerk, $1,200;" so as to read:

Clerk, who shall be a stenographer and typewriter, $900; messenger, $480; permit clerk, $1,200, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 8, after the word "clerk," to strike out "who shall give bond in such sum as the Commissioners may determine, and who shall, under the direction of the Commissioners, supervise the purchase and distribution and have custody of all supplies and stores for the use of the government of the District of Columbia;" in line 13, before the word "hundred," to strike out "eight" and insert "six;" in line 14, before the word "hundred," to strike out "six" and insert "four;" and in line 15, before the word "dollars," to strike out "seven hundred and twenty" and insert "nine hundred;" so as to read:

Property clerk, $1,600; deputy property clerk, $1,400; clerk, $900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 21, to increase the total appropriation for the maintenance of the executive office from $75,064 to $76,044.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 24, after the word "dollars," to insert "and $500 additional as chairman of the excise and personal tax boards;" and on page 4, line 3, before the word "two," to strike out "assistant assessor, $2,000; assistant assessor, $1,600" and insert "two assistant assessors, at $2,000 each;" so as to read:

For assessor's office: For assessor, $3,500, and $500 additional as chairman of the excise and personal tax boards; two assistant assessors, at $2,000 each, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 18, to increase the total appropriation for maintenance of the assessor's office from $42,600 to $43,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator having in charge this bill if it will be agreeable to him, as the bill is being read, to have one or two little amendments made that the subcommittee overlooked?

Mr. ALLISON. It will be perfectly agreeable.

Mr. GALLINGER. On page 5, under the subhead "For collector's office," in line 5, after the words "deputy collector," I move to strike out "one thousand eight hundred" and insert "two thousand;" so that the salary of the deputy collector will be $2,000, instead of $1,800.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Because of that amendment the total in line 13 on page 5 should be changed from $19,400 to $19,600.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, line 13, it is proposed to increase the total appropriation for the collector's office from $19,400 to $19,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 5, line 23, after the word "each," to strike out "clerk, $1,000" and insert "two clerks, at $1,000 each; two clerks, at $900 each;" and on page 6, line 3, before the word "hundred," to strike out "twenty-two thousand eight" and insert "twenty-five thousand six;" so as to make the clause read:

For auditor's office: For auditor, $3,600; chief clerk, $2,250; bookkeeper, $1,800; two clerks, at $1,600 each; two clerks, at $1,400 each; three clerks, at $1,200 each; two clerks, at $1,000 each; two clerks, at $900 each; messenger, $900; disbursing officer, $2,500; deputy disbursing officer, $1,500; in all, $25,650.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 9, after the word "dollars," to strike out "law clerk" and insert "fourth assistant corporation counsel;" in line 11, before the word "dollars," to strike out "seven hundred and twenty" and insert "nine hundred;" and in line 13, before the word "dollars," to strike out "seven hundred and twenty" and insert "nine hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

For office of corporation counsel: For corporation counsel, $4,500; first assistant corporation counsel, $2,500; second assistant corporation counsel, $1,600; third assistant corporation counsel, $1,600; fourth assistant corporation counsel, $1,200; stenographer, $900; messenger, $900; in all, $12,900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 20, after the word "dollars," to insert "assistant morgue master, $480; morgue janitor, $400," and in line 23, before the word "dollars," to strike out "two thousand five hundred and twenty" and insert "three thousand four hundred and sixty;" so as to make the clause read:

For coroner's office: For coroner, $1,800; morgue master, $720; assistant morgue master, $480; morgue janitor, $400; in all, $3,460.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 1, to increase the appropriation for the salary of superintendent of county roads from $1,500 to $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "seven hundred and twenty" and insert "eight hundred and forty;" and in line 9, before the word "messenger," to insert "clerk, $900;" so as to read:

Assistant inspector of gas and meters, $840; clerk, $900, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 17, after the word "dollars," to insert "draftsman, $1,200; stenographer and typewriter, $900;" and in line 25, before the word "dollars," to strike out "sixty-five thousand five hundred and twelve" and insert "sixty-eight thousand nine hundred and thirty-two;" so as to read:

Clerk, $1,400; draftsman, $1,200; stenographer and typewriter, $900; two clerks, at $1,000 each; two inspectors of property, at $936 each; permit clerk, $1,400; assistant permit clerk, $840; index clerk and typewriter, $720; in all, $68,932.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to amend the amendment of the committee, in line 19, by striking out the words "nine hundred" and inserting "one thousand;" so that the salary of the stenographer and typewriter in the engineer's office will be $1,000 instead of $900.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I also move to change the total, in line 24, page 8, from $68,932, as proposed by the committee, to $69,032.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued down to line 14, on page 9.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. We have just passed the paragraph appropriating $25,100 for the street-sweeping office. I suppose that does not include the expense of sweeping the streets, but I should like to inquire whether any addition has been anywhere made to this bill, so that we can have the streets here a little cleaner than we have been in the habit of having them.

Mr. ALLISON. That matter is taken care of in another part of the bill.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Very well.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 10, line 12, after the word "District," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized hereafter, in their discretion, to grant leave of absence with pay, not to exceed thirty days to any individual in any one year, to regular employees appointed directly by the Commissioners, whose services are continuous, but who receive per diem compensation, and have been in the continuous service of the District for one year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 21, before the word "thousand," to strike out "two" and insert "three;" in line 24, after the word "dollars," to insert "laborer, $600," and in line 25, before the word "dollars," to strike out "seven thousand" and insert "eight thousand six hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

Department of Insurance: For superintendent of insurance, $3,500; examiner, $1,500; clerk, $1,000; statistician, $1,400; temporary clerk hire, $600; laborer, $600; in all, $8,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 6, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifteen" and insert "eighteen:" and in line 7, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty" and insert "twenty-three;" so as to make the clause read:

For surveyor's office: For surveyor, $3,000; assistant surveyor, $1,800; for such additional employees as may be required, in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress making the surveyor of the District of Columbia a salaried officer, $18,200; in all, $23,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 7, to strike out:

For resurvey of certain squares in the eastern part of the city of Washington, and placing monuments at corners of same, to replace original monuments destroyed during the civil war, $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 14, after the word "dollars," to insert "assistant librarian, $900;" in line 19, before the word "cataloguers," to strike out "temporary;" in line 21, before the word "attendants," to strike out "two" and insert "three;" in line 22, before the word "attendants," to strike out "three" and insert "four;" on page 12, line 4, after the word "each," to insert "watchman, $480;" and in line 6, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty thousand three hundred and sixty" and insert "twenty-two thousand five hundred and eighty;" so as to make the clause read:

Free public library: For librarian, $2,500; assistant librarian, $1,000; assistant librarian, $900; three assistants, at $720 each; two assistants, at $900 each; three assistants, at $540 each; cataloguer, $900; cataloguer, $720; cataloguer, $900; three cataloguers, at $540 each; stenographer and typewriter, $720; three attendants, at $480 each; four attendants, at $360 each; two messengers, at $360 each; four pages, at $240 each; two janitors, at $480 each; engineer, $900; fireman, $540; workman, $480; four charwomen, at $180 each; watchman, $480; in all, $22,580.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 11, line 15, after the word "each," I move to strike out "two" and insert "three;" so that it will provide for three assistants at the free public library at $600 each, instead of two.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. The amendment just adopted will necessitate a change of the total; and I move that the total on page 12, line 5, be increased from $22,580 to $23,180.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Contingent and miscellaneous expenses," on page 13, line 5, to increase the appropriation for contingent expenses of the government of the District of Columbia from $38,200 to $40,500.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not see that any amendment has been made in the paragraph for contingent and miscellaneous expenses, and I inquire why the total should be increased.

Mr. ALLISON. It is a lump sum.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Oh, that is it.

Mr. ALLISON. The appropriation for contingent and miscellaneous expenses is increased from $38,200 to $40,500.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Very well.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 14, after line 4, to insert:

For postage for strictly official mail matter, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 21, before the word "coroner's," to insert "livery of horse or horse hire for;" in line 22, before the word "removal," to insert "witness fees;" in the same line, after the word "persons," to insert "including the purchase and maintenance of horse and wagon for that purpose;" in line 25, before the word "and," to insert "telephone service;" and on page 15, line 3, before the word "dollars," to insert "five hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

For livery of horse or horse hire for coroner's office, jurors' fees, witness fees, removal of deceased persons, including the purchase and maintenance of horse and wagon for that purpose, making autopsies, ice, disinfectants, telephone service, and other necessary supplies for the morgue, and the necessary expenses of holding inquests, including stenographic services in taking of testimony, and photographing unidentified bodies, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, after line 16, to insert:

For resurvey of certain squares in the eastern part of the city of Washington, and placing monuments at corners of same, to replace original monuments destroyed during the civil war, $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, after line 20, to insert:

For purchase of the plats and field notes of Mr. William J. Latimer, private surveyor, containing survey data of that part of the District of Columbia lying southeast of the Anacostia River, $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 1, after the word "dollars," to strike out:

Which sum shall not be available except for constructing said building on plans that will provide for a building six stories high on all sides, with suitable accommodations therein for the offices of the register of wills, recorder of deeds, and the police court, in addition to the offices and departments now designed to be accommodated therein, and with a sub-basement story of sufficient height of ceiling to afford suitable accommodations for heating and lighting plant and for a repair shop for the District of Columbia.

So as to make the clause read:

For continuing work on the municipal building, $300,000.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. May I be indulged to ask the chairman why this is stricken out? I suppose it is entirely proper, but I should like some explanation of it.

Mr. ALLISON. It will be seen by the reading of the amendment——

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It changes the original plan?

Mr. ALLISON. That the House proposed to change the original plan by providing for placing in the new municipal building the office of the register of wills, which is now in the court-house on Judiciary square, and that of the recorder of deeds, which is also in the court-house on Judiciary square.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. And the police court.

Mr. GALLINGER. And the police court.

Mr. ALLISON. And the police court, which is now near Judiciary Square, and also to alter the basement as to allow plans for a repair shop in the basement of this new building.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. So the House changed the original plan.

Mr. ALLISON. The House changed the original plan, and provided that the appropriation should not be available until the plan was so changed as to provide for these additional accommodations.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I think the committee is quite right, especially do I think that we ought not to have a repair shop in the basement of the municipal building, whatever the other items may be.

Mr. ALLISON. There was great objection by the lawyers of the District to the removal of the offices of the register of wills and the recorder of deeds, these offices being now convenient to where the courts are held. There was also very great objection to placing the police court in the municipal building, and the carpenter shop was considered wholly inadmissible by the committee, after making full examination of the subject.

In addition to that the necessary changes and alterations would cost from three hundred and fifty to four hundred thousand dollars in the construction of the building. Therefore, after very full consideration, the committee recommend that this provision be stricken out.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. And very properly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 16, after line 9, to insert:

For metal shelving, bookcases, and racks in the office of the recorder of deeds of the District of Columbia, $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended by the Superintendent of the Capitol.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, after line 13, to insert:

For metallic cases for card index for office of register of wills of the District of Columbia, $750.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, after line 16, to insert:

For carrying out the provisions of the act approved March 1, 1899, entitled "An act to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to remove dangerous or unsafe buildings and parts thereof, and for other purposes," to pay the members of the board of survey provided for therein, other than the inspector of buildings, at a compensation of $10 each survey, and to pay the cost of making safe or removing such buildings upon the refusal or neglect of the owners so to do, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 21, before the word "grade," to strike out "of" and insert "or;" so as to read:

For purchase or condemnation of the land necessary for the plaza and new streets, and for reconstructing, grading, and paving, together with the necessary incidental work in connection therewith, the streets, avenues, and ways changed in line or grade or newly created under the provisions of said acts, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, after line 2, to insert:

For paving roadways under the permit system, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 15, to increase the appropriation for work on streets and avenues named in Appendix Cc, Book of Estimates, 1905, from $60,000 to $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, after line 10, to insert:

For Lanier avenue, grade and improve, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, after line 12, to insert:

For Twentieth street from Brentwood road to Queen's Chapel road, grade and improve, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, after line 14, to insert:

For Pennsylvania avenue extended, grade, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, after line 16, to insert:

For California avenue from Phelps place to Massachusetts avenue, grade and improve, $6,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, after line 19, to insert:

For Connecticut avenue extended, grade and improve, $10,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "ten" and inserting "twenty."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 23, after line 21, to insert:

For Woodley road from Wisconsin avenue to Idaho avenue, grade and improve, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, after line 23, to insert:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, after line 9, to insert:

For Dover street, Brookland, from Twelfth to Thirteenth streets, grade and improve, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, after line 11, to insert:

For Eighth street, Petworth, from Richmond to Trenton streets, grade and improve, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, after line 13, to insert:

For Grant street NW., between Eighteenth street and Nineteenth street, grade and improve, $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, after line 16, to insert:

For Q street, between Twenty-second and Twenty-third streets NW., pave, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, after line 18, to insert:

For Shepherd street NW., from Connecticut avenue extended to Idaho avenue, grade and macadamize, $6,000: Provided, That all the land necessary therefor shall be conveyed to the District of Columbia and dedicated to public use.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. After line 23, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa offers an amendment which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 24, after line 23, it is proposed to insert:

For Seventh street NE., from Bunker Hill road to Rhode Island avenue, grade and improve, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 25, line 6, before the word "thousand," to strike out "nine" and insert "five;" and in the same line after the word "dollars," to insert "to be immediately available;" so as to make the clause read:

For Rhode Island avenue NW., from First to Second streets, pave, $5,000, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, line 19, to increase the appropriation for construction of county roads and suburban streets from $44,000 to $146,200.

Mr. ALLISON. That total should be $161,200.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, after line 20, to insert:

For grading and macadamizing according to the plans of the first section permanent system of highways, Fourteenth street from its present terminus at Lydecker avenue, with the same width of roadway now open immediately south of said avenue to the junction, near Brightwood, of said street extended with Piney Branch road, including connecting line of avenue where Fourteenth street is shifted from its direct extension, and for the removal, with the assent of owners, of houses and barns or other improvements which may be within the lines of said street to adjacent sites of present owners, $20,000, the whole cost of said work under a contract which is hereby authorized therefor, not to exceed $59,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, after line 9, to insert:

To enable the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to purchase the pieces or parcels of ground necessary for the right of way of said street, which they are hereby authorized to do, or for paying in condemnation proceedings hereby authorized pursuant to sections 483 to 491, inclusive, of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, any damages or excess of damages over benefits that may be allowed to the owner or owners of land to be taken, should there be any damages found in such proceedings or any damages found in excess of benefits, $7,500: And provided further, That if the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, in their discretion, pursuant to said section 491, reject the award or awards in such condemnation proceedings, or if the benefits exceed the damages to an amount over $7,000, the appropriations aforesaid of $20,000 and $7,500 shall revert to the Treasury of the United States, except $500 of the latter appropriation, which shall be chargeable with the costs of the proceedings in respect to said condemnations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, line 22, before the word "dollars," to strike out "including not exceeding $5,500 for sidewalks and curbs around Lincoln Park, ten thousand" and insert "twelve thousand five hundred:" so as to make the clause read:

For replacing and repairing sidewalks and curbs around, public reservations and municipal buildings, $12,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, after line 7, to insert:

For completing construction, including approaches, of the highway bridge across the Potomac River at Washington, D. C., and for any and all purposes connected therewith, $428,000.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 28, line 12, after the word "dollars," I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 28, after the word "dollars," in line 12, it is proposed to insert:

And the total cost of said bridge and approaches shall not exceed $1,198,000.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I also wish to modify the amendment in line 8 by striking out the word "completing" and inserting the word "continuing."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, after line 12, to insert:

For construction of a concrete bridge across Piney Branch on the line of Sixteenth street extended, $20,000; and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized to enter into a contract or contracts for the construction of said bridge at a total cost not to exceed $50,000, to be paid from time to time as appropriations therefor may be made by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, line 20, before the word "of," to strike out "repair" and insert "reconstruction;" and in line 24, before the word "of," to strike out "repair" and insert "reconstruction;" so as to read:

For the reconstruction of the Anacostia bridge, under direction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, $100,000, and the said Commissioners are authorized to enter into a contract or contracts for the reconstruction of said bridge, to be completed within two years from July 1, 1904, at a cost not to exceed $250,000, to be paid from time to time as appropriations therefor may be made by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 3, after the word "law," to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, however, That before any part of this sum shall be used the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad Company shall pay to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia the entire cost of the pavement lying between the exterior rails of the tracks and for a distance of 2 feet from the said exterior rails of said tracks on each side thereof and the entire floor system supporting said pavement, and said collector shall deposit one-half of same in the United States Treasury to the credit of the District of Columbia and one-half to the credit of the United States, nor shall said appropriation be available until said railroad company shall agree to assume one-half the cost of maintenance and repair of said new bridge, to be collected in the same manner as the cost of laying pavements between the rails and tracks of street railways as provided for in section 5 of "An act providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia," approved June 11, 1878: Provided further, That this appropriation shall not be available until the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad Company shall agree that any other railroad company, now or hereafter authorized by Congress to use said bridge, shall have the right to use the tracks of the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad Company thereon upon such reciprocal trackage and such compensation as may be mutually agreed upon, and in case of failure to reach such an agreement that the supreme court of the District of Columbia shall, upon petition filed by either party, fix and determine the same.

And insert:

Provided, That the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad Company shall pay the entire cost of the pavement between the exterior rails of its tracks on said bridge and for a distance of 2 feet from the said exterior rails of said tracks on each side thereof and the cost of the entire floor system supporting said pavement, to be collected and reimbursed to this appropriation in the same manner as the cost of laying pavements between the rails and tracks of street railways as provided for in section 5 of "An act providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia," approved June 11, 1878: Provided further, That any other railroad company now or hereafter authorized by Congress to use said bridge shall have the right to use the tracks of the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad Company thereon upon such reciprocal trackage and such compensation as may be mutually agreed upon, and in case of failure to reach such an agreement that the supreme court of the District of Columbia shall, upon petition filed by either party, fix and determine the same. And hereafter one-half of the cost of the maintenance and repairs of this bridge shall be borne by the said railway company or companies, and shall be collected in the same manner as the cost of laying pavements between the rails and tracks of street railways as provided for above. The amounts thus collected shall be deposited to the credit of the appropriation from which such maintenance and repairs shall be paid for the fiscal year in which they are collected.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee who owns the bridge referred to?

Mr. ALLISON. It is owned by the Government of the United States, as I understand, and the railroad has the right to cross it. These provisions simply continue and perfect the arrangement.

Mr. TELLER. Was this bridge originally constructed with some such agreement?

Mr. ALLISON. It was not; but I think the railroad tracks were put upon the bridge under some agreement of this character.

Mr. TELLER. It strikes me that if the Government owns the bridge the Government is hardly keeping such a control over it under this arrangement as it ought to have. However, I do not want to interfere with the committee which considered this matter.

Mr. ALLISON. I think this whole provision is well guarded for the protection of the Government in every way. It was desired by the Commissioners that the interchangeable arrangement should be made. But the substance of the two provisions is the same.

Mr. TELLER. It seems to me from a hasty examination that I should prefer the House provision to the Senate provision. But I will not interfere with it.

Mr. ALLISON. I will call attention to one idea. The House provision required the railroad company to pay the entire cost of the pavement between the rails, etc., before any of this appropriation should be available. That is practically impossible.

And the last clause in the amendment proposed by the Senate committee is for the protection of the Government as respects these various sums of money that are provided for.

Mr. TELLER. All I care to say is that it seems to me we ought to retain for the Government the right to determine when and what other railroads shall come over the bridge. But I was not in the committee when this matter was considered, and as the committee has considered it I do not wish to make any suggestions about it. The question will be in conference anyway.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 32, after line 23, to insert:

For completion of the Arizona avenue sewer, $35,000. And the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized to enter into contract for the completion of said sewer at a cost not to exceed $178,000, exclusive of appropriations heretofore made therefor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, after line 4, to insert:

For Ivy City trunk sewer, $25,000. And the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized to enter into contract for the whole work, at a cost not to exceed $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Streets," on page 33, line 23, before the word "storage," to insert "stable and;" and on page 34, line 2, after the word "expenses," to insert "not properly chargeable to the general appropriation for contingent expenses of the government of the District of Columbia;" so as to read:

Sprinkling, sweeping, and cleaning: For sprinkling, sweeping, and cleaning streets, avenues, alleys, and suburban streets, including rent of stable and storage rooms; purchase, maintenance, and livery of horses; purchase, maintenance, and repair of wagons and harness, and necessary incidental expenses not properly chargeable to the general appropriation for contingent expenses of the government of the District of Columbia, and work done under existing contracts, as well as hand work done under the immediate direction of the Commissioners without contract, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the appropriation for sprinkling, sweeping, and cleaning streets, on page 34, line 17, before the word "thousand," to strike out "one hundred and ninety" and insert "two hundred;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That whenever it shall appear to the Commissioners that said latter work can not be done under their immediate direction at 19 cents or less per 1,000 square yards, in accordance with the specifications under which the same was last advertised for bids, it shall at once be their duty to advertise to let said work under said specifications to the lowest responsible bidder, and if the same can not be procured to be done at a price not exceeding 20 cents per 1,000 square yards, they may continue to do said work under their immediate direction, in accordance with said specifications; $200,000, and the Commissioners shall so apportion this appropriation as to prevent a deficiency therein.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I suppose this is the item which relates to the work of cleaning the streets?

Mr. ALLISON. It is.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I see that the amount has been increased from $190,000 to $200,000, but I do not see that any change is contemplated in the method of cleaning the streets.

I wish to say that I think there ought to be something done in that direction. I do not know that it can be done in this bill, but it is observed by those who reside here, and more particularly observed, I think, by all persons who come here from all portions of the United States, that the streets here are unusually and indefensibly dirty. I really feel that it is a matter which somebody ought to look after.

I have no plan; I do not know but that the present plan of sweeping and cleaning the streets is as good as any, but I suppose the plan has been changed from the old system of flushing the streets and sweeping them with brooms drawn by horses to this plan, which is called the employment of "white-winged" people, laborers dressed at some time in white.

Mr. ALLISON. In the morning.

Mr. TELLER. Some mornings.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I would say dressed some weeks in white, no change of their garments having been made until they are no longer white when they are in service.

I have observed another thing, that they have a pretty good time apparently. I suppose they are called workmen, but from my observation I should think they were having a pretty easy time and not working very hard.

The result of it all is that the streets are in a deplorable condition. It has its amusing side, but at the same time it has its serious side. I think there should be some change in the way in which this work is done, that it should be thoroughly done, and that the streets should be kept clean.

Mr. TELLER. Cleaner than they are.

Mr. ALLISON. I am glad that this monition, instructive as it will be——

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I beg the Senator's pardon. I was not criticising the committee or attempting to do so.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand. I was about to say that the little criticism, kindly and gently administered by the Senator, of course, will apply to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia——

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. More properly, I think.

Mr. ALLISON. And more correctly, perhaps, to the superintendent of street sweeping. The Commissioners are aware of the defective situation as respects street sweeping; and they said to the committee that they are studying carefully the problem of economical and at the same time effective street sweeping. This provision gives them a large discretion in that matter, and I have no doubt they will utilize this appropriation in doing the very best possible to keep the streets clean. Of course it has not been possible to keep them clean on a good many days during the last winter.

Mr. GALLINGER. On this point, Mr. President, I wish to say, as chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, that a great many complaints have come to that committee from residents and from people who have traveled abroad, calling the attention of the committee to the fact that the streets are in a much worse condition, so far as cleanliness is concerned, than they formerly were.

The Senator from Iowa has explained that this matter was called to the attention of the Commissioners. The amount appropriated by the House is increased $10,000, and the Commissioners have promised to give very careful consideration to the question, saying to the committee that they have in contemplation, to some extent at least, a return to the former method, to which the Senator from Connecticut has called attention—the flushing of the streets and the sweeping of them with machines drawn by horses.

I think, Mr. President, the mistake made was that in the city of New York, under the administration of a very competent man, where the streets are narrow, they adopted the system of hand-sweeping and it proved there very efficient. It was transplanted to the city of Washington, where we have very wide streets and avenues, and it has proved not to be a good system; at least it so occurs to me. Men with their hand brooms have swept up the dirt in a heap at one side of a broad avenue, and before they had time to take it away a gust of wind has come and swept it across to the other side. That is precisely what has been going on in this city to my personal knowledge. I am glad that the Senator from Connecticut has called attention to it. I think something ought to be done in that regard.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to inquire whether the present system is one of contract?

Mr. GALLINGER. It is a contract.

Mr. ALLISON. It is also a matter in the discretion of the Commissioners. They make contracts or they hire men to clean the streets in their own discretion.

Mr. TELLER. I do not believe it is wise for the Commissioners of the capital of the nation to hire anyone to clean the streets by contract. They lose practical control of it. We all know that on the main avenue of this city in the last winter it was not unusual to see the dirt piled up along the street, where it had been sometimes for three or four days. I do not believe that ought to be allowed.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator will look at the proviso on page 34 of the bill, he will see that it provides that "whenever it shall appear to the Commissioners that said latter work can not be done under their immediate direction at 19 cents or less per thousand square yards, in accordance with the specifications under which the same was last advertised for bids"—that is, if the bids are not satisfactory—they are required to go on with the work under their own immediate supervision.

Mr. TELLER. I understand that; and if the Commissioners find it is costing a certain sum, then they are to try and see whether they can not get it done cheaper by bids.

Mr. President, I think, while we want to have the work done as cheaply as possible, what we want to do in this capital city is to see that we have clean streets, and if they can be made cleaner by the Commissioners taking charge of the work, even if they spend a little more money, I think the public would be better satisfied and it would be more in accordance with the dignity and character of the General Government to have it done in that way.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Iowa whether the full amount of the estimate of the Commissioners was allowed in this item of street cleaning?

Mr. ALLISON. The estimate was $220,000.

Mr. NEWLANDS. And what is the amount allowed?

Mr. ALLISON. The House appropriated the amount allowed for this year, and the Senate committee recommend an increase of $10,000.

Mr. NEWLANDS. What is the total amount of the allowance?

Mr. ALLISON. The total amount of the allowance is $200,000. The Commissioners estimated for $220,000.

Mr. NEWLANDS. That is $20,000 under the estimate?

Mr. ALLISON. It is.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I made inquiry of the Commissioners several times regarding this matter, and I think it has been called to the attention of almost everybody. They tell me that owing to the extraordinary expenditures for capital projects, such as bridges, etc., and permanent improvements, sufficient money has not been allowed for the current expenditures of the District, and particularly those expenditures covering street cleaning, street paving, and the repair of county roads.

It seems to me, as they have made an estimate of $220,000, and the difference between an inefficient service and a perfect service

(for I presume their estimate covers a perfect service) is only $20,000, it would be wise to increase the amount of the appropriation. I ask the Senator from Iowa whether that can not be done?

Mr. ALLISON. It could be done, Mr. President, if we want to expend that amount of money. The number of streets to be cleaned and to be swept is wholly in the discretion of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. They ask, as I understand it, for this additional sum of money, $10,000, in order to enlarge the number of streets to be swept. I think in the committee, although there was very little expressed on the subject, there was a general opinion that they ought to do well what they are now doing before we enlarge the number of streets. There is no limit to the number of streets the Commissioners may authorize to be swept. Whatever they authorize to be swept ought to be well done. That was the view we had, and we increased the amount $10,000 over the appropriation made by the House, which we supposed to be about all we could fairly expect to finally pass the two Houses. This service costs $190,000 this year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, line 26, to increase the appropriation for cleaning snow and ice from cross walks and gutters, under the act approved March 2, 1895, from $1,000 to $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, line 12, to increase the appropriation for the parking commission from $25,000 to $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, line 17, to increase the appropriation for the improvement and protection of the harbor and river front from $3,000 to $3,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Electrical department," on page 36, line 7, before the word "repair," to strike out "three" and insert "four;" and in line 11, before the word "dollars," to strike out "two hundred and twenty" and insert "nine hundred and forty;" so as to make the clause read:

For superintendent, $1,600; inspector of lamps, $1,000; electrician, $1,200; draftsman, $1,000; three telegraph operators, at $1,000 each; three inspectors, at $900 each; expert repair man, $960; four repair men, at $720 each; three telephone operators, at $600 each; two laborers, at $400 each; in all, $16,940.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, line 19, to increase the appropriation for general supplies, repairs, new batteries, and battery supplies, telephone rental and purchase, etc., from $15,000 to $18,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Before proceeding to the consideration of the next amendment, which is one perhaps that will lead to some little debate, I ask leave to go back to page 8, line 5. After the word "dollars" I move to insert what I sent to the desk. It is a proviso.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 8, line 5, after the word "dollars," insert:

Provided, That said inspector of asphalt and cements shall not render expert advice to or perform service for or receive or accept compensation of any kind from any person, firm, corporation, or municipality, other than the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, line 19, after the word "dollars," to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, however, That no part of the money herein appropriated shall be used for the payment to any person or telephone company doing business in the District of Columbia for the hire of or use of any telephone or for any telephone service, except at the following rates: Fifty dollars per annum for the use of a telephone on a single wire; $40 per annum for each telephone, there being not more than two on a wire; $30 per annum for each telephone, there being not more than three on a wire; $25 per annum for each telephone, there being four or more on the same wire; and no contract shall be made with any person or telephone company in excess of the charges herein specified: Provided, That the above rates and no more may be charged by the telephone companies doing business in the District of Columbia to their patrons receiving service in private residences; and any violation of the above provision is hereby declared to work a forfeiture of all rights to conduct a telephone business within the District of Columbia.

And to insert in lieu thereof the following:

Provided, That no part of the money herein appropriated shall be used for payment to any telephone company doing business in the District of Columbia for the use of any telephone within said District for communicating therefrom to any other telephone connected to a central office of such company in the District of Columbia except at the following rates: Sixty dollars per annum for a telephone on an individual metallic circuit, $48 per annum for each telephone on the same premises, there being not more than two on the same metallic circuit, and no contract shall be made with any telephone company for such use of such telephones in excess of the rates herein specified: Provided, That until the population of the city of Washington shall be 350,000 or over no more than the above specified rates shall be charged by any telephone company doing business in the District of Columbia for such use of such telephones at private residences within the District of Columbia, and any acts or parts of acts heretofore enacted fixing telephone rates for grounded circuits in the District of Columbia are hereby repealed: Provided further, That the refusal of the company to comply with the provisions of this act shall be a misdemeanor, and such refusal shall subject the company to a fine of not less than one nor more than five hundred dollars for each and every offense.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, this subject of telephone service came before the Committee on the District of Columbia some two or three years ago, and the committee gave parties a several days' hearing. It arose on an application to incorporate another company. The old company made wonderfully good promises, and on their good promises the committee failed to indorse the project that had come from the House. The committee gave them another trial. I fear we adopted the wrong policy. The service is not good. I think it is worse than it is in almost any other city. The charges are certainly sufficiently high to furnish good service. They said they could do it and they have not done it.

I rather think that the House has done about right. The telephone company ought to be brought up and made to comply. We ought to have good telephone service here. The theory is that Congress can control them, but this particular company has been out from under the control of Congress all the time. They go to the Supreme Court on the question whether they are bound to pay the rates fixed by Congress, and they continue in that way. I am inclined to think that we had better follow the House provision. I do not think it is too severe under the circumstances. They will not comply with that provision, and they will not comply with the Senate amendment if it is passed. They are not going to comply if they are not compelled to do so, and I do not know any way to compel them.

I am sorry we did not organize an independent company. I am sorry now that I did not vote to organize an independent company. But the injury to the streets by tearing them up was obvious, and the promises of this company were very fine. But they have gone on in the same way, and I think every Senator here and every Member of the House and the whole community knows that the service is not good.

Mr. CLAY. I see the Senate amendment reduces the amount fixed by the House. The House provision reads as follows:

Fifty dollars per annum for the use of a telephone on a single wire; $40 per annum for each telephone, there being not more than two on a wire; $30 per annum for each telephone, there being not more than three on a wire, etc.

What rates are we paying now?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator from Georgia that the rate is $72 now where the Senate committee makes the rate $60, and $60 where the Senate committee makes it $48, and for good and sufficient reasons, which the Senator from Iowa will explain, I have no doubt.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to hear some explanation.

Mr. CLAY. The House reduced the rate from $72?

Mr. GALLINGER. From $72 to $50.

Mr. CLAY. The Senate committee proposes to reduce it from $72 to $60?

Mr. GALLINGER. Precisely. The House reduced another rate from $60 to $40, and the Senate committee proposes to reduce it from $60 to $48.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to hear from the chairman what the prospect is, if this amendment is adopted, of inducing or compelling the company to observe these rates.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator will observe that there is a penalty attached to the clause.

Mr. STEWART. I do not know whether we can do anything with them. It is a most tremendous company, a most annoying company, a most aggravating company. I do not know whether anything can be done with them or not; but if the chairman of the committee has got a wayout to suggest, I should like to hear it.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, this has been somewhat of a difficult question, which I had hoped the Committee on Appropriations would escape and the Committee on the District of Columbia, which seems to be the proper committee to deal with this question, would be able to solve by means of some legislation upon the subject. But the House of Representatives dealt with this question on the pending bill, and, of course, we were obliged to take it up and consider it as best we could in the limited time we had for its consideration. We found, however, at the threshold of the consideration of the provision inserted by the House that it is not an adequate provision to deal with the question. It is in substance a reenactment of the law of 1898; in fact, I am not quite sure but that it is the same provision exactly.

Mr. STEWART. Let me ask the Senator if there would be any difficulty in inserting rates fixed by the House in the provision reported by the Senate committee?

Mr. ALLISON. Of course we can insert the same rates under different conditions. The House provision is as follows, reading only the first clause: "That no part of the money," etc., shall be paid "for any telephone service, except at the following rates: Fifty dollars per annum for the use of a telephone on a single wire."

That is the clause which was inserted in the appropriation act of 1898, and under it the supreme court of the District of Columbia decided that it was an unreasonable rate. The matter went to the appellate court of the District of Columbia, and I believe they reversed that decision. The matter was then appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States, and they decided that under the provisions of the law it was manifest that only one kind of telephone was to be under consideration and they were not able to judge which was intended, whether it was a telephone upon what is known as a grounded circuit or upon a telephone with a metallic circuit.

Thereupon they returned the case to the appellate court of the District of Columbia to take testimony upon that subject. Testimony was taken, when it appeared from the testimony that the provision of the law of 1898 provided for only a grounded-circuit telephone, and, as a matter of fact, now, with some eight or ten thousand telephones, I believe there are only about one hundred belonging to the system known as the "grounded-wire service," which is the provision of the House in the pending bill. Therefore, we were called upon to deal with the whole question.

Mr. MALLORY. If the Senator will permit me, I will say, in reference to his statement, that the Committee on the District of Columbia at the last session gave a hearing to the representatives of the telephone company and also to those who were contesting the rates charged by the telephone company. There was an association here in Washington formed to contest those rates, and under the auspices of that association the suits to which the Senator has referred were instituted. The Committee on the District of Columbia appointed a subcommittee to give this hearing.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from Florida will state that matter in detail, as he is very familiar with it.

Mr. MALLORY. I am only going to fill up what the Senator has omitted.

That subcommittee consisted of the Senator from New Hampshire and myself. This hearing revealed the fact that the association in Washington had come to the conclusion that it was better probably not to push the suit any further. Their representatives before the subcommittee stated that they were perfectly willing to have the contention laid aside for the present and the rates which had been contended for abandoned. In other words, it was admitted practically before the subcommittee that the rates which were then charged under the act of 1898 were too low for the existing conditions. That is my present impression. This year the committee has had no evidence bearing on the subject at all; but I do not think there is any doubt of the fact that up to this time last year those who had been most prominent in contesting these rates concluded the rates were not too high.

Mr. ALLISON. On further examination of this question, we ascertained that although the former management of the telephone company had been subjected, as I think very reasonably and properly, to severe criticism on account of the method of service which they adopted, the present management were making an earnest and honest endeavor to greatly improve the service in this District. They stated to the committee that they had been expending, within the last year or eighteen months, more than a million and a half dollars; that they would expend this year $750,000, and next year perhaps a half million dollars more to perfect the service in this District. That expenditure is being made by the establishment of three or four central stations, thoroughly equipped to render efficient and effective service. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] calls my attention to the fact that they stated that the whole of the money that they were expending here was borrowed money and that the company itself for the last three years has paid no dividends upon its stock.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PERKINS in the chair.) Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I wish to ask the Senator from Iowa whether any report is made annually by this company of its receipts and expenditures on account of capital and income and operation, as is required in the case of other quasi public corporations?

Mr. ALLISON. I think so, though I am not sure. If there is no such report made, there ought to be one. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] will know whether the company make an annual report.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think they do not.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Then, if the Senator from Iowa will pardon me, I have drafted an amendment to this section——

Mr. ALLISON. I shall be glad, of course, to hear the Senator make any statement.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I should like to ask the Senator a question for information.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator will make it brief.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will make it as brief as possible. Has the Senator the data before him which will enable him to answer and tell the Senate whether or not this company has been declaring unusually large dividends upon its capital stock?

Mr. ALLISON. I am prepared to give the Senator such information as the committee has on that subject.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is all I ask.

Mr. ALLISON. It was stated to us that for three years the company had paid no dividends at all, and for several years only 2 or 3 per cent. I think the highest dividend paid upon the capital stock of the company was 5 per cent.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to ask a question. Has the telephone company assented to the rate fixed by the amendment of the committee?

Mr. ALLISON. I understand they have—that is to say, they are willing to carry out in good faith in every way the provision of the clause which we have inserted in the bill; and I have no doubt they will do so.

Mr. STEWART. If they will, I shall be content.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator from Nevada that they voluntarily came before the committee and assented to it. They suggested that they were willing that a penalty clause should be attached; that they proposed to observe the law, and that they wanted to give this city a first-class telephone service at a living rate; and we were assured——

Mr. STEWART. We have had so many assurances in the past that have not been lived up to that I am always somewhat doubtful about them; but, under all the circumstances, if there is a reasonable probability that the company will live up to their assurances, I shall be content.

Mr. GALLINGER. Perhaps the Senator has not had many assurances from the present management. Mr. Bethell has been at the head of the company only two years.

Mr. STEWART. I was not referring to the present management, but to the former management.

Mr. ALLISON. In answer to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], I will say that we took testimony upon that subject. If the Senator will look at the hearings before the committee, he will see that this whole question was very thoroughly inquired into. The average dividend for the last twenty-one years has been $2\frac{1}{10}$ per cent per annum. I think it was stated that for the last two and a half or three years the company had paid no dividends whatever and that they have been and are making, as we know they are making, very large improvements here.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say that for the last four years no dividends have been paid. I have in my possession letters from two citizens of the District of Columbia, saying that they own stock in this company, that they have received no dividends for four years, and protesting that Congress ought to deal justly with this corporation and with the citizens of the District who chance to own a little stock in the company.

Mr. ALLISON. The committee did the best they could in this matter. They fixed the rate at $60 per annum for a telephone on an individual metallic circuit, and $48 per annum for each telephone on the same premises, there being not more than two on the same metallic circuit. So, under all the circumstances, Senators will see that the rates are not unreasonable.

The statements made to us convinced us that the rates we have provided for in the bill are reasonable for the present, but we are not restricted from changing those rates at any time when we think they have become oppressive to the people. The amendment is so guarded that Congress maintains control of the whole subject so far as the rates are concerned, as I think it ought to retain the power of changing rates as long as there is but one telephone company in this District.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. NEWLANDS. With the permission of the Senator, I wish to offer an amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I offer an amendment to come in after line 9 on page 38; and as it is very much interlined, perhaps I had better read it myself. It is to add to the amendment of the committee the following:

That every telephone company doing business in the District of Columbia shall annually, on or before the 15th of January of each year, report under oath to the Congress a classified statement of its receipts and expenditures for the previous calendar year, dividing them into receipts and expenditures on account of capital as well as income and operation in the District of Columbia, and that such report for the first year shall state the actual cost of their works in the District of Columbia.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I do not care to occupy much time on this matter, but it is a subject to which I have given a good deal of thought; and I have endeavored to do my duty in regard to it as chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Some three years ago, if I remember correctly, a company of gentlemen came to Washington, men of standing, and I have no doubt of integrity, who insisted that we should charter a new telephone company in the District of Columbia. We gave a patient hearing to those gentlemen. They made a proposition that they would furnish telephone service very much cheaper than we were getting. After a patient hearing we concluded that we could regulate the existing company and that it was not wise to have the streets of Washington torn up by a new corporation. Some of us had in mind the fact that an electric-light company had come here a little while before, and by rather sharp practice had been chartered, and had torn up our streets to furnish electric light in competition with the existing company. After a little time they sold out at a very large profit and left the city. So we did not conclude to incorporate this new telephone company.

They went to Baltimore, got a permit from the city council, established a telephone company there, and furnished service a little cheaper than the existing company for a time; but after a little while they sent a petition to the city government saying they were unable to continue to furnish that service as cheaply as they thought they could do it, and asking that their rates should be largely enhanced, to a point, as I remember, somewhat in excess of the provision in the Senate bill. I have been told that the city council did not give them that right, but notwithstanding that they proceeded to increase their rates, and they are charging those rates now. How long they will continue in operation, of course, is problematical. The rule is that such companies go out of existence by consolidation with the existing companies.

Mr. President, the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate has tried with great earnestness and sincerity to deal justly as between the citizens of this District and this telephone company. The committee appreciate the fact that this company has large privileges and that it ought to give good service to this people at a reasonable rate.

There has been poor service in the District of Columbia, but there is reason for it. The company is now in the hands of progressive men; men who assert—and we have every reason to believe them, because their integrity is unquestioned—that they propose to give this city a model telephone system and that they do not expect or desire to secure profits beyond those that ought reasonably to be given to them.

The inadequacy of the service, however, has been from causes that I feel could not have been avoided. Mr. Bethell, the president of the company, gave those reasons, and I think they are absolutely just and fair reasons. I want to read something that Mr. Bethell has said. He said:

> In 1901 the company entered upon a general plan of improvement. In the following year Congress passed a law authorizing the extension of the underground conduit system in Washington, and in that year 75 miles and in 1903 57 miles of underground ducts were constructed.

I want here to say that those underground ducts have been constructed, and the old unsightly poles and overhead wires have been removed, so that we are rapidly approaching the time when there will not be an overhead telephone wire in the District of Columbia, a consummation very much to be desired.

> In all subways (old and new) space for the fire and police wires of the District of Columbia is provided free of charge. (The telephones used by the District in its fire and police systems are furnished by this company at the rate of $5 per year.)—

That is, they have independent switchboards, and they get this cheap service, as do the apartment houses and hotels in the District.

> A building costing, including site, about $200,000 was erected at Fourteenth and R streets NW., and upon its completion a modern central office equipment was installed therein. Another new building, to cost about $225,000, on Twelfth street, near G NW., is nearing completion, in which a new and complete exchange equipment will be installed at an early date. The work is now under way and will be completed in the early part of this summer.

It might be said, in addition to that, that the company has erected an exchange on B street, just opposite the Capitol, which they propose to abandon in a little time, erecting a very fine central exchange on East Capitol street for serving the eastern portion of the city. So that they will have three magnificent central stations, entirely new, in the near future.

> On the whole, in enlarging and improving the telephone plant in Washington, approximately $1,500,000 of new money has already been invested. The plans for construction and reconstruction work in 1904 alone call for an outlay of approximately $750,000.
> The purpose of the management has been and is to provide in Washington a telephone system that for comprehensiveness and completeness shall not be surpassed. In January of this year the plant now under construction was inspected by the general manager and chief engineer of the National Telephone Company of Great Britain. They had visited the principal cities of Europe and America, and upon the completion of their inspection declared that nowhere had they seen provision for the future made on such an adequate scale as in the city of Washington.
> We appreciate that during the general reconstruction work that has been going on our service has not been up to the high standard of efficiency which we hope soon to be able to maintain. We practically have been replacing an old telephone plant with a new one, at the same time being compelled to keep the old one in constant operation.

Mr. President, I suggest that that is a very reasonable explanation of the inadequate service we have had here. The company have been constructing a new plant, and while they have been doing so they have been endeavoring to supply an increased service, extending their lines miles and miles in this territory under the legislation of a year ago, and of course their means have been inadequate to meet the demands that have been made upon them.

I have sometimes thought that their operators were not trained as well as are the operators in other cities. I have called the attention of the managers of this telephone company to that fact, and they have given me the assurance that if there is any lack in that respect they will see that it is overcome in some reasonable and proper way.

One of those gentlemen made an observation to me that impressed me quite profoundly as one reason, perhaps, why some people do not get good service in Washington. He said that people come here from all parts of the United States, from city and country alike, and that while the telephone company here, as in all other cities, required the number to be called to the operator, those people were in the habit, when they were at home, especially in the smaller places, of asking for "John Smith" or "John Doe" or somebody else. Of course in the country towns and smaller places the operator could turn to the book and ascertain the number of that particular patron. They do the same thing, it is said, in Washington, coming as they do from all over the country, and they get into a controversy with the operator. The operator says, petulantly, "What is the number?" and the reply comes back, "Find it yourself; you can do that." So there is interruption not only to that patron but to the service as a whole. I think that is really worth taking into consideration.

Mr. President, for one, I want this company to observe the provisions of this bill if they become a law, and I should have no patience with the company if it did not observe these provisions. The penalty is adequate if they do not observe the law. We do not think we ought to go to the extent the House of Representatives did, and upon some offense on the part of this company revoke their right to do business in the District of Columbia. That did not seem to be a reasonable penalty; but we put a penalty in the bill for each and every offense, which I think is fully adequate.

The rates that we place in this bill seem to the committee just rates. They are a large reduction from the existing rates, and if the reduction is not found to be sufficient, at the next session of Congress we can reduce them further.

Mr. CLAY. The Senator says this bill makes a large reduction over the existing rates. I will ask the Senator how long we have been paying the existing rates and if at any time in the past the rates have been lower than the rates named here?

Mr. GALLINGER. It was not very many years ago that this company was charging from $95 to $100 for what we now require them to furnish for $60.

Mr. CLAY. The Senator means the Senate amendment fixes the rates lower than they have ever been heretofore?

Mr. GALLINGER. Undoubtedly, and very much lower. As compared with other places, a good many people have said to me that telephone rates in Washington were exorbitant. It was only two months ago that an effort was made in the legislature of Massachusetts to get lower telephone rates. In that discussion, a report of which I have in my desk somewhere, the promoter of that proposition—a very wise measure—pointed to Washington as the model city so far as rates were concerned, comparing the rates here with the rates that were paid in Massachusetts.

Mr. COCKRELL. And the rates were then $72 instead of $60, as now proposed.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes. There was another point to be considered that was brought out in that discussion—that while they pay in Boston, in New York, and, I think, in every other large city or city of considerable size in the country, 10 cents for a call message, the company in this city last year voluntarily reduced their charge for a call message from 10 cents to 5 cents. So that, not having a telephone, I may call up a number for 5 cents, while if I go to Boston I pay 10 cents, and I think if I go to any city of considerable size in the country I pay 10 cents for that service. The company in the District did that voluntarily. We did not require it of them.

I am not appearing here by any means as the champion of this corporation, but I want to say I am so fully persuaded in my own mind that this company means to do the right thing in this community and to give good service for reasonable rates that I trust the amendment, which the Committee on Appropriations has worked out after a good deal of thought and care, may be incorporated in this bill.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, with reference to the rates which are proposed by this bill, I would call the attention of the Senate to a statement made before the subcommittee of the Committee on the District of Columbia in February of last year on the subject by the representatives of the Telephone Subscribers' Association. That association was organized for the purpose of compelling this telephone company to comply with the statute of 1898, and the subcommittee had before it the statement of the manager or the president of the telephone company to the effect that it had not observed the statutory rate; in other words, the telephone company up to that time had claimed that Congress had no right to impose these specific rates, that these rates were ruinously low, and they ignored them and paid no attention to them.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, I think he falls into a slight error. I think the company has always admitted that Congress had a right to deal with this question, but that the company, on the other hand, if the legislation was in the nature of confiscation, had a right to go to the courts and test the matter there.

Mr. MALLORY. That practically is about it. They contended that these rates were ruinous, and that they had a right to contest them in the courts. I drew that out myself by a question which I asked Mr. Bethell—if he had been observing the statutory rates, and he told me emphatically, "We have not." I asked:

> Have you been observing the statutory rates?
> Mr. BETHELL. No, sir; that is what all this litigation has been about.

That was at a hearing with reference to the repeal of the act of 1898. The telephone company desired it repealed. The Subscribers' Association, through three attorneys representing them—Messrs. Arthur A. Birney, Henry F. Woodard, and John J. Hemphill—appeared before the subcommittee and submitted a statement as to the attitude of this association on the subject of the repeal of the act of 1898. I will say in passing that I believe the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] is correct in saying that the rates proposed by the House proposition this year are about the same as they were under the act of 1898.

Mr. GALLINGER. Just the same.

Mr. MALLORY. That company, after having had this contest for several years and taken it up to the Supreme Court of the United States, made this statement to the subcommittee:

> The act of 1898 was never satisfactory to anyone. Its author did not intend that it should become a law in the form in which it was presented by him to the House of Representatives, and it has been always regarded by the association as wholly inadequate to the situation. It does not at all cover the ground, and if it is to stand it should be added to by further provisions.
> The association also recognizes that since the passage of this act of 1898 local conditions have greatly changed. Improvements in methods have been introduced and average rates of charges have been lessened. In view of these changes the act of 1898 is yet more unsatisfactory, and in the light of information not accessible in 1898 the justice of the act has become more doubtful. The association also finds that many of its supporters in 1898 are now apparently satisfied with the treatment accorded them by the telephone company and are unwilling to give further financial or moral support to the continuance of litigation.
> The association has never wished to do injustice to this company, and under existing circumstances is willing to withdraw its opposition to the proposed act of repeal and rely upon the sense of justice of Congress to see to it hereafter that a proper inquiry be made into what are fair rates and to compel them.
> ARTHUR A. BIRNEY,
> HENRY F. WOODARD,
> JOHN J. HEMPHILL,
> Attorneys for the Association.

I will state that that association was the only body of men in the District of Columbia that made any united effort to require this telephone company to comply with the law, and in the statement, as I have read it, they expressed the opinion that further agitation of the subject was unnecessary.

I am inclined to think, Mr. President, that the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate has done very wisely. From the testimony that we have had it is very apparent to me that under the new conditions, under the improvements instituted, and the additional expenses incurred by the telephone company, the rates fixed arbitrarily by the act of 1898 are insufficient to give a paying compensation for the service, and while the rates are reduced by the proposition of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, they are not reduced so low as to make them nonpaying, as I believe would be the case if we adhered to the House proposition.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire simply to add that while the distinguished legal gentlemen who were attorneys for the organization that was contesting this matter agreed to drop it, saying that they were satisfied that the citizens generally did not object to the existing rates, nevertheless the Committee on Appropriations has taken this matter up, and has made a reduction of some 15 per cent, I think—I have not accurately estimated it; but I think it amounts to about 15 per cent upon the existing rates.

As an illustration of how the matter stands at the present time, I want simply to add that while I have had two letters from citizens of the District, who happened to hold a little of the stock of this telephone company, saying that we ought to deal generously with this corporation—I think naturally stockholders would say that—they tell me that they have not been paid any dividends.

I have received several letters from citizens of the District who do not own any stock expressing the same view, and there has been just one gentleman who appeared either in the committee room of the Committee on the District of Columbia or in the committee room of the Committee on Appropriations asking for a further reduction than we have proposed in this bill. There is not at the present time any stir in the city of Washington or the District of Columbia over this matter, and if we make this large reduction in the rates and attach the penalty which was in the law of 1898, so that this company will have to observe the law whether they want to or not, it seems to me that everybody ought to feel that we have made a very wise adjudication of a controverted matter that is always troublesome in legislation.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator from New Hampshire allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART. I understood the Senator to say there was no general sentiment about this matter. I do not know so much about the rates as I do about the bad service—that has been explained—but I think the Senator could hardly go to a place where a telephone is used very much that he would not see excitement and hear talk about it all the while. I imagine he would hear language used in almost every telephone station that we would not use here.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think I will agree with the Senator about the service. It has not been good.

Now, Mr. President, I want to say further that a gentleman connected with the Business Men's Association, a prominent citizen of the District, who was very active in the litigation that went on here for several years against the telephone corporation, came into the committee room the other day and said that he did not think anything need to be done, that he thought the existing conditions well enough. But we did not take his word for it. We proceeded to do something.

Mr. GORMAN obtained the floor.

Mr. HOAR. I shall be obliged to leave the Senate Chamber for the rest of the day, and I have the consent of the chairman of the committee to offer an amendment, which will be adopted as a matter of course without taking any time, if the Senator from Maryland will permit me.

Mr. GORMAN. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to offer an amendment, to insert at the end of the bill the following:

> That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby directed to report to Congress at its next session a plan for the removal to a certain suitable place within the city of Washington of the remains of Pierre Charles L'Enfant and erecting a proper monument or gravestone over them, or erecting such monument or stone where they are now buried, as may seem to them most desirable.

It is merely a direction to the Commissioners to report. This is the engineer who laid out the city of Washington.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest to the Senator that the amendment be inserted on page 81, after line 21.

Mr. HOAR. Very well; I will ask that it be inserted on page 81, after line 21.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator offer it for present consideration?

Mr. HOAR. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to the amendment. It should be marked section 2, as it does not relate to anything else. The Senator asks unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Maryland permit me to make one remark?

Mr. GORMAN. With great pleasure.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before I sat down I meant to say that, so far as I am individually concerned as a member of the two committees that have had to deal with this matter first and last, I see no objection to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, only a word. I did not hear very distinctly what the Senator from New Hampshire said, or all that he said, in relation to the attempt of another company to enter the District for the purpose of establishing a telephone system here. But I did understand him to intimate that it was one of the usual attempts to come into the city, possibly for speculative purposes.

I desire to say that that company, the headquarters of which is in Baltimore, has in its organization as reputable men as there are in the United States, and they are engaged in a very great enterprise. They have a great many thousand telephones in that city. Their lines extend to the west and north of that city. They were anxious to reach the capital city. They believed at that time that they could make a very great profit at rates much lower than the rates named in this bill. They did obtain from the mayor and city council of Baltimore the right not only to lay conduits of their own, but to use, greatly to their advantage, the whole system of conduits constructed by the city of Baltimore, whereas we all know that in this city the companies are required to make that expenditure, which is one of a very great amount.

After a perfectly legitimate and well-managed effort for several years they were compelled to acknowledge that it was utterly impossible, with the advanced prices of all the materials and of the labor that enter into the conduct of the telephone business, to fix as low a rate as that prescribed in this bill now for the city of Washington. My only criticism of the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations is that it looks to me, in view of the experience elsewhere, where there are five or six hundred thousand people to serve, that you have the rates too low.

Now, as to the service, I wish to make one other observation. Under your legislation requiring this company to place all of its wires underground, with the construction of these miles and miles of conduits in the last year or two, the work of the distribution of the wires has been one of magnitude. In addition to that, I want to say, in justice to the company, which also operates in the State of Maryland, and even goes through to the North, that during the last two months I think much of the trouble in operation has come from the fact that the great switchboard, costing thousands and thousands of dollars, which was constructed to improve the service in this city, they were compelled, on account of the great conflagration in the adjoining city, to move from this point to Baltimore, so that there might be some service there.

Our people feel that the present organization of the Potomac Telephone Company has responded nobly to an extraordinary degree in our State; and I, for one, if it were not for the fact, as I am informed, that the company has agreed to these rates, would suggest that instead of the $60 rate you give them the $72 rate, the same as is charged by both companies in the city of Baltimore, where, as I say, there are 600,000 inhabitants. It was fixed there after the most thorough examination by a commission; and, if I recollect aright, one of its members belonged to Johns Hopkins University, and there were other gentlemen of that class. They took up the matter in detail—the cost of the construction of the plant, the cost of operating it—and they found that that rate was not excessive.

I wish to assure the Senator and the Senate that the effort on the part of the former company, known as the Maryland Company, was a perfectly legitimate one; and I have no doubt that if they had been admitted to this city the rates would not have been as low as you have fixed them in this bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, lest an impression should go out that I criticised these gentlemen, I will say to the Senator from Maryland that possibly he did not hear my observation that they were gentlemen of high standing and integrity. They simply thought they could do the thing they contemplated both here and in Baltimore, but after an experiment in Baltimore they found that it was utterly impossible for them to do it. I never questioned the integrity or the high standing of the men connected with that company.

Mr. GORMAN. I am assured by Senators sitting around me that I misunderstood the Senator. I came in late.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 39, line 4, to increase the appropriation for illuminating material, lighting, extinguishing, repairing, and cleaning public lamps on avenues, streets, roads, and alleys, etc., from $209,000 to $219,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of line 25 on page 39.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if he is willing now to have the pension Calendar taken up for the rest of the day?

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator will wait a moment or two until we reach the Washington Aqueduct I will yield to him for an hour on pensions.

Mr. McCUMBER. That will be perfectly satisfactory.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 40, line 7, after the word "paragraph," to insert the following proviso:

And provided further, That during the fiscal year 1905 the illuminating power of the gas furnished by any gas-lighting company, person, or persons in the District of Columbia shall be equal to 22 candles, notwithstanding the requirements as to candlepower prescribed by section 3 of the act regulating the sale of gas in the District of Columbia approved June 6, 1896.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, line 18, before the word "thousand," to strike out "eighty-three" and insert "eighty-eight;" so as to read:

For electric arc lighting, including necessary inspection, and for extensions of such service, not exceeding $88,700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, line 19, before the word "dollars," to strike out "eighty" and insert "eighty-five;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That not more than $85 per annum shall be paid for any electric arc light burning from fifteen minutes after sunset to forty-five minutes before sunrise and operated wholly by means of underground wire.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, line 1, after the word "Washington," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized, in their discretion, to permit the Potomac Electric Power Company to make connections between its conduits and the conduits of the Washington Railway and Electric Company and all other companies controlled by the Washington Railway and Electric Company for the purpose of furnishing electric current through the said conduits for public and private uses, the use of said railway companies' conduits to be upon such terms as may be agreed upon between the said companies.

The amendment was agreed to.

CONSIDERATION OF UNOBJECTED PENSION CASES.

Mr. ALLISON. I now yield to the Senator from North Dakota, chairman of the Committee on Pensions, who wishes to occupy an hour on pension cases.

Mr. McCUMBER. I would ask the Senator, if there is nothing else to be done this afternoon, whether he would have any objection to our running possibly a little over an hour?

Mr. ALLISON. I will not object to the Senator running a little over an hour, although I think we ought to adjourn at half past 5, or soon after that hour.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. This is for the consideration of unobjected pension cases?

Mr. ALLISON. Unobjected cases.

Mr. McCUMBER. Unobjected cases.

Mr. McCREARY. Will the District of Columbia appropriation bill be called up again during the day?

Mr. ALLISON. Not during the day.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask unanimous consent that the appropriation bill be laid aside temporarily, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of unobjected pension cases on the Calendar.

Mr. QUAY. I suppose the understanding is that nothing but pension business shall be transacted this afternoon.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is all.

Mr. ALLISON. That is the understanding.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is the request.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Chair will put that in the request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota asks unanimous consent that the remainder of the day be devoted to the consideration of unobjected pension cases.

Mr. SCOTT. And where there are on the Calendar unobjected bills to remove the charge of desertion, let them be considered, too.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Those have not been selected out by the clerks, and it would take some time to do it.

Mr. QUAY. I think it had better be confined to pension bills.

Mr. WARREN. I do not think there are many military bills.

Mr. SCOTT. Let it go.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Dakota? The Chair hears none. The first case on the Calendar will be stated.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, March 25, 1904.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that bills on the Private Calendar in order for to-day under the rule may be in order to-morrow; that to-morrow be substituted for to-day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that to-morrow may be substituted for to-day in considering bills on the Private Calendar.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. One moment. Mr. Speaker, I wish to inquire if the report in the Swayne impeachment case has been filed in the House?

The SPEAKER. It has not.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I wish to inquire if the gentleman from New Hampshire will not so modify his request that to-morrow shall be given over to the Pension Committee, subject to the appropriation bill for the post-office service, as it is possible that bill may not be concluded to-day?

Mr. SULLOWAY. If that should happen, I should ask unanimous consent in the morning for some other day.

Mr. CUSHMAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Do I understand if the motion of the gentleman shall carry and to-morrow be substituted for to-day for the consideration of pension matters, that the order will carry with it the order in reference to an Alaskan Delegate?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a continuing order, as the Chair recollects. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

REPORT FROM COMMITTEE ON RULES.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to whom was referred House resolution No. 269: "Resolved, That it shall be in order for the House in Committee of the Whole to consider so much of H. R. 13521 as is embraced between the word 'substation,' in line 25 of page 25, and the word 'For,' in line 13 on page 26, as if the same were not subject to a point of order"— have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to report the same with the recommendation that it be agreed to by the House.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, one word in explanation of the rule. The rule provides that the text of the post-office appropriation bill contained between the word "substations," page 25, and the word "for," in line 13, page 26, shall be in order for consideration. I will read to the House what the text of the post-office bill is as described in the rule:

On and after July 1, 1904, letter carriers of the rural free-delivery service shall receive a salary not exceeding $720 per annum, and no other or further allowance or salary shall be made to said carriers; and on and after said date said carriers shall not solicit business or receive orders of any kind for any person, firm, or corporation, and shall not, during their hours of employment, carry any merchandise for hire: Provided, That said carriers may carry merchandise for hire for and upon the request of patrons residing upon their respective routes whenever the same shall not interfere with the proper discharge of their official duties, and under such regulations as the Postmaster-General may prescribe.

In other words, the effect of the rule is to put back again into the bill that which was taken out of it yesterday upon points of order, and to afford the Committee of the Whole a chance to consider that portion of the post-office appropriation bill as if the points of order had not been made.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. The rule is "to consider so much of the bill" as is embraced between certain words. There is nothing in the bill now that was stricken out yesterday. There is nothing left in the bill pertaining to the matter that was stricken out yesterday.

Mr. DALZELL. There is the language that I have read between the words I have referred to.

Mr. MANN. That language has been stricken out of the bill.

Mr. LACEY. It has been stricken out in the committee, but not in the House.

Mr. OVERSTREET. When the rule refers to "the bill," it refers to the bill as it was in the House. I think that is a technical objection on the part of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. I think it refers to the bill as it now stands.

Mr. DALZELL. It refers to House bill 13521, to so much of the language as is contained between the word "substations," on page 25, and the word "for," in line 13, page 26. I do not see how anything could be any more explicit and definite.

Mr. MANN But the committee has stricken that out.

Mr. DALZELL. And the Committee on Rules has put it back.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNSEND. If this rule carries and there was an amendment to increase the salaries above $720, would it be in order to amend the first part of the section to provide for the appropriation?

Mr. DALZELL. Undoubtedly.

Mr. OVERSTREET. That part of the section has been passed without prejudice.

Mr. DALZELL. Now, Mr. Speaker, I will yield to the gentleman from Mississippi. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Twenty minutes, although I may not use it. I may want to yield some time to gentlemen on this side.

Mr. DALZELL. I will yield to the gentleman from Mississippi twenty minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, this rule is illustrative of the fact that the majority in this House can do things whenever the majority want to do it. I mean by that the partisan majority. I want to say this in explanation of the rule, so that the House may understand the rule. What the rule does in this case, Mr. Speaker, is simply to declare that the provisions of the bill concerning rural free-delivery carriers which were stricken out on a point of order shall not, after the adoption of the rule, be subject to the point of order. In other words, the language of the bill as reported by the Committee on Post-Office and Post-Roads which was stricken out upon a point of order yesterday is replaced in the bill, and, being replaced there, becomes subject to amendment by the House under the ordinary parliamentary rules which govern the House while sitting in Committee of the Whole.

The report from the Committee on Rules is a unanimous report. It merely gives the House the right to pass upon and consider and amend, if it chooses, these provisions of the bill as if they had never been subject to a point of order. In other words, it puts things in the same attitude as they would have been in if the point of order had never been made, or, if having been made, it had been withdrawn, leaving the House the fullest liberty to adopt, reject, or amend the proposed provision.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I will ask if there is anyone on this side of the Chamber who would like to be heard?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would like to have some time in opposition to the rule.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I will yield the balance of my time, with the exception of three minutes, to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. FITZGERALD. I shall not want the whole time, but some one else may want it. I think five minutes will do.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I have had some experience with machines, and I think I understand the futility of attempting to stop the onward progress of a machine that is well geared. I understand that this House will adopt this rule so as to permit the consideration, out of order under the rules of the House, of legislation for the benefit of rural free-delivery carriers. I am not opposed to the rural free-delivery carriers having such compensation as may be fair, but I wish to protest against that system of legislation which permits the rural free-delivery carriers to be taken care of upon a post-office appropriation bill, when it is utterly impossible to have any consideration whatever given to the claims of the letter carriers in the great cities. For ten years the city carriers have been advocating some legislation from Congress. The result of ten years' agitation is that when this bill is disposed of, when there will be no possible chance of securing favorable action upon any legislation whatever, the city carriers will be given, before the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, a hearing upon the various matters in which they are interested.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Has the gentleman asked for a rule in regard to that?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Some four or five years ago, Mr. Speaker, the Postmaster-General called attention to the fact that the letter carriers were willing to permit 2 per cent of their salaries to be retained in order to establish a retirement fund. No consideration could be had of such a provision in the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads or in this House. I read the other day of a letter carrier who had retired after fifty years' service, and no provision whatever made for his keep or sustenance during the rest of his life. In the report of the Postmaster-General last year the attention of Congress was called to the fact that in the great cities carriers are first appointed as substitutes and must serve for two or four years in that capacity before they can get a regular appointment. They must report every day at the post-office in the locality in which they are on the list for appointment. Their earnings do not exceed, except in rare cases, $200 a year. After three or four years' service as substitutes they get a regular appointment at $600 a year, and the maximum salary is $1,000.

The Postmaster-General urged upon Congress the necessity of making some provision so that these substitutes could earn at least $360 a year, and yet it is impossible in this House to secure the consideration of such legislation. In the city of New York the letter carriers are considered to be engaged in an occupation similar to that of firemen and policemen. The maximum salary of firemen and policemen is $1,400 a year. After twenty years' service they can retire upon half pay. If they die, their widows or minor children are pensioned from a pension fund which is created by taxing the salaries of those in the service of the city and by contributions from the excise and other funds. We should be in a position to obtain men under as favorable conditions for service in the Post-Office Department as the city is for the fire and police departments. It is not possible under the rules of this House to get consideration of any measure for the benefit of the carriers. They have not made exorbitant requests of Congress. In those cities in which the maximum salary is now $1,000 a year they ask that after four years' service as regulars they be given $1,200, and in those cities where the maximum salary is now $850 a year they ask that the maximum salary after four years' service be $1,000.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I would like about two minutes more.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Mississippi yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. FITZGERALD. All that they ask is the same opportunity to have legislation in which they are interested considered as those who are engaged in the rural service will get from this House.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. COWHERD. The gentleman has spoken of the carriers' proposition to reserve a part of their salaries for a civil pension or retiring pension. The same proposition is up in all of the Departments of this Government. I would like to ask the gentleman if he favors creating a fund from which to have a civil pension list in the Departments of this Government, whether the postal service or elswhere?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not generally.

Mr. COWHERD. Does the gentleman favor it in any branch of the Government?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Perhaps. We are not considering that. We are simply attempting now to get in some way before Congress or the committees of Congress an opportunity to discuss and consider the various measures urged in behalf of these men and then let the measures be decided upon their merits. I am not prepared to say that I am in favor of a pension fund for any class of Federal employees, to be very frank.

In fact, I am inclined to be against it, but I do believe that we should have some opportunity to consider measures in which a vast number of men are interested. Under the Executive order issued by the President the letter carriers have submitted their claims to the Department. As was shown in this House last week, the rural free-delivery carriers have sent broadcast throughout the country a statement that the Department would ignore their action in attempting to influence Congress.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has again expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I yield one more minute to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I simply wish now to enter my protest against this system of favoritism in legislation for any branch of the Government employees. Why not give all fair play? Why not permit us to present the claims of the carriers to this House, and if you are opposed to them, you have the votes here to defeat the measures that would be presented. I know it is futile to attempt to defeat this rule, because those interested in the rural carriers are in the majority; but I shall live to see the day when the men who are now so active in behalf of the rural carriers will be relegated to private life, because they will not dare to stand up in advocacy of the measures those same rural carriers will demand, and, in all probability, I will be here when you gentlemen will be out. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. Five minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON].

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, under the rules, this paragraph stricken out yesterday comes back to the House for consideration, subject to amendment. I want to give notice to the House that when an opportunity is afforded I shall move to strike out from line 15, beginning with the word "and," down to and including the word "hire," in line 19. Under the present law carriers may carry merchandise. This bill prohibits that, unless called for by a patron of the office. The provisions of this bill, taken together, practically make the whole thing nugatory. Take my town or your town; a druggist or merchant wants a package sent out. He writes to a patron of the route and asks him to ask permission that this package may be carried and delivered. As the bill stands, every patron on the line everywhere will be worried to death with requests to have the carrier carry out merchandise. Now, then, if, after striking out that provision, we strike out also the proviso, the law will be left just as it now stands.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman answer me a question?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Yes; if I can.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I will try to put the question in such a way that the gentleman will have no difficulty in answering it. Will he be satisfied to allow the regulations of the Post-Office Department upon the subject to which he now refers to remain as they now are?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. That is just what I have said I am in favor of.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. And do the gentleman's remarks apply also to the provision relating to the carriage of newspapers?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Yes; that is just what I want. As I have said, the one provision now negatives the other, so that this portion of the bill becomes void.

I yield back the balance of my time to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. THAYER].

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Speaker, I simply want to call the attention of the House and the country to the condition in which we found ourselves yesterday afternoon and the condition in which we find ourselves this morning. But for the grace and special favor of the Committee on Rules, this House would have been powerless to consider a matter of vital importance to every school district in all this land. If the Committee on Rules had not graciously brought in this rule, we would have been absolutely unable to consider a proposition in which more people in this country are directly interested than in any matter that has come before Congress during this session or any other.

I understood the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] to state yesterday that he felt it as binding upon him to sustain the rules of the Chairman as to obey the law of the land, and that he would hesitate as much to violate one as the other. Sir, if we find ourselves in such position that we can not vote directly or indirectly on a question of this kind, to bring before us for consideration a matter we all wanted to consider, such as was the case last night, we are to be pitied. If we had sustained the appeal from the Chair last night, we would have had the whole matter right before us for consideration. If we are in such a condition that we can not change our rules, and by changing them get an opportunity to vote upon matters of vital importance to the country, I think it is high time that some elasticity should be given to the rules or new ones made in their stead. And I think some elasticity ought to be given to the consciences of the different Members of this House. I do not know that there is any particular necessity that any special elasticity should be given to the conscience of the gentleman from Ohio, because sometimes I have thought that he had a sort of gutta-percha conscience, that could be stretched on certain occasions to meet his requirements and contracted correspondingly on others; but if our consciences stand in the way of our legislating what we wish and ought to legislate about, we ought to have our consciences repaired.

I simply rose for the purpose of calling the attention of the House and the country to the fact that we are bound down here by such rules as the majority sees fit to enforce and are thereby disqualified from legislating as otherwise we would be glad to.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I yield one minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER].

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Speaker, in the sixty seconds allowed me it will of course be impossible to cover the question of the infamy of these rules. I simply want to indorse the language in favor of the city letter carriers that has been used here by my colleague [Mr. FITZGERALD], and to say that these rules demonstrate that the Republican party, which pretends to be the friend of labor—which for forty years has made that claim—comes into this House and deliberately makes rules which will prevent them, without the consent of half a dozen leaders on this floor, from enacting any legislation in favor of labor—any class of labor—letter carriers or any other class; and then they shield themselves behind that situation. And when the letter carriers, rural or city, bring in a petition to Congress, their Members write back: "We are in favor of this legislation. We are in favor of giving to the letter carriers this increased pay." Yet, in response to the party whip, these very Members stultify themselves by voting for rules that prevent those men from having an opportunity to have their bill voted upon on this floor. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I sympathize now, as I have sympathized in the past, with any effort to obtain justice for city carriers or anybody else. I do not, however, sympathize with any idea of a civil-service pension list for the benefit of everybody; but I do not wish to use the four minutes that I have in discussing matters that are not germane to this rule.

I wish merely to say to the gentleman from New York that, while I sympathize with him in his effort to get what is right for city letter carriers, I beg him to remember two things: First, that city letter carriers are now getting twice as much as rural carriers and are doing much easier work. They are not furnishing horses nor wagons while they are doing it; and I beg him——

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. No; I can not be interrupted.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Only one question.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I can not be interrupted. And I beg him to remember this, too, that the very worst way in the world to travel, in getting good things for the city carriers, is to antagonize measures that merely tend to equalize or approximately equalize the rural carriers with the city carriers. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I voted for this rule in the committee because it gives the House an opportunity to consider this subject-matter of this legislation and to do with it what the House chooses—to amend it, to adopt it, or to reject it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman misstates when he says that the city carriers get double what the rural carriers get.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. What is the maximum that the city carriers get? It is $1,200, is it not?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No. In some cities they get a maximum of $1,000 and in other cities a maximum of $850.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. There is not much difference between the maximum of a thousand and double the maximum of $600.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Eight hundred and fifty in some cities.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. You said a maximum of a thousand.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In some cities, and $850 in others.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. And they are allowed for car fare; they are allowed for bicycles; they are allowed for automobiles.

Mr. CANDLER. And for horses and wagons.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes. I do not want to get off the rule, though.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Does not the gentleman believe that under all the circumstances the city letter carriers are now pretty fairly paid?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I am not prepared to make that statement as to all grades of the service. I am in favor of raising their pay in some grades, and their reclassification; but I am talking about this rule now. I hope there will be no opposition to the adoption of the rule, and let gentlemen understand what the rule is. It is merely to give this House an opportunity to consider this subject-matter of legislation, to amend it, if it chooses, to adopt it as it is in the bill, to reject it if they choose to, with the fullest power of amendment under the ordinary rules of the House when in Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule. That is all.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. SULZER. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, this proposed rule applies, as I understand it, only to rural carriers——

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. SULZER. I wish to know whether the rule can be amended? That is my parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. Well, it would depend upon the action of the House whether the rule could be amended.

Mr. SULZER. Very well; then I move to amend the rule.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has not the floor for that purpose.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I ask now to be recognized to move to amend this rule, so that the provision to increase the pay of the letter carriers in the cities may be considered, as well as the rural letter carriers.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will answer the gentleman's parliamentary inquiry. If the previous question is ordered, the rule can not be amended. If the previous question is voted down, the rule can only be amended by amendments that are in order—namely, amendments that are germane.

Mr. SULZER. My amendment will be germane.

Mr. DALZELL. I call for the regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr SULZER. I trust my proposed amendment will be adopted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania calls for the previous question.

Mr. DALZELL. No; I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if it shall be in order, at the proper time I shall move to recommit the resolution, and I ask to have read in my time the motion which I will make.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks to have the motion read in his time. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Recommit House resolution 289 to the Committee on Rules with instructions to report in lieu thereof a resolution providing that it shall be in order for the House in Committee of the Whole, in consideration of the bill (H. R. 13521) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes, to offer an amendment after the word "substations," in line 25 on page 25 of said bill, in the following language: "On and after June 1, 1904, letter carriers of the rural free-delivery service shall receive a salary not exceeding $720 per annum, and no other or further allowance or salary shall be made to said carriers;" which said amendment shall be considered and be subject to amendment the same as though it had not been subject to a point of order as inserted in said bill H. R. 13521.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, that proposition is simply to bring before the House the original proposition in the bill, to increase the pay of the rural carriers, leaving that not subject to the point of order, leaving it open to amendment, and striking out that part of the present provision of the bill that is covered by the rule presented, which provides against permitting letter carriers to circulate daily papers. The House might as well vote upon the proposition now as vote upon it in the committee. It simply strikes out that part of the bill which went out upon a point of order, forbidding the letter carriers to carry the newspapers, etc., and leaves to the House the consideration of the salary of the letter carrier.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET], because he entertains personal opinions upon this proposition, has insisted that the pay of the rural carriers be considered in connection with the privileges of the rural letter carriers. I say there is no occasion for that. Whatever occasion there may be for a violation of the ordinary rules of the House by bringing in a new rule in order to raise the pay of rural carriers, it does not apply to the provision of the bill which cuts of the privileges that they now have. Why not amend the rule, or recommit with instructions to bring in a rule providing that the House shall have the right to consider the question as to the pay of the carriers and leave it confined to that one subject, without opening up the whole question as to cutting off their privileges? The House might as well vote upon that proposition in the House as in any other way. Why, no doubt the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], whom I am usually most proud to follow, will raise the point of order—always willing to strike anybody else with a point of order, but never willing to accept the consequences of a point of order himself.

Mr. OVERSTREET rose.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Indiana who now rises never fails to invoke the point of order when he thinks it to his interest and never fails to yield it when it is on the other side.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Have I not asked, by this rule, to let this House have a thorough debate of the entire subject? Is not that true?

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman had not objected, the House yesterday would have had a thorough debate on many other questions.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Oh——

Mr. MANN. Among other questions a resolution of inquiry. Why is it my friend did not wish action on the resolution of inquiry as proposed then? I do not think the gentleman's position asking a question and answering questions is correct, although I am always glad to yield to him for a question.

Mr. OVERSTREET. You do not seem to be ready to yield.

Mr. MANN. I am always glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Do you yield to me now? You declined to yield.

Mr. MANN. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I did not decline to yield.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. When you have been asked a question, you decline to answer.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Oh, no; the gentleman knows better than that. That is not fair.

Mr. MANN. Then why did you ask that your part be stricken out and then take this course. Are you afraid? [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. OVERSTREET. Because it gives the House an opportunity to have a full debate and action on the matter. Why, so far from being afraid, I am inviting a vote.

Mr. MANN. Let us have a vote on the motion to recommit. You are afraid to vote upon the motion to recommit. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. DALZELL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday afternoon a point of order was made by the gentleman from Illinois which eliminated from this bill the regulation in regard to the rural free-delivery carriers; and in order, I assume, that the whole question might come before the committee, without restriction or limitation, the gentleman from Indiana made the point of order against the pay, and the whole subject went out of the bill. Thereupon a very energetic debate took place upon a question of order, and an appeal having been made by the gentleman from Minnesota against the ruling of the Chair on that occasion, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] seemed to object, as I construed his language—and I would not do him any injustice—to the supposed tyranny of the chairman of the committee or else the Committee on Rules if it attempted to have the point nailed down——

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman pardon me? Far from that. I did not even squirm. I simply asked whether I was to be crucified or not, knowing that was the usual custom.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Very well. I thought the gentleman objected to being nailed down, but now he says he objected to being nailed up—a crucifixion. Thereupon the chairman of the committee said to the House that he would ask of the Committee on Rules a rule that would give the widest possible debate and the widest possible opportunity to amend these provisions and make them accord with the majority view of the committee, and I committed myself as an individual Member that I would support a rule of that character. I was trying to disabuse the mind of my friend from Illinois that he would be nailed down by the Committee on Rules. Now, this morning the rule comes here——

Mr. MANN. And I have not recovered from my surprise yet.

Mr. GROSVENOR (continuing). The rule comes here, which you are asked to adopt, giving to this committee absolute power to adopt, such legislation upon this topic as you may see fit to adopt, and to my utter surprise the gentleman from Illinois now proposes to nail down the men who want to have some liberty of amendment by proposing a restriction upon the action of the committee by a motion, which he knows not to be in order, to commit the rule back with instructions to report a substitute for this rule to suit his views. It shows how quickly and with what wonderful adaptation to our conditions in life we can all change our opinions when necessity seems to present itself. Now, Mr. Speaker, this rule, if adopted, submits to this committee all power and all authority upon this great question. It seems to me that we could not have expressed our opinion of confidence in the wisdom and judgment of the committee by any act or declaration of ours that would have been more eloquent and more clearly defined than does this rule bring to the attention of the House. Without any restriction, without any attempt, except the rules of the House in regard to the question of germane, we turn over to the committee, irrespective of any limitation of the rules hitherto, all power to decide these questions by a majority vote of this committee. It seems to me that there ought to be no objection to this rule, and I trust there will not be.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I think there shou'd be no misunderstanding about the character of this rule, after the explanation of it made by the gentleman from Mississippi on that side of the Chamber and the gentleman from Ohio on this, but I will repeat, lest there should be any misunderstanding. This rule simply puts back into this bill the paragraph that went out yesterday on the point of order and allows the Committee of the Whole all the advantages that belong to the Committee of the Whole in the discussion of paragraphs on an appropriation bill, as to amendments and all that sort of thing. Now, that paragraph contains two propositions. The first relates to the salaries of rural carriers. The second relates to the privileges to be granted to rural carriers. Under this rule the gentlemen who are in favor of the first proposition and opposed to the second, and the gentlemen who are in favor of the second and opposed to the first, all of them have an opportunity to exercise their judgment, and the Committee of the Whole has a right to determine in its wisdom whether either one shall be voted up or voted down.

Now, the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois, who is in favor of increasing the salary but opposed to the privileges, is that the Committee of the Whole shall have no right to pass on the question of privileges, but shall be confined to pass on the question of salary. It needs no argument upon my part, or upon anybody's part, to say that would be grossly unfair.

Mr. MANN. Would it not be just as easy for the House to pass upon the question of privileges on this motion as it would be for the Committee of the Whole to pass upon it? Is the Committee of the Whole any higher than the House?

Mr. DALZELL. The gentleman has been here long enough to know there is no privilege of debate on a motion to recommit.

Mr. MANN. I know there is all the privilege possible on the pending motion if the gentleman does not cut it off by the previous question, and he knows that, too.

Mr. DALZELL. The gentleman knows that it is subject to a point of order, and the gentleman also knows I will make the point of order.

Mr. MANN. I fully believe the gentleman will make the point of order in order to prevent the House having a chance to consider the question which he is so anxious to have the committee consider.

Mr. DALZELL. And I want to say just a word for the benefit of my friend from Massachusetts, who complains of these rules, who simply repeats the complaint made from time to time. It is always in order when nothing else is in order to complain of the rules. These rules were not made by any one man or by any one set of men nor by any one Congress or two Congresses. They are the evolution of a hundred years of experience in parliamentary procedure. They are the rules that have been adopted since the Fiftieth Congress by every Congress that has sat in this Hall. When the Fifty-second Congress came in, a Democratic Congress, it proceeded to adopt the rules of the Fifty-first Congress with a single exception, and that was the rule as to the counting of a quorum. It was not very long after the convening of that Congress, however, before the Speaker and the Committee on Rules slipped out of that door one day and in about five minutes after came back and adopted the counting of a quorum rule.

I am justified in saying that these rules are the result of the experience of former bodies for a hundred years.

Mr. THAYER. Does not the fact still remain that unless you five gentlemen, constituting the Committee on Rules, had come in here and granted us this favor the House would have been powerless to consider this matter?

Mr. DALZELL. Not at all. I know the gentleman from Massachusetts does not understand the situation. The gentleman, I think, would approve of the rule that prevents legislation on appropriation bills. All that these gentlemen constituting the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads had to do was to bring in the two paragraphs in question as an independent piece of legislasion and the House would have the opportunity to pass upon it. We vindicated the wisdom yesterday of that rule which says that the Committee on Appropriations shall confine itself to appropriations on appropriation bills and shall bring in its legislation independent of appropriation bills. So the rules are not at fault. If anybody is at fault it is the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and I make no accusation against anybody.

Mr. COWHERD. Before the gentleman yields the floor, I want to say that there are gentlemen on this side who are in doubt about his statement, whether the gentleman said that the rules were an evolution of a hundred years or a revolution of a hundred years. [Laughter.]

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

Mr. OLMSTED. I would like to ask the gentleman if he does not know, and if gentlemen on the other side ought not to know, that this particular Rule XXI, under which these paragraphs went out and which has been subjected to so much discussion and so much of criticism during the past week, was adopted in 1835 by a Democratic Congress, amended in 1876 at the suggestion of Mr. Holman, a prominent Democrat, and in 1880 by William R. Morrison, another prominent Democrat, so that the rule as it now stands and has stood for nearly three-quarters of a century is the work of Democratic statesmen, concurred in by Republicans?

Mr. MANN. I suppose that is the reason that we violated it this morning. [Laughter.]

Mr. DALZELL. The statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is strictly accurate. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask for the previous question.

Mr. MANN. Pending that, Mr. Speaker, under the rule I desire to submit a motion to recommit.

Mr. DALZELL. I make the point of order that it is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not rule unless something is offered.

Mr. MANN. I offer a resolution which is on the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The one read a few moments ago?

Mr. MANN. Yes; I offer that motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order. After the previous question is ordered on a report from the Committee on Rules the motion to recommit is not admitted under the more recent practice of the House.

That ruling was made twice by Speaker Crisp, was followed by Speaker Henderson, and has been followed by the present occupant of the chair.

Mr. MANN. May I not ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to withdraw his point of order, so that the House may vote on the question?

Mr. PAYNE. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SULZER. I desire to be informed by the Chair if the resolution is subject to amendment.

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. SULZER. Another parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. If the motion for the previous question is voted down, will the resolution then be open to amendment?

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not tell until it is up.

Mr. SULZER. The Chair ought to know that. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. It is perfectly patent that the Chair can not know what would happen touching any gentleman on the floor, and that is doubly the case with the gentleman from New York. [Laughter.]

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SULZER) there were—ayes 199, noes 12.

So the previous question was ordered.

The resolution was then agreed to.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following report from the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That it shall be in order for the House to consider in Committee of the Whole section 2, as contained on page 26 of the bill H. R. 13521, as if the same were not subject to a point of order.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, if the gentlemen of the committee will turn to section 2 of the bill, they will discover that section 2, as originally printed, went out yesterday on a point of order; that the section was new legislation. The ruling of the Chair was, of course, correct. Now, I shall take but a very few words to present this question to the consideration of the committee. I think I may assume, without fear of contradiction, that one of the sources of the greatest trouble and scandal that has come to the Post-Office Department as is charged—I by no means hold myself responsible for making the charge or denying it—but one of the greatest sources of the scandal has come from the fact that the purchase of supplies for the Post-Office Department has been distributed to the various bureaus and divisions of the Department.

I call the attention of the House to the fact that this section as it appeared in the original bill is on page 29 of the new print and page 26 of the original bill. I was proceeding to call attention to the distribution of responsibility, if you please, by which the chief of a single division of the Post-Office Department was charged with the duty of large purchases, while the chief of another division was charged with like responsibility and duty in regard to another commodity, and so on through the whole line of purchases for the Department. So the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads very wisely brought in this provision which provides for the appointment of an officer of the Department, to be appointed by the President, with a salary adequate to the necessities of the case, large enough so that it will be possible to secure a competent man, who will be placed under the direction of the Postmaster-General and in charge of the entire purchasing of the supplies of the Post-Office Department.

Speaking to a committee of business men and men of knowledge of affairs of this character, I do not think I need to urge the importance of some reformation in the Department that can be reached in this way, and apparently in this way alone. I might add that we have not considered this section. It comes to us clothed with the recommendation of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and yet it went out of the bill without any consideration whatever as to its merits, and I have no doubt that the committee is abundantly able to present the reasons that actuated it in bringing in legislation of this character. Therefore the Committee on Rules has presented this rule, which simply opens up to the committee here the full power to investigate the propriety of this section, and its adoption, its amendment, or its rejection, as the wisdom of the committee may see fit.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi such time as he may require.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I would like this side of the House to understand this report from the Committee on Rules. Section 2, on page 26 of the pending appropriation bill, was stricken out on a point of order. That section centralizes the responsiblity, and makes one purchasing agent under a bond responsible to the Department and to the country, whose duty it shall be to purchase all supplies, and who shall be responsible for the honesty and propriety with which it is all done. This rule merely declares that the point of order shall not apply to that particular section of the bill, and gives the House the right to vote the provision up or down or to amend it as the House may choose. It is a unanimous report from the Committee on Rules.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD.]

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Speaker, I merely wish to say that I hope there will be no votes on this side of the Chamber against this rule or against this provision. I believe that if that provision becomes law there will be saved to the Government hundreds of thousands of dollars every year in the purchase of the millions of dollars' worth of supplies that are demanded by the Post-Office Department. It gives a responsible head to what is now carried out through many different bureaus and brings, practically, an up-to-date business management into the antiquated methods now in vogue in the Post-Office Department respecting the purchase of supplies.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. LIVERNASH. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question.

Mr. LIVERNASH. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I decline to yield.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman demands the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HEMENWAY, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 14416) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. BENTON reserved all points of order as to the bill.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 13521, the post-office appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the post-office appropriation bill, with Mr. BOUTELL in the chair.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to recur to page 19 of the original bill for the purpose of making a correction.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to recur to page 19 of the bill for the purpose of making a correction. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, the amendment striking out of the bill what is known as the "appropriation for the Tahitian mail service," I am satisfied, did not carry as much from the bill as should go out, if the appropriation is not to be continued. I recall to the committee the fact that the amendment offered—which was subsequently agreed to by the committee—stopped with the word "dollars," in line 11. I ask unanimous consent that there be stricken from that section all of the language beginning with the word "Provided," in line 11, down to and including the word "further," in line 16 on the same page.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the language referred to by him be stricken from the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] has made point of order against section 3.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I reserve the point of order and will offer the following amendment——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not offer an amendment except by withdrawing the point of order.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Very well, I withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn; and the gentleman from New Jersey offers the amendment which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 27, at the end of line 9, insert a comma and add the following: "at the rate required by law for a single piece of such matter."

Mr. OVERSTREET. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I ask unanimous consent that section 3, just passed, be numbered as section 2, because section 2 has gone out.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will renumber the paragraph.

There was no objection.

Mr. OLMSTED. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "affixed," in line 9, page 27, insert the following:
"And carriers in the rural free-delivery service shall not be prohibited from distributing or soliciting orders or collecting subscriptions for newspapers and periodicals thus transmitted or to be transmitted as third or fourth class matter."

Mr. OVERSTREET. I make the point of order that this amendment is not germane and is in conflict with existing law.

Mr. OLMSTED. I should like to be heard on that point. Mr. Chairman, this section—section 3—itself changes existing law, and would have been subject to a point of order, but none was made. Under repeated rulings an amendment which would otherwise be out of order as changing existing law is in order if germane to a paragraph which itself changes existing law. I maintain that this amendment is germane to the paragraph. The paragraph itself provides that—

Under such regulations as the Postmaster-General may establish for the collection of the lawful revenue, and for facilitating the handling of such matter in the mails, it shall be lawful to accept for transmission in the mails quantities of not less than 2,000 identical pieces of third or fourth class matter without postage stamps affixed.

That language, of course, includes newspapers and other periodicals. My amendment is certainly germane to that provision. The paragraph itself provides for regulations; my amendment is a definition of those regulations.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman will allow me to say that if his amendment goes in at this point it applies only to this particular provision allowing packages of not less than 2,000 pieces to go through the mails without being provided with stamps. That, it seems to me, would not accomplish the object which the gentleman has in view. The gentleman's amendment would be germane to the language which is to be put into the bill under the rule just adopted.

Mr. OLMSTED. Well, it will not do any harm to put it in here.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that this item refers to "2,000 identical pieces of third or fourth class matter." The gentleman's amendment refers to individual, single, pieces of second-class mail matter.

Mr. OLMSTED. My amendment applies to such matter as is referred to in the paragraph itself and is germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that on the question of germaneness, the question of comparison as arising in the arrangement of a bill comes in; that if an amendment is more appropriate to one paragraph than to another, it is not to be considered germane to the paragraph to which it is less appropriate. Section 3 relates to securing revenue from the rural delivery service. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] refers to soliciting which may be done by the carrier. The Chair feels quite clear that this amendment would more properly come in as an amendment to the paragraph relating to the privileges of free-delivery carriers. Therefore the point of order is sustained.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following as an independent paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That there shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a purchasing agent for the Post-Office Department, who shall hold office for four years unless sooner removed by the President, and who shall receive an annual salary of $5,000, give bond to the United States in such sum as the Postmaster-General may determine, and report direct to the Postmaster-General; and who shall, under such regulations as the Postmaster-General shall prescribe, and subject to his direction and control, have supervision of the purchase of all supplies for the postal service.

Mr. MANN. I reserve the point of order on that.

Mr. OVERSTREET. We had just as well dispose of the point of order.

Mr. MANN. It is subject to the point of order as a new section, I think. Undoubtedly if the gent eman wanted to leave it in the bill under section 2 it would not be subject to the point of order; but, then, in that case we will have to recur to section 2.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Then I ask the Clerk to strike out the figure "3" and make it a figure "2."

Mr. LIVINGSTON. What do you do with section 2, then?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, the mere numbering of the sections can afterwards be arranged under the usual methods. I offer that, without any number as to the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the numbering of the sections will be made by the Clerk after the bill has been completed. The Chair thinks the amendment to be in order at this point.

Mr. MANN. The rule does not recite the language at all. The rule that was adopted refers to section 2. It does not provide for offering a new section in the bill. It does not recite the language of section 2. It only refers to it by number.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, the parliamentary situation when the House entered the Committee of the Whole was this: A section of the bill had been under consideration on yesterday against which a point of order had been reserved. Necessarily the committee entered upon the consideration of the bill with that point of order pending as to that section. I followed the usual course of disposing of that section before offering the language that was referred to in the special rule adopted this morning. Now, I do not know how technical the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is going to be. I offered this language in this way, authorized by the rule, and in order to meet his refined sensibilities I withdraw that and offer the language of the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will read the rule that was adopted:

Resolved, That it shall be in order for the House to consider in Committee of the Whole section 2, as contained on page 26 of the bill H. R. 13521, as if the same were not subject to a point of order.

The Chair holds that this rule gives the committee authority to consider the substance of what was contained in section 2 of the bill.

Mr. OVERSTREET. The language contained in section 2 of the bill was what was referred to in the rule, and not the figure "2."

Mr. MANN. That is not what it says at all; it says section 2.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I understand that the Chair overrules the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Now, Mr. Chairman, just briefly on this point. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] very completely suggested the motive of this amendment when he brought this rule to the attention of the House this morning.

There are now in the Post-Office Department at least four separate supply divisions. Necessarily in the administration of that Department, under the four Assistant Postmasters-General, they duplicate purchases. There is duplication in the purchase of stationery, duplication in the purchase of the usual supplies of pens, inks, etc. There are additional purchases peculiar to each particular department of the service, like the office of the First or the Third Assistant; but the committee believe, as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] very pointedly suggested, that a consolidation of all these supply divisions, putting them into one division or bureau, under direction and control of one man, would result in economy of administration, and that that effort to segregate authority and responsibility, under direction and control of one man, would result in economy of administration, and that is in line with the effort to segregate the authority and responsibility which has been endeavored throughout the framing and adoption of this supply bill.

Mr. CROMER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to his colleague?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes.

Mr. CROMER. Is there any objection to adding the words "and distributing" after the word "purchase?"

Mr. OVERSTREET. I will state to my colleague that the matter of distribution was considered very fully when this item was prepared in the committee. It was even thought advisable, if not essential, to provide for a distributing agent as well as a purchasing agent; but, under suggestions which were offered to the committee by officials of the Department, the committee believed that a distributing officer could be made out of one of the officers already in the service, and it would not be essential, therefore, to create a new office to that extent.

Mr. CROMER. Another question——

Mr. MADDOX. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. MADDOX. I will ask the gentleman if it is not true that all the other Departments have purchasing agents?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I have understood so, or purchasing boards.

Mr. MADDOX. Do you know what the salary is?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I do not know.

Mr. MADDOX. Do you know whether it exceeds $3,000?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I do not know. It may be possible a larger salary is provided in this section than the committee might feel warranted in authorizing. The committee, however, thought—and I state very frankly what was in the minds of the members—in view of the importance of this situation, to solidify all supply purchases in that Department would warrant the appointment of some good business man at the head of it who would be entitled to a larger salary than $3,000 or $3,500.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT. I notice that this provision proposes that this agent shall be appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate. He is to be a purcha ing agent for the entire Post-Office Department. That purchasing agent, as I understand, takes the place of the chief of the division of supplies, and is to take the place of the various committees appointed by the Post-Office Department to examine bids of those proposing to furnish supplies as they are now purchased. Is that the fact?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I understand that each separate Assistant Postmaster-General has his own method of purchasing supplies. One of them may have a board composed of certain clerks or individuals who consider what shall be purchased and how. Another may do it directly, taking the position that he himself has that authority.

Now, the purpose of this provision is to concentrate not only the work of the purchasing and the administration of the purchase, but as well to concentrate the responsibility of the purchases and their proper distribution.

Mr. BARTLETT. I will ask the gentleman if, under the amendment which is now proposed to be adopted, the effect would be to dispense with the law as now prevailing in the Department, which requires the purchase of supplies by competitive bids?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Oh, by no means. The idea and intent of this provision is rather to make those methods even more strict than now. By it you will have solidified and consolidated all the supply divisions in the various branches of the postal service into one bureau and put it under the charge of some practical business man, who will ask for bids and will see that the bids are properly let.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARTLETT. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman may be extended.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Indiana may be extended for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. OVERSTREET. The idea is that under a business man the bids when made would be more carefully scrutinized. I would also suggest to my friend from Georgia that there is a law now which requires advertising. This does not in any way do away with that, and ought not to.

Mr. BARTLETT. That is what I was coming to. I wanted to know if it undertook to do away with that. I thought it ought to be so guarded as to protect that; so that there would be competitive bids.

Mr. OVERSTREET. The gentleman is quite right about that.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. That is a law that applies to all Departments.

Mr. OVERSTREET. All of them. I know it applies to all the Departments, and there has been no suggestion that that should not apply in this instance.

Mr. BARTLETT. And the gentleman does not want it limited in any way by this proposition?

Mr. OVERSTREET. No.

Mr. BARTLETT. I want it to be safeguarded with great care. A law already exists applying to all Departments requiring bids to be submitted, and, as I understand the gentleman, the effect of this amendment will not be to prevent competitive bidding which now exists.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Just in order to make a record of it, I suggest that section 3709 of the Revised Statutes is the law relating to advertising for bids, and applies also to the postal service.

Mr. BARTLETT. Is not the gentleman aware of the fact that there are cases even in the Post-Office where the statutes already in existence have been construed away and regarded as of no value by provisions put on appropriation bills?

Mr. OVERSTREET. And we believe under the authority that is here given over the supply division that there will be a better method of purchasing supplies; that it will permit of a more thorough scrutiny when we centralize the responsibility as well as the duty.

Mr. BARTLETT. I want to say to the gentleman that I think this is a very wholesome provision. I have no disposition to antagonize it; but I want to prevent a repetition of some very outrageous performances that have taken place in the division of purchasing supplies, and I wanted to know whether it would conform to the present existing law, which provides for the proper safeguarding of the purchase of supplies.

Mr. SNAPP. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if in bringing in this clause it was the intention of the committee to insert it for the purpose that a business man of experience might be appointed to this place, and not with the intention that the appointment should go to a bureau clerk now getting a small salary?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I will say decidedly in the affirmative that is precisely what the intention of the committee was.

Mr. BARTLETT. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to this wording on page 26 of the original bill:

> And who shall, under such regulations as the Postmaster-General shall prescribe and subject to his direction and control, have supervision of the purchase of all supplies for the postal service.

Mr. OVERSTREET. The idea is——

Mr. BARTLETT. Let me ask the gentleman this question: Now, does the gentleman think that the words "who shall, under such regulations as the Postmaster-General shall prescribe and subject to his direction and control, have supervision of the purchase of all supplies for the postal service" do away with the power vested in the Postmaster-General, and that the Postmaster-General would not have authority to provide by regulation that these supplies might be bought by this man without having bids submitted?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I think certainly not. The regulations would refer almost exclusively to the manner of making requisitions for supplies from one bureau to another and not in any way interfere with the law of to-day relative to the necessity of advertisement.

Mr. BARTLETT. Then would this be objectionable to the gentleman, to put in the proper form this suggestion: "Provided, That nothing herein shall be so construed as to affect existing law as to advertising?"

Mr. OVERSTREET. Let me suggest to the gentleman, suppose we say "not inconsistent with existing law."

Mr. BARTLETT. Certainly.

Mr. OVERSTREET. After the word "regulations," in line 24, insert——

Mr. BARTLETT. "Not inconsistent with existing law;" yes.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, to insert, after the word "regulations," in line 24, page 26, the following: "not inconsistent with existing law."

Mr. BARTLETT. I think that covers the difficulty.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Insert, after the word "regulations," in line 24, page 26, the words "not inconsistent with existing law."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CROMER. I would like to ask the gentleman whether or not the man who distributes this material under this provision ought not to be under bond, just the same as the man who purchases it, and if it would not be well to make the purchasing agent the distributing agent as well?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Well, that proposition was considered and it was commented upon with the post-office officials, who were inquired of concerning this proposition. There was a consensus of opinion both as to the officials and the members of the committee that if we made the purchasing agent also the distributing agent it might be held to prohibit the Postmaster-General from assigning to duty to aid in the distribution another man, and the work of distribution as well as purchasing might be too large for one individual. We felt, however, and the post-office officials who were before the committee believe, that such a man as contemplated by this provision should be more than a mere clerk in a Department, a better man than is usually appointed for one of the minor official positions there, even a better man of better experience and greater responsibilities than the past chiefs of all supply divisions of the Department; that he ought to be, in other words, a man of affairs, a business man of practical ideas, and that the matter of the distribution of supplies could well afford to be left under his direction and the direction of the Postmaster-General to some lesser officials of the Department, and under those circumstances they did not recommend a separate officer of that character.

Mr. CROMER. Now, will the gentleman accept an amendment to his amendment, making it $4,000 a year instead of $5,000 a year?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I have no objection to that, although I think we ought to have a good man at a good salary. There is just this about it——

Mr. MANN rose.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Just a moment. The lower you put the salary the greater the danger of getting a less efficient man.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman tell us what are the salaries of the Second, Third, and Fourth Assistant Postmasters-General?

Mr. OVERSTREET. The salary of the First Assistant is $5,000 and $4,500 for the others. Personally I have no objection——

Mr. MANN. Yet you propose to make a subordinate official of a Department have a higher salary than the chief of that Department.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I say I have no objection to putting it at $4,000.

Mr. MANN. Otherwise it will be subject to criticism for that reason, I think.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I am quite willing to accept an amendment to make the salary $4,000.

Mr. SIBLEY. Mr. Chairman, I should oppose that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Line 21, page 26, strike out the word "five" and insert the word "four;" so as to read "$4,000."

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CROMER].

Mr. CROMER. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will prevail. I do not think it would be wise to fix the salary of this purchasing agent above that of the head of the department, which salary I understand is $4,500 for several of the assistants—I think at least three of them—and they were all that way until last year. Therefore I think it would be well to fix the salary at $4,000 instead of $5,000.

Mr. SIBLEY. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this amendment. I think with $5,000 the President can go outside of the Department and select a man qualified by business training and experience to discharge the duties of that position. I think we want the best business talent in that position that we can get, coupled with a high degree of honesty and courage.

It has been intimated to me within the last few moments that if we fix the salary at $5,000 or $4,000, the Department would promote some bureau clerk at present in the Department. If that was the design I should like to see the whole provision go out, or at least the salary limited to $2,500. I want a man to be paid enough so that he can bring ability and integrity to the discharge of these duties, and if we limit it to $4,000 or $3,000 it is merely going to mean the promotion of some man already in that Department.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will allow me, is he not afraid that if he gives $5,000 to this man he will imagine that he is a Member of Congress and forthwith go to legislating by executive construction? [Laughter.]

Mr. SIBLEY. No, I should hope not.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I wanted to be certain that we should have no more executive legislation.

Mr. SIBLEY. I think we all agree that we do not need any more legislation on the part of bureau officials. I would like to have it put where the Postmaster-General could go outside—I wouldn't care whether he was a Democrat or a Republican, if he had the talent and the administrative ability—where the Postmaster-General could go outside and get the best man for the place. I am quite sure that whatever other provisions you may strike from this bill, you will make a mistake if this provision is stricken from the bill. I think the abuses that have grown up in that Department have arisen from the divided responsibility—the lack of an official head—in connection with the purchase of supplies.

Mr. THAYER. I notice that the gentleman emphasized the fact that he wanted a man of integrity and that he ought to be paid $5,000. Is there a line where a man getting less than $5,000 is wanting in integrity as we have seen it?

Mr. SIBLEY. My good friend from Massachusetts knows that I would not draw such a line as that; he and I have too much faith in our fellow-men.

Mr. THAYER. Is it because they do not get salary enough that they are wanting in integrity?

Mr. SIBLEY. The gentleman will recollect that I said "ability and integrity."

Mr. THAYER. It is hard to get the two combined in one man.

Mr. SIBLEY. I want a man for this position that has had business experience.

I think my friend will see that a man who is capable of purchasing millions of dollars' worth of supplies annually for this great Department is a man who in the outside world could command a $5,000 salary. If we are going to cut it down, cut it down to twenty-five hundred dollars and let a bureau clerk, some man that is there to-day, discharge the duties of the position. But if we are going to make it a position where we can have the best ability and best service, let us pay him a fair compensation.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to me?

Mr. SIBLEY. Certainly.

Mr. MURDOCK. I would like to call the attention of this House to the present state of the postage stamps. I want to call attention to the fact that they are deteriorating in paper and material.

Mr. SIBLEY. While we are not on that topic, I think that would come within this official's duties in purchasing supplies. I know a little while ago that one of the gentlemen of the House took a postage stamp and doubled it up and it broke in two. You can not bend one over and fold it twice without its breaking in two pieces.

Mr. MANN. Who wants to bend it over twice? [Laughter.]

Mr. SIBLEY. Well, you are liable to bend a stamp.

Mr. MANN. The man that does not know any better than that ought to be educated. [Laughter.]

Mr. SIBLEY. I think if there was a purchasing agent and we were to hold him responsible and accountable, he would see that the paper and material were of the best quality, and also the ink and pads and all other supplies.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me first that there ought to be some regard paid to consistency in legislation of this kind. Now, gentlemen may talk about the responsibility of this official and the high order of ability required, and still I want to say in parentheses that until recently, without scandal, it has been done in a divided way and without men of such known great business responsibility; but aside from that, treat this agent as you may, he will be the subordinate of the Post-Office Department. He is not your agent directly; he is the subordinate of the Post-Office Department.

Now, if you want to pay this man $5,000, get a rule and raise the salary of the Assistant Postmasters-General to the figure to which this suggestion would indicate that they ought to be. But to pay three assistants $4,500 each and a subordinate $5,000 may be good business as to this item, but it is incongruous with the salary list of the Post-Office Department.

Mr. SIBLEY. I would suggest to the gentleman that he offer an amendment fixing the salary of the Assistant Postmasters-General at $5,000. I believe he was a member of the subcommittee that prepared this bill, and I hope he is not criticising his action in preparing the bill.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, if I entertained the views of a great many other gentlemen on this floor, I should have had a bill here fixing their salaries at $8,000 or $10,000.

I, somehow or other, am not in harmony with those who think that the acme of public service, or great service to labor, in the country is in raising the salary of some official, some man who lives out of the Treasury. I have observed, whether this is the place to say it or not, that when you bring in here a proposition to increase the salary of an official, whether it is a purchasing agent or most anybody else, gentlemen at once jump to the assault on the Treasury as if they were saving the country, but if one comes in here with a proposition as to prison labor, the question is asked, in broad sympathy, "What are you going to do with the poor prisoner?" If one wants some legislation for labor, we are told that it is interfering with the business of the country. Are all the sympathy and favors to go to convicts and those who live by public salary, and is there no consideration anywhere for the millions of farmers, mechanics, laborers, and people who generate the wealth that pays those salaries and who are unthought of in the legislation of this House? [Applause.]

Now, I hope this salary will be reduced in the interests of congruity and decent economy. I believe that there are all over this country men who are as honest as daylight—and it may be because they are so honest they have not succeeded under the methods of modern business—who could do the work provided for in this bill as well as it is possible for human ingenuity to do it and for whom a place in the Government service at a salary of $4,000 would be so near paradise that they would never want to cross over while they could hold it down.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the amendment and paragraph be closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman moves that all debate on the pending amendment and paragraph be closed.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if there will not be a possible contradiction in the bill if the amendment is adopted. This amendment, as I understand it, leaves the supervision of the purchase of all supplies for the Post-Office Department to a special agent, and on page 12 of the original bill there is an appropriation of $225,000 to be expended for miscellaneous items, including furniture, etc., and that is to be expended in the discretion of the Postmaster-General, who can turn that quarter of a million of dollars over to postmasters.

Mr. OVERSTREET. No; this carries authority to the Postmaster-General to consolidate these various branches, and of course if a supply division under either one of the four Assistant Postmasters-General should, under the authority carried in this item, be consolidated into one division, the clerks and books and all that of the various divisions would go into the new division, for the reason that you can not very well on a bill set forth the method and arrangement of consolidation and administration. We thought the better plan was to give authority to the Postmaster-General to consolidate, and naturally the various appropriations through this present bill for the purchase of supplies would go into this consolidated division if the Postmaster-General during the next fiscal year should be able to consolidate. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana that all debate on the pending amendment and paragraph close.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CROMER].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the committee amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the section just agreed to be numbered "3."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the number of the section be corrected by the Clerk. Without objection, that correction will be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to the pending paragraph, to follow the amendment which has just been adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, after the amendment just adopted, the following:

"To reimburse the great railroads for the cost of supplying the President of the United States with special trains, cars, and the food, wines, cigars——"

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order. I think that what has been thus far read shows that it is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That the appropriations herein made for the officers, clerks, and persons employed in the postal service shall not be available for the compensation of any persons permanently incapacitated for performing such service. The establishment of a civil-pension roll or an honorable-service roll, or the exemption of any of the officers, clerks, and persons in the postal service from the existing laws respecting employment in such service, is hereby prohibited.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting after the word "service," in line 2, page 28, the following:

"Or the making or enforcing of any regulation preventing carriers in the rural free-delivery service from collecting subscriptions and distributing newspapers and periodicals along their routes."

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that amendment, that it is not germane——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the last word. Yesterday there was some discussion in this body with respect to the refusal of the majority side of this Chamber to allow rural free-delivery service over bad roads. Since yesterday I have investigated, and I find that there are about twelve to fifteen of these routes that have been turned down in my district on account of the condition of the roads. In every instance there was a man competent to do the work who was ready to take the position of carrier at the amount of pay which the Government allowed. So I began to look around to find out the meaning of the refusal of the majority to allow rural free delivery unless the people provide fine roads. I turned to page 1848 of the RECORD of last Congress, and I find there, in the list of trusts published by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD], a corporation known as the "automobile trust," with a capital of $5,000,000.

Upon further investigation I find that this automobile trust has been flooding the whole country with "literature" in the interest of good roads. Now, I would not charge our friends on the other side with legislating in the interest of the trusts. They have never been known to do anything like that. They have never been known to accept any money from the trusts in order to carry elections. They would not think of doing anything like that. But it appears as a remarkable coincidence that here is a trust which is endeavoring to induce the people to build fine roads so it can sell machines, and here is the Republican party forcing the people, no matter how poor they may be, to do the very thing the trust wants. Mr. Chairman, it looks as if we have discovered the colored gentleman in the wood pile. [Laughter.]

Here are twelve or fifteen men in my district ready, willing, and anxious to take these positions of rural carriers. It matters not to the Government whether the roads there are good or bad. What difference does it make? Of course good roads are desirable, but should this Government force the building of them? These men are anxious to do the work; and they will do it as faithfully and as honestly as the carrier in Pennsylvania or Indiana or any other State which can boast of good roads. The people of my State are doing the best they can. They are improving our roads as rapidly as their financial condition will permit, but in the meantime they want rural free delivery. But we find the Republican party occupying the same position that it has occupied for some years past, and that is, helping the trusts to carry out the purposes they have in view.

We find the Republican party here helping the automobile trust to force the people to build fine roads, so that that trust may have a market for its machines, upon which it makes, I am told, from 300 to 600 per cent profit. My young friend from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], in a strong speech the other day, pointed out many instances of discrimination in the administration of this service. This is but another instance which must be added to the list. But the Republican party is a party of discrimination. Watch, Mr. Chairman, for a contribution to the Republican campaign fund from the automobile trust. In a few weeks that party will be begging pitifully for money, for without money it can not win. It derives its very existence from big campaign funds. Without money to buy votes it is in a hopeless minority.

The average trust is void of soul or conscience, but it has money, and the Republican party must help the trusts in order to get money. This is the reason of the friendship which exists between the trusts and the Republican party. This is about all I care to say. I merely wish the people, discriminated against, to know that there is something behind this refusal of the Republican majority to allow them to have the rural free-delivery service. [Applause.]

Mr. OVERSTREET. I move to close debate on this paragraph.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That if the revenues of the Post-Office Department shall be insufficient to meet the appropriations made by this act, a sum equal to such deficiency of the revenues of said Department is hereby appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to supply said deficiencies in the revenues for the Post-Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1905.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I move that debate on this paragraph be closed.

Mr. GUDGER. I hope that the gentleman will allow me to offer one amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the motion of the gentleman from Indiana was simply to close debate. Amendments will be in order.

Mr. BAKER. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BAKER. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN (having put the question on the motion to close debate). The motion is agreed to, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. GUDGER] yield?

Mr. BAKER. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Carolina yield to the gentleman from New York to make a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. BAKER (to Mr. GUDGER). Will not the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. GUDGER. Yes, sir; I yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York will submit his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BAKER. I understand that the motion of the chairman of the committee [Mr. OVERSTREET] was that debate upon this paragraph be closed. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that there has been no debate upon the paragraph, and therefore that motion is obviously out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the motion has been adopted, and the gentleman from North Carolina has sent to the Clerk an amendment, which will be read.

Add at the end of line 10, page 28, the following:

"That from and after May 1, 1904, no rural free-delivery route shall be refused on account of the condition of the roads, provided a competent carrier can be obtained at the regular compensation prescribed by law."

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that that it is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask that the committee recur to page 25 of the bill, line 10, and I offer the amendment authorized by the rule adopted this morning.

Mr. BAKER. I object, Mr. Chairman. The Chairman did not put the motion.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule adopted by the House, the committee will now recur to the paragraph on page 25.

Mr. OLMSTED. To that I have an amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Is that page 25 of the old bill or the reprinted bill?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Of the original bill.

On page 25, line 25, insert:

"On and after July 1, 1904, letter carriers of the rural free-delivery service shall receive a salary not exceeding $720 per annum, and no other or further allowance or salary shall be made to said carriers; and on and after said date said carriers shall not solicit business or receive orders of any kind for any person, firm, or corporation, and shall not, during their hours of employment, carry any merchandise for hire: Provided, That said carriers may carry merchandise for hire for and upon the request of patrons residing upon their respective routes, whenever the same shall not interfere with the proper discharge of their official duties, and under such regulations as the Postmaster-General may prescribe."

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, first I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana will state it.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I desire to ask the Chair whether, under the special rule, this language which I have just had read by the Clerk is offered as an amendment? That is my understanding of the situation, but I want it to be clear that this now appears as an amendment to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, subject to correction, would be inclined to think not, but that under the rule this is read as a part of the original bill and is now open to amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Just as if it had never been stricken out by the point of order at all.

The CHAIRMAN. As the gentleman from Mississippi suggests, just as if it had never been stricken out.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, if I may have order I will say——

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order that there is nothing before the committee. No amendment is offered, and I wish to offer an amendment.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana moves to strike out the last word, and is recognized.

Mr. OVERSTREET. If the twenty or thirty gentlemen with proposed amendments in their hands will content themselves, I think there will be opportunity for them to be heard.

Mr. Chairman, the committee have brought to the House a provision for some relief to a class of officials of the Post-Office Department who, all have agreed, are entitled to some relief.

The law to-day is a growth that has been simultaneous with the growth of the rural service. The first authority for salary was $300. It was later increased by steps of $100 at a time until it reached the amount of $600. It was experimental until within the last two years, and was so regarded officially. We are now engaged in the operation of the rural service in the second year of its permanency. The salaries of the carriers, gauged during the experimental period of the development of the service, were thought inadequate, and therefore a law was passed permitting that privilege to rural-delivery carriers.

It was thought that the salary might not be entirely sufficient, all things considered, and that the privilege which would be granted to the carriers by the passage of such a law would afford them an additional method of compensation. The committee believe the time has arrived, especially since the permanency of the service has been officially recognized, when in fixing an additional compensation or salary for these carriers it is proper and feasible and practicable to consider, together with that increased compensation, whether or not they are to continue all of the practices and privileges which they have enjoyed during the period of the experimental operation of the service.

Therefore, the committee recommend restrictions as to those privileges—restrictions which will deny them the right of being agents for Tom, Dick, and Harry; deny them the dual capacity of hucksters and Federal employees; which will prohibit them from selling anything and everything for departmental stores, mail-order houses, and other persons, which will, necessarily, in our judgment, in the near future ripen into a parcels post, and at the same time deny them the privilege of being agents for any of these various concerns. We believe that if you deny to them the privilege of being agents for mail-order houses, for grocery stores, or for farm-implement houses, that they should equally be denied the right to be agents for newspapers, periodicals, news agencies, and publishing houses.

I think, however, Mr. Chairman, that inasmuch as the rural service was primarily intended for the benefit of the rural communities that these carriers should be permitted by law to do messenger service within proper limits for the patrons along their various routes. Therefore, under the terms of this provision, authority is given them to render such service to the patrons residing on their routes so long as it shall not interfere with the proper management of their official duties. I desire to explain that briefly, and outside of that——

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Certainly.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I want to ask you this question: You prohibit them in one place from carrying merchandise?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Then you provide that they may do it at the request of the patrons?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Now, then, the only thing that the merchant will have to do will be to write a note out into the country to one of his patrons directing him to make this request, and you are going to bother the patrons all along the line.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Let me call the gentleman's attention to the fact that this must be done under regulations of the Post-Office Department. It is utterly impossible to express all those regulations in a statute. I have no doubt and I believe that such regulations would be proper as shall confine the carriers to the ordinary messenger services which are usually practiced around in country districts, authorizing them to stop at a drug store or bring out something from the blacksmith shop, or some quinine pills, or any of those little things which, while apparently trivial, are of a great deal of importance to the farmers. I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out of the paragraph all after the word "and," in line 4, page 26, down to and including line 12 of the same page.

Mr. THAYER. You mean before the word "and."

Mr. MANN. All after the word "carriers."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 26, line 4, after the word "carriers," strike out the remainder of lines 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12.

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Chairman, if this provision remains in this bill, practically the only effect of it is to prohibit the carriers from handling the daily papers. The provision already in the bill covers the so-called "mail-order house" business, because under the terms of the bill as reported any "mail-order house" can sell if the patron who desires to make the purchase makes a request of the carrier. But the carriers are handling the daily newspapers not only of the larger cities but the smaller cities when the patrons make special requests, and many of them carry the newspapers in their wagons along with them; and the effect of the provision in the bill is simply to stop the carriers from furnishing the newspapers to their patrons.

Why, Mr. Chairman, one of the principal arguments that has been made in favor of rural free delivery has been that the farmers of the country might receive their daily newspapers. It is the strongest argument for daily delivery in the rural districts that can be made. Here is a provision made to prevent the very purpose for which rural free delivery was largely instituted, and it does not seem to me that it ought to be done.

I have no doubt that the pay of the rural carrier ought to be increased. I am speaking candidly and not merely as one who has been run over by the majority of the House because they do not represent large city constituencies. I do not think the salary provided in the bill is enough. [Applause.]

I have no doubt that the pay of the rural carriers, either to-day in this committee or soon by act of Congress, will be made commensurate with the salaries of the letter carriers in the small cities, salaries themselves which probably ought to be increased; but the first thing is to prevent this law taking away the privileges which the carriers now have of handling daily papers. [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, when I first read this provision in this bill I was opposed to it, so far as the restriction upon soliciting for newspapers was concerned. But since then I have thought about it from every standpoint, so far as I could, and there has come to my knowledge also some abuses in the manner in which the right to solicit has been carried on.

Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, I want to say that I have told some gentlemen who talked to me about it that I would vote to amend the bill substantially as in the proposed amendment; but I have changed my views, and I am going to tell the House why.

I thought at that time that the right to solicit for and distribute newspapers could be granted in some way so as to make it harmless and that it might be practical to make the rural carrier solicit for all papers impartially and charge the same commission for each. I have not been able to draw up an amendment to the amendment that would make it possible to see to it that the carrier did execute such a law as I had contemplated. In other words, it is impracticable to restrain him from acts of partiality or partisanship either, if this right is left to him. Now, I want to especially call the attention of this side of the House to this one fact, that if these carriers are left here as solicitors for newspapers, let us say in the State of Missouri, for example, in a close district, or in Indiana or Illinois or Ohio, in close Congressional districts, they will assuredly find it very much to their interest to solicit for Republican papers, while declining to solicit for Democratic papers.

Of course in my district it would make no difference, but it would be a very serious thing to have men going around at the expense of the Government trundling Republican literature in the shape of Globe-Democrats in the district of the gentleman from Missouri who is just before me. Now, I want to read you a copy of a letter written by a rural free-delivery carrier to a newspaper. I am for obvious reasons not going to read to you the place whence the letter was written nor the name of the newspaper nor the name of the writer to the newspaper, because my object is not to punish him, but merely inform the House and illustrate the abuse. I will state first it appears this paper had sent to this gentleman who was carrying the mail a bill for six months' subscription to the paper, and this is his answer. Mark it:

GENTLEMEN: Yours of the 11th instant at hand, and will say in reply I lost the card you sent me. I was somewhat surprised to get such a letter from the [naming the newspaper] without any warning. Being rural free-delivery carrier on route —— at this place, I am placed in a position where I can do the [naming the newspaper] much good, which in the past I have done, the latter in the way of getting people in my route to take [naming the paper] in preference to any other paper. I am in receipt from the [naming a rival paper in the same town] of a letter appointing me correspondent and agent at this place, and in the future shall devote my extra time to the interests of that paper. Only to-day I got three subscribers for them, and two people ordered me to stop the [naming paper to which he is writing], which I said I would do with pleasure, so from hereon discontinue [naming the two men's] papers. As far as sending me the paper free for six months is concerned, I care nothing. I have access to eighty-four daily papers, and will send you pay for your paper at once, if so desired, with pleasure.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

I copied this letter from a letter which was written to that newspaper, and I do not care about giving the name of the rural free-delivery carrier, because I do not care to prosecute him.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Mississippi be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Mississippi be extended for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I vouch for the fact that this letter is from a rural free-delivery carrier, and was written to a newspaper.

Now, then, Mr. Chairman, let us read the provision in this bill about carrying packages and merchandise. I think it is out of the question to have an employee of the Government put in a position where he can discriminate as a solicitor for subscriptions for newspapers against a given party or against a given newspaper, whether actuated by partisanship or regardless of partisanship; and it would be as great an abuse against you Republicans were we in power (which we doubtless will be after the next election) as it is against us now when you are in power. Now, I think, moreover, that it is a meaner and a still greater abuse to have a man put in a position where he can wreak his private vengeance against a newspaper or a merchant by going aronnd and saying good things about one paper or merchant and bad things about another for pay.

As this man says: "I have hitherto got them to subscribe for your paper in preference to all others, and," he says, "when two wanted to quit," as he stated, I communicate the fact "with pleasure," and six months' subscription makes no difference to him. That was not, he says, what he was mad about, but I suppose it was because he was written the letter "without any previous warning" that he was going to be discharged. Now, the argument ex abusa is not always a good one, but sometimes it is, and in this case I think it is. Now, as to the merchandise part of this, which is, "provided that said carriers may carry merchandise for hire for and upon the request of patrons, etc;" I do not think this cuts off any merchandise carrying that anybody wants to conserve. I do not know how it is in the districts of gentlemen here, but I represent a rural district, and taking my own country for illustration, we have telephones running to every plantation and to every farmer's house. We have a local telephone service, by the way, for about one-fifth of the price paid in Washington, with a sparse population. These people can phone the postmaster, they can phone the carrier, they can phone to the merchant, saying, "Please send out by letter carrier one box of shoes, two dozen 2-grain quinine pills, or a dozen bolts of a certain size for my cotton gin," or for whatever they want.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Under this provision some regulations would have to be made by the Department?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. MANN. If you carried out the purpose provided in the paragraph, would it not be necessary to have a written request by a patron, or would it be left to the carrier to say whether a request had been made on him to do this or not?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The Department would have to fix it by regulation.

Mr. MANN. Can the gentleman see any way by which a regulation can be made that either does not require a written request upon the carrier by the patrons or else leave it to the carrier to determine whether a request has been made?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Of course the fact of being requested would have to be determined like all other facts, if it was ever questioned. There would be no reason why an oral direction could not be proved as a fact as well as a written direction. If the Department found out that the carrier was acting in such a wholesale way as to excite suspicion that he was violating the rules, they would inquire into it as other seeming abuses are inquired into; and if they found that he was carrying packages without request being made in writing or otherwise, they could discharge him.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me, so that it may appear in debate on this provision, I would like to ask the gentleman, although I think he partly answered the question, whether he thinks, under this provision, a request made by the patron over a telephone to a storekeeper in the village would be sufficient authority to the carrier?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I think so, and I think it would be susceptible of proof if the fact was questioned that there had been a request.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as to another part of the argument, which is that these carriers will be insufficiently paid if paid $720 and deprived of this privilege out of which they have been making money. The answer to that is, if the House thinks they are insufficiently paid, then it ought to increase the amount from $720 to whatever is thought an adequate compensation for the service. It is a very good rule, anyhow, to let the public servant, as far as possible, be paid by the public alone.

It is always true that no man can serve two masters with equal faithfulness. There is opportunity left for abuse; and a man might become a drummer for one merchant, a drummer traveling at the expense of the Government and being paid by the Government to do his traveling. Now, the Department will, I think—I hope, at any rate, and believe—fix such regulations as will meet the uncertainties of general legislation. There must be some uncertainties in general legislation of all character, and that is why it is said in here that this shall be subject to such regulations, not inconsistent with existing law, as shall be established by the Postmaster-General.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman from Mississippi one more question?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I ask for one minute more in order to answer the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks that his time be extended one minute. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask the gentleman how he differentiates, so far as being a partisan is concerned and preferring one paper to another, between the rural carriers and the fourth-class postmasters?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I do not differentiate at all. I think the fourth-class postmasters making themselves solicitors for newspapers has been a great abuse in many places.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think it has been abuse enough to warrant paying fourth-class postmasters for all of their time, instead of allowing them to do business on the side?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. There would be no objection to their "doing business on the side" if they did not do partisan "business on the side."

Mr. STAFFORD. Does not the fourth-class postmaster have the opportunity and the privilege of establishing an office in his store and running a store besides, while the other postmasters do not have that privilege?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. That is true.

Mr. THAYER. Will the gentleman from Mississippi yield to me?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. My time has expired.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to the paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of line 12, page 26, the following: "and shall be permitted to collect subscriptions for and distribute newspapers and periodicals along their respective routes upon which postage has been prepaid at the pound rate."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I don't know as I want to make the point of order at this time, but that amendment is not an amendment to my amendment.

Mr. OLMSTED. I did not offer it as an amendment to the gentleman's amendment. I take it that we have the right to perfect the original paragraph before the gentleman's amendment to strike out will be in order. My amendment is by way of perfecting the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] make the point of order?

Mr. MANN. I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on the amendment. One of the great objects of the establishment of the rural free-delivery service was the dissemination of information and intelligence among those living more distant from the centers of population: in other words, the dissemination of newspapers and periodicals. Now, in my district we have both Democratic and Republican carriers, and, so far as I know, they act with entire impartiality in the discharge of the duties of their office and in the collection of subscriptions and the distribution of newspapers, whatever may be the case in the district of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will pardon me, I did not make the point that it was because the carrier was a Republican or a Democrat, and the gentleman will recognize this: Suppose we were in power, so as to make it impersonal altogether, and suppose there was a Republican carrier in one place and that here was a Democrat. The Democratic carrier would be emboldened to solicit for a Democratic newspaper and a Republican carrier would feel discouraged in soliciting for a Republican newspaper—not because of their politics, but because of the power above them which they might fear.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, even though a paper might be of the opposite political faith from mine, I believe the public would be benefited by the dissemination of the information and the news which might be printed therein. I will offer as part of my remarks, to be read in my time, some resolutions adopted by the Philadelphia Newspaper Publishers' Association, composed of proprietors of both Democratic and Republican newspapers. I can see no earthly objection to this service being performed by the letter carriers. It is in line with the purpose for which the system was established.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read in the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

At a meeting of the Philadelphia Newspaper Publishers' Association, held Friday, March 11, 1904, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted and signed, copy of which goes forward by mail:

"Whereas the policy of permitting free rural-delivery carriers to collect subscriptions and distribute newspapers and periodicals, upon which postage has been prepaid at pound rates, along their routes has been a great public convenience; and

"Whereas the residents along routes of such carriers, as well as the newspapers, confidently look to the Post-Office Department to encourage a continuance of this system; and

"Whereas there has been inserted a provision in the bill now pending in the House of Representatives, making appropriations to the Postal Department, which would deprive many citizens of the privilege now enjoyed and restrict the circulation of such newspapers and periodicals and practically prohibit the dissemination of daily news in outlying districts; and

"Whereas the said discontinuance of such free rural-delivery service will not add to the Federal revenue: Therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the Philadelphia Newspaper Publishers' Association respectfully urges the Postmaster-General and Members of Congress to oppose any legislation which would prohibit carriers of the free rural-delivery service exercising the rights which they now have in the matter of distribution of newspapers and other periodicals."

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I will add that I have been handed by my colleague [Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania] a resolution adopted by the Pittsburg Newspaper Publishers' Association, irrespective of party. It is as follows:

PITTSBURG, March 17, 1904.

DEAR SIR: The Pittsburg Newspaper Publishers' Association on March 12, 1904, unanimously adopted the following resolution:

"Whereas the policy of permitting free rural-delivery carriers to collect subscriptions and distribute newspapers and periodicals, upon which postage has been prepaid at pound rates, along their routes has been a great public convenience; and

"Whereas the residents along routes of such carriers, as well as the newspapers, confidently look to the Post-Office Department to encourage a continuance of this system; and

"Whereas there has been inserted a provision in the bill now pending in the House of Representatives making appropriations to Postal Department which would deprive many citizens of the privilege now enjoyed, and restrict the circulation of such newspapers and periodicals and practically prohibit the dissemination of daily news in outlying districts; and

"Whereas the said discontinuance of such free rural-delivery service will not add to the Federal revenue: Therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the Pittsburg Newspaper Publishers' Association respectfully urges the Postmaster-General and Members of Congress to oppose any legislation which would prohibit carriers of the free rural-delivery service exercising the rights which they now have in the matter of distribution of newspapers and other periodicals."

FRANCIS X. BARR, Secretary.

Mr. Barr is a Democrat connected with a Democratic newspaper. There is no question of politics in this matter, or at least was not until this morning. Last evening gentlemen upon the other side of the Chamber seemed to be opposed to cutting off this privilege, as would be done by the passage of the bill in its present form. My amendment is in entire harmony with and intended to carry out the purpose of the resolutions of the newspaper associations, but it is offered not so much in the interest of the newspapers as in the interest of farmers and others living outside of the cities and off from the railroads, and who, if this bill shall pass without such amendment, will be deprived of the opportunity of receiving their newspapers upon the day of their publication.

In the formative stages of this rural free-delivery service, in earlier years, there echoed through this Chamber the voices of eloquent gentlemen upon either side of the Hall—prophesies of its great value to the rural districts in this very way, and it has resulted and is resulting as prophesied. But a large part of that result has been derived from the privilege not heretofore denied to carriers of distributing newspapers along their routes. The great object of this branch of the service is to facilitate the communication of information from one persen to another, and from one city or town or part of the country to another. In what way can the communication of information and intelligence be more facilitated than by retaining this means of the quick and early distribution of newspapers?

Whether we speak of the dailies containing the news of the world or the country, weekly or semiweekly papers' columns are devoted more to matters of local interest; these are the great instrumentalities for the dissemination of information upon current events. They convey to their readers the thoughts of many minds upon many subjects in foreign countries, throughout our own country, in the State, in the county, the city, the borough, and the town. They are great educators. No man can be considered well informed or well educated who does not daily read some of them. To deny to the millions of people living outside of cities the right to receive the earliest possible information in this way is to deny to them a privilege which many are now enjoying and to which all are entitled. These carriers are selected by competitive examination under civil-service rules. Some of them in my district, and undoubtedly in the districts of other gentlemen, are Republicans and some of them are Democrats.

The case cited by the gentleman from Mississippi is the first of which I have ever heard where any carrier showed any partisan spirit in the matter. I have no objection to increasing the circulation of Democratic newspapers in my district nor of Republican newspapers. I shall be glad if every citizen reads both. If false doctrine or misstatements of fact creep into one, it is sure to be corrected by the same paper or another, and the people will ultimately get the exact facts and the exact truth. The more newspapers are read in a community the greater will be the intelligence of that community. There is as great hungering and thirst for news among those who live along these rural routes as there is among those who live in cities and towns, and they are entitled to similar privileges. The Government will not lose any revenue by the continuation of this privilege to these carriers.

The Post-Office Department fixes its time schedules for each route. The carrier must be on time or he will be docked in his pay. If he is on time and performs his services to the Government faithfully, what harm can there be in allowing him to serve his patrons by distributing to them their daily papers as he goes along his route, or by receiving from them the amount of their subscriptions to pay for the paper? This practice has never yet resulted in any detriment to the postal service. On the other hand, it benefits it by increasing the revenues. Every newspaper contains hundreds of advertisements. Every advertisement results in correspondence which pays letter postage—first-class postage—the most profitable of any to the Government. I do not see how there can be any reasonable objection to this amendment, and I hope that it will pass.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, there has been a decidedly unusual effort made in the past few weeks to create and perpetuate an impression that this provision is made to interfere with a proper dissemination of newspapers. The contrary is quite true. We do not seek in any way by these restrictions as to the privilege of the carriers to limit at all the distribution of newspapers. I propose at a proper time in this morning's debate to offer an amendment to this bill which will facilitate that situation by permitting newspapers to arrange with the carrier so that they may give to him a list of their subscribers upon his route and send to the carriers the papers for those subscribers, to be delivered without the necessity of singly wrapping each individual paper and placing upon each a single individual stamp, provided, of course, that the postage has been paid before depositing in the mail.

We seek, however, to do away with the abominable practice of the peddler engaged in the Government service. We can not deny this to the rural agent and grant him the privilege of acting as the agent of a newspaper. We do seek to so change the regulations as to largely facilitate the distribution of the papers, but without permitting the rural carrier to continue under pay of the Government to perform the Government work and at the same time solicit for the favorite newspaper with which he may be, perhaps, under contract. I ask that there be read in my time an extract from the New York Sun of March 16, 1904, which clearly shows the condition which prevails in a large number of districts throughout the country and which is an illustration of the situation we seek to avoid.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read in the time of the gentleman from Indiana.

The Clerk read as follows:

RURAL CARRIERS' SIDE LINES—SELL ANYTHING FROM CANDY TO DRIVEN WELLS—COUNTRY STOREKEEPERS AND MAIL-ORDER HOUSES COMPLAIN—CARRIERS DOING A BIG PEDDLING BUSINESS—ONE IOWA MAN HAS THREE LARGE WAGONS IN HIS TRAIN.

WASHINGTON, March 15.

As soon as Postmaster-General Payne is able to resume his duties at the Post-Office Department he intends to take active steps toward securing much-needed legislation for the rural free-delivery service.

Hundreds of complaints are pouring into the Department protesting against rural free-delivery carriers being permitted to act as agents for everything under the sun. Ever since Congress authorized the carriers on rural routes to do a general express business the complaints have poured in.

There has been a change in the tone of the complaints. Formerly all the protests came from the country storekeepers, who said that the rural carriers were acting as agents for big mail-order concerns of the country and that their business was being ruined in consequence. Lately complaints have been received from the mail-order concerns themselves, because the carriers have gone into business on their own hook, leaving both the country storekeeper and the mail-order houses in the lurch.

In his annual report Mr. Payne made a radical recommendation that escaped general notice. He said that if rural carriers "are to be permitted to do an express-package business, then the entire system of compensation should be changed to the contract system, the same as the star-route service."

The fact that Mr. Payne recommended that a large proportion of 15,000 men be thrown out of employment, technically at least, shows just how serious he considers the situation to be. At present carriers all over the country are acting as agents for every known article and commodity. They sell provisions, dry goods, furniture, horseshoes, farming implements, fertilizer, chocolate caramels, and tar roofing; take subscriptions for newspapers, magazines, and turf investment bureaus; insure lives and houses, erect lightning rods, and put down driven wells.

One storekeeper in Iowa, where the rural routes are so thick that a map of them makes the State look like a huge spider's web, wrote to inform the Postmaster-General that the rural carrier in his neighborhood had made him close up because he could not compete with "a general store on wheels and moving in three sections."

According to his letter the carrier in question went out on his route followed by three wagons, containing everything that would likely be needed in a farmhouse on short notice. "Sometimes he even forgets to take the mail along, he's so busy," the storekeeper complained, "and I am thinking about moving into another county and getting a route myself, so as to make a living."

Postmaster-General Payne would like to see legislation at the present session of Congress increasing the pay of rural carriers from $600 to $750 a year and prohibiting them from acting as express agents or doing anything else not in line with the duties now prescribed for regular city mail carriers. At present it looks very much as if Congress would not pay much attention to the Postmaster-General's desires and that the rural carriers would be permitted to sell everything from beef on the hoof to rye in the bottle.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, it does not seem to me that this committee should act upon any such information as is contained in that article. We all like to read the New York Sun. It is one of the best edited papers in the United States, and, as a general proposition, "When you see it in the Sun, it's so;" but this is an exception to the rule. Apparently this information was furnished by some 10-cent store in some remote part of the wild and woolly West. I venture to say that there is not a Member here who will acknowledge that any such condition exists in his district, either in Iowa or in any other State. Now, what is the fact with reference to these country merchants? Why, they have been from the start opposed to free delivery of any kind. You all know how it is. There are places in the United States to-day entitled to city free delivery, but which do not enjoy that privilege because the proposition is opposed by the little storekeepers there. They say that if the people get their mail delivered at their doors they will not come down to the post-office, and thus will not pass their stores and see their goods in their windows, and that in consequence they will not buy so many goods.

So the country merchants have been opposed to rural free delivery. They wanted the country people to come to town for their mails; they said they would spend more money if they came to town, and in that way the country storekeeper would sell more goods. They have been opposed to the whole proposition, and they now complain because, forsooth, sometimes a patron of the line sends in by the letter carrier for 5 pounds of sugar, and he goes to the neighboring storekeeper for it rather than to the one who makes the complaint.

For my part, I have 130 of these routes in my district. I have never heard one word of complaint with respect to any of the matters involved in this section. One hundred and thirty routes may not be considered a large number. Some of the Members here may have more routes in their districts. But when these rural routes were established, it was not for the sake of the merchants, not for the benefit of the newspapers, but for the patrons, the residents on the routes. I ask the members of this committee how many of them have received any complaint from the patrons of these routes touching the matter now under consideration?

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. The gentleman will allow me to ask whether his remarks are intended to apply to the question of the increase of salary?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. No; I understand that the question of salary is not now under consideration. That will come later on. I am in favor of paying these carriers $600 the first year, $720 the second year, and $850 each year thereafter. To-day they are the most poorly paid class of officials in the Government service. But now we are considering the question whether these carriers should be allowed the privileges they now enjoy of carrying parcels and delivering papers to the patrons of these routes. And I insist that up to this time no valid reason has been given for depriving them of this privilege.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I quite agree with the gentleman from Vermont. I want to ask him whether he does not believe that any serious abuse on the part of the carrier in reference to carrying merchandise in excessive quantities can be restricted and prevented by the regulations of the Post-Office Department in respect to the time that shall be occupied in the trip?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Certainly. I am glad the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HINSHAW] has called my attention to that point. These men are under the civil service. What is the civil service for? It is one of the means of compelling public officials like these to perform their duties faithfully and efficiently.

The Post-Office Department makes its rules and regulations for the guidance of these carriers. The time schedule is prescribed in which they must cover their routes. And if any such conditions existed as indicated by the article read from the Clerk's desk it would be the duty of the Postmaster-General to see that the carrier who neglected his official duties in order to carry on his private business was promptly removed. I repeat that no complaints have been made by the patrons of these routes as to the kind of service that has been rendered. Under all the circumstances, the method now in vogue should be given another year's trial. During that time the Post-Office Department can make further investigation and be better prepared to recommend changes in the existing law.

Mr. OLMSTED. The gentleman will allow me to suggest that my amendment leaves the bill in this respect as it is. It permits the Postmaster-General to make regulations concerning other matters, but leaves the distribution of newspapers as it now is.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I listened with much interest to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED], and I am not sure that it would not cover the ground satisfactorily. It is certainly an improvement upon the proposition contained in the bill. But I would much prefer that the law remain as it is for another year.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, it has been said of the typical Scotchman that the only way to get a joke into his head is by trephining. I think perhaps the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. FOSTER] takes too seriously the article just read. Probably it was not intended to be quite as veracious as history should be. The gentleman is unnecessarily alarmed about it.

Mr. Chairman, I think we are losing sight of the real purpose for which this rural service was instituted. It was for the purpose of carrying the mails; that was the only purpose that Congress had in authorizing it—carrying the mails to the doors of the people living in the rural districts. It was not for the purpose of facilitating the transfer of property; it was not intended to be a commercial agency; it was not designed to relieve the newspapers of the expense of their present methods of increasing their circulation and collecting their debts.

Carriers are for the purpose of carrying the mails; and we are paying them for that service, in which they travel 25 miles every week day, providing themselves with a vehicle and with the necessary horses. In very many regions traveling 25 miles a day in bad weather involves a day's work. Now, it is proposed to allow these men to engage in enterprises that will take more of their time, I undertake to say, than will the business of the Government. The man at the end of the route has his right to early service. We have no right, after expending the money of the Government to accommodate him, to allow the carrier to engage in that class of business, which will occupy very much of his time. The collection of a bill due to a newspaper or the soliciting of a subscription involves leaving his route or leaving his vehicle—going to see somebody, having an interview with somebody—consuming the time that belongs to the public and that we are paying for. [Applause.]

It seems to me that if this measure is passed as it is now before the committee, with one amendment—increasing the pay to $800 a year—it will be well-nigh perfect. It will then compensate the officer and enable him to do those little services for his patrons along his route that do not involve the consumption of time. The man who wants him to carry some little thing from the town is there at the box to tell him so, or there is a memorandum in the box. There is no consumption of time. He goes right on; he does that errand; there is no waste of time involved in that. He does what is necessary in the town during the hours that he is not upon his route, and the interest of everybody is conserved, it seems to me, as far as it is the duty of the Government to look to it. Let the newspapers take care of their subscriptions; let them take care of their collections, as other business men do. I do not think it would be proper that these carriers should become solicitors for a business house. Why should they be solicitors for newspapers? They ought not to be collectors for a business house. Why should they be collectors for a newspaper? How do you make the distinction?

It is true that the purpose, among other things, is to enable the man living in the country to get his daily paper, but not to change all the methods, not to do away with the necessity of his making the subscription, not to do away with the necessity of his paying his debts. That is not the purpose for which this service was instituted.

Mr. OLMSTED. Does not the gentleman know that the rural carriers are now performing the service which my amendment would permit them to continue to perform?

Mr. HEPBURN. I think that to a considerable extent many of them are, to the detriment of their public business and to the detriment of the interests of the man who lives near the farther end of the route.

Mr. OLMSTED. The gentleman's statement is as general and vague as that of the New York Sun. Can he name an instance of the kind?

Mr. HEPBURN. Oh, I do not choose to name an instance, although I have heard of instances of that kind, as I think every other man has. I have heard complaints; I have had letters of complaints that these men were occupied so that they did not get to the latter part of their routes until nearly night.

Mr. OLMSTED. I have only heard of one, and the Postmaster-General suspended him; and I have no doubt he would suspend every other carrier who offended in the same way.

Mr. HEPBURN. If you authorize them to do this, the Postmaster-General can not suspend them. You are proposing to give them this as a right, as a compensation additional to the $800 which I hope we will give them.

Mr. OLMSTED. He can suspend them if they do not get around on their routes.

Mr. HEPBURN. Surely not; if you authorize them to do this thing, you are taking away from the Postmaster-General the power of control, by legalizing these very acts that do delay them, that would otherwise call for the exercise of power on the part of the Postmaster-General. I believe that the people of the country will be entirely satisfied if we properly compensate the carrier and if we then prohibit him from doing that class of business that is not done at the instance of some patron along his route. [Applause.]

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Chairman, the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] presupposes that we shall vote down the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, as I understand it.

Mr. OLMSTED. Not at all. If the gentleman will permit me, it will be optional with the committee to vote it down or vote it up, as the committee chooses.

Mr. THAYER. I believe there is a feeling in this House not to raise the salaries of the rural free-delivery carriers more than to $720. For myself, I should be pleased to vote $800, but I believe it is in the atmosphere that they will not receive over $720. If that is all the carrier gets, after paying for the care of his team—not the first investment in two horses and a wagon, but after paying for the care of his team—he will receive about $1.30 a day.

Now, up in God's country, where I live, no man is allowed to work nine hours a day as an unskilled laborer for less than $1.75 or $1.85 a day, and it is impossible for us to get carriers at the salary now paid. My own experience is that I have aided in the establishment of eight rural free-delivery routes in the Third Congressional district of Massachusetts. The first one was in the Fifty-sixth Congress, and the route was established in the town in which I was born. Ever since it was established, which was early in that year, we have been unable to find a man who would carry the mail for $600. In four of the eight districts that have been established in my Congressional district the carriers have resigned, saying that they could not live on the amount paid them.

I have spent more time, ten times over, in attempting to encourage these carriers to keep on, in the expectation that Congress would treat them fairly later on, than I have in distinguishing between two applicants for office or making any recommendations on that line

Now, I want to say one other thing, Mr. Chairman. I think the gentleman from Mississippi has been unduly disturbed in the case which he has cited. One robin does not make a summer. I believe there are very few instances where parties have gone to the extent to which the man he referred to has gone, or the one which was referred to in the editorial of the New York Sun.

I do not know that any complaint has been made up in my district that the letter carriers have infringed in any way and carried packages and performed messenger service to the detriment of their carrier service. I do not think there is anything in the claim that the carrier carrying Republican papers will injure the Democratic party. My district is largely Republican. You can not make a Democrat out of a Republican any more, I will tell the gentleman from Mississippi, than you can make a Republican out of a Democrat. They will exercise their own judgment in these matters, whether they are letter carriers or in any other capacity, and I want to say to this House that all this bugaboo raised here that men are engaged in spending most of their time serving as messengers and expressmen can not be true. We all know there is ample provision now in the hands of the Postmaster-General where, if anyone has neglected his duties as a mail carrier, he can stop it and correct any and all abuse. If any mail carrier in any well-regulated community should have three teams, one following the other, and all following his mail wagon, carrying all sorts of merchandise to the people along his route, he would, in forty-eight hours, lose his position as mail carrier, and he ought to.

That matter is entirely in the hands of the Postmaster-General to prevent any and all such abuses. Perhaps there may be in this country some shrewd Yankee making some money out of this scheme of doing a general merchandise business on wheels, but I am confident they are exceptional cases and can easily be corrected by the Postmaster-General with the laws we now have. But these are exceptional cases, as we all well know, and to mention two or three isolated cases here, with a funny editorial from the Sun, and the statement which has disturbed the gentleman from Mississippi, and which he has read, claiming that doing messenger service conflicts with their service as mail carriers, I do not believe is true to any appreciable extent. I believe that most of the letter carriers do not make $1 a week by messenger service, and I am led to this belief from the experience I have had with the carriers in Massachusetts. I think that the best thing that we can do is to adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, cutting out all after the word "carriers," and then voting $720 salary and let the carriers do what messenger business they can get to do, and let matters remain there. I believe that when we shall have done that we shall have done substantial justice to the letter carriers.

I do not believe when this law was passed that it was ever thought possible that they would devote any considerable amount of their time to the messenger service, and I do not believe they have.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to offer to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED].

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That in so doing said carrier shall not neglect nor delay his service to the Government.

Mr. OLMSTED. I would be glad to accept that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the alteration of the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] will be accepted.

There was no objection.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I wish very much that the motion made by the gentleman from Illinois, spoken upon by the gentleman who immediately preceded me, and who favored it, may prevail in this House. Unless the majority of the committee might not favor a continuance of the present regulations of the Post-Office Department on the subject under discussion, I offered this amendment. I offered it to relieve a condition suggested in the argument made by the gentleman from Iowa. We have some law upon the question which we are now discussing.

Mr. SPALDING. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. With pleasure.

Mr. SPALDING. Is it not entirely practicable for the Post-Office Department to provide, and does it not provide, a schedule of time, and set the hour at which the mail shall depart from the post-office and limit the time within which it must return; and is not that all the safeguard that is necessary?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I know that to be the fact. I know in the country surrounding the town in which I live where these mails are distributed they go on schedule time, and if the carrier should stop in John Smith's barn and milk a cow, he would be reported and discharged. No carrier has failed in his duty, but has gone over his route every day, and no complaint of promptness has been made. Mr. Chairman, in the last act of Congress——

Mr. MADDOX. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. MADDOX. Let me ask you if it is not true if the carrier fails to make the time it is the duty of the postmaster to report the fact that he failed to make the time?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Yes; I am delighted to answer the gentleman. Futhermore, it is the duty of the last patron on the road or the first patron or any patron to report the failure upon the part of the carrier to perform his duty, and it is a part of the duty of the postmaster to report failure of duty to the Department, which should discipline the delinquent. The Department has now ample authority to discharge a carrier, as it has authority to dismiss any servant of the Government who does not properly discharge his duty. Is that an answer to the gentleman's question?

Mr. GROSVENOR. They have not any such power; they have to be tried before the civil service.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Ohio says they must be tried by the Civil Service Commission. I suppose if a letter carrier failed to perform his duty properly and the evidence was clear against him, he might be discharged. I suppose he could be reached if the people making a charge against him took the pains and the time to present themselves and testify to his failure in the performance of his duty.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. There have been complaints read here against the existing order of rural free delivery as coming first from the country storekeepers, and there have been complaints read as coming from the Philadelphia department stores and jobbing houses. Have you heard any complaint here or elsewhere coming from the people who are served by the rural free-delivery carriers?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the question put to me by the gentleman from New Jersey it pleases me to be able to say that there are twelve or thirteen, perhaps fourteen, rural mail carriers carrying mail from Westchester, the town in which I live, and have been carrying the mail from there for four or five years, and there never has been one word of complaint from anybody; and, furthermore, it will be an additional pleasure to inform the gentleman from New Jersey that those twelve or thirteen carriers carry every year between twelve and thirteen hundred thousand pieces of mail.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I have not had a chance to read the act of Congress to which I made a reference to sustain a point which I desire to make.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that five minutes more time may be granted to my colleague.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] asks unanimous consent that his colleague be given five more minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. I desire to suggest to you that in my district I have somewhere between 75 and 100 routes, and I have yet the first complaint to hear from people along any route of any neglect of duty on account of the carriers for this service rendered; but, on the contrary, one of the chief reasons and one of the great arguments that is advanced by the patrons of the route is that they are enabled to get the daily newspapers without going to so much trouble in the manner they would have to do if they did not have this privilege.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, just the same satisfaction exists in my Congressional district. I will be very sorry indeed if a majority of this committee takes from my constituents the privileges they have of getting the Philadelphia newspapers and county newspapers carried to their doors by the rural carrier. I shall be very sorry indeed if any restriction is put upon the privileges which my constituents have to-day; and I do know this to be a fact, that those papers are carried largely, if not directly, under a regulation of the Post-Office Department—perhaps even with the permission of the Department. The whole subject is in the hands of authorities who can restrain the letter carrier—who can even prohibit him from carrying newspapers—but can not prohibit him from carrying packages, because in the Congress of 1902, in the post-office appropriation bill——

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. After I read this section:

> Carriers at salary not exceeding $800 per annum, and no other or further allowance or salary shall be made to said carriers. But the carriers shall not be prohibited from doing an express-package business, provided it does not interfere with the discharge of their official duties.

Now, I submit that, so far as the carrying of express packages is concerned, there is provision of law which is satisfactory. The authorities have ample power given them to regulate the conduct of the carrier while doing an express-package business. If you see fit to adopt a provision permitting the carriers to distribute newspapers, the amendment I offer to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] puts the same authority in the hands of the Postmaster-General as relating to the distribution of them as he now has on the express-package business. Now I will answer the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. LLOYD. Do you wish to convey the idea that papers are carried in your district by the carriers free of postage?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. No, sir.

Mr. LLOYD. Then, what is the effect upon the individual who receives the mail? Will it not be carried by the carrier just the same?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. He gets his papers delivered much more promptly.

Mr. LLOYD. Why does he get them any more promptly?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Well, I do not know the situation in your district, but I will tell you what it is in mine——

Mr. LLOYD. That is what I want to know.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. The carrier starts at a quarter of 2 in the afternoon and carries about 900 copies of the afternoon paper published in my town. They are all served to the carriers at the newspaper office, but can not be taken to the post-office and put in the regular mail and afterwards gotten in the hands of the carrier in time to let him start on his trip and not be delayed longer than he should be in order to make his distribution promptly. If this paper must go to the post-office and through the mails, it might not be distributed until the next day—a disappointment to its subscribers.

Mr. LLOYD. They deliver them as news agents.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Many of the people of my district take the New York Sun; it is their political bible. The fast paper train leaves New York at 3 o'clock in the morning, the minute the papers come from the presses, and they can not be rolled up in individual envelopes. These bundles go to Troy on this fast train and thence to my district. The letter carriers then take these papers and distribute them along their routes. The result is that the farmers in the southern part of my district have the New York Sun delivered to them in the afternoon of the day it is printed, when, if they were required to be sent through the mails, as the Postmaster-General asks, they could not get them until the next day.

Mr. LLOYD. Is it not true that every time they do that they are violating the rules of the Department?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. No, sir; not at all.

Mr. LLOYD. I wish to state that it is a violation of the rules.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I believe I have the floor, if I do not have time——

Mr. LLOYD. I wish to ask the gentleman a further question.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I will yield, as the gentleman did not object to my having five minutes extension.

Mr. LLOYD. Is it possible for you to send 100 packages of Farmers' Bulletins, and direct the carrier to drop one in every box that he comes to along the route?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I think it is possible, but I don't do it. I send them directly to each farmer, and sometimes I send a letter along with the bulletin, and I advise my friend to do the same. [Laughter.] Now, I do not yield any further. Mr. Chairman, if the amendment prevails, it will avoid the dilemma in which we may find ourselves, or the Department might find itself, provided the gentleman from Iowa has been right in his conclusion. It will give the officers of the Post-Office Department absolute control over the carrier and enable them to regulate him so that the service will not suffer.

If the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] prevails, it will give to our people the same privileges of receiving the newspapers they enjoy now. If the motion of the gentleman from Illinois prevails, we will be for another year in the same situation that we are in at this time, which is not to be complained of.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, the object of the Post-Office Department is to carry information safely and as quickly as possible, with due regard to economy, from one individual to another. The reason for the establishment of the rural free-delivery service was to expedite and facilitate the carrying of the mail to the farmers and carrying it to the farmer's door. It was not instituted in the interest of the great daily newspapers of the country, nor in the interest of the merchant, nor in the interests of any other class. It was instituted for the best interests of the Government.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that we are doing almost enough for the newspapers of the country. They are not charitable institutions. There is no reason why we should give them additional gratuities. We carry their papers now from the publication office to subscribers for 1 cent a pound, when it costs the Government 8 cents a pound; and if the newspaper is carried only to the subscribers of the county in which it is printed, we carry it for nothing. We are doing a good deal for the newspapers in that direction. Of course the newspapers may get together and their publishers pass resolutions asking for greater privileges and asking that every rural free-delivery carrier shall be an agent for them to solicit subscriptions and collect subscriptions when they can do so from time to time, but that is not fair to the other interests in the United States.

It is not fair to the farmers along the route. It is not fair, as the gentleman from Iowa said, to the last man on the route who receives the mail that the carriers should be allowed to spend an hour or two in collecting bills in aid of the great newspaper offices of the country. It is not in accordance with the primary object of the rural free delivery—namely, the carrying of mails quickly and economically to their destination.

Mr. COUSINS. Will the gentleman from New York yield for a question?

Mr. PAYNE. Yes.

Mr. COUSINS. Can the gentleman state any instance where an act of Congress has been used to limit or restrict the privileges of any class of employees in the post-office or any other office of the Government?

Mr. PAYNE. Why, certainly. Everybody in the Government employ gives his whole time to it, or is supposed to do so, except the fourth-class postmasters and the rural free-delivery carriers.

Mr. COUSINS. What act of Congress prevents a city-delivery carrier from carrying newspapers and soliciting subscriptions?

Mr. PAYNE. I don't know whether there is any act of Congress or not, but I know there is not a city in the country where if a carrier was allowed to solicit subscriptions for a paper and collect subscriptions the Department would hear from it very soon, and the regulations would stop him. The idea of the statute is that they must give the Government their time and perform their duty to the Government.

Mr. COUSINS. If the gentleman knows——

Mr. PAYNE. I can not let the gentleman take up all of my time.

Mr. COUSINS. I want to know if there is any act of Congress curtailing the privileges of any other class of employees of the Post-Office Department?

Mr. PAYNE. The act of Congress compels clerks to work seven hours a day, and they have got to perform their duty.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PAYNE. I would like to go on.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman say whether he thinks that either a law or a regulation ought to prevent a Department clerk from doing business for anybody else outside of his hours of labor for the Government?

Mr. PAYNE. Why, certainly not.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman know that this provision of the bill practically forbids the carrier from doing that outside of his hours of labor for the Government?

Mr. PAYNE. It does not forbid him outside of his hours. It is when he is carrying the mail and engaged in his duties that he shall not do these things.

Mr. MANN. So that the gentleman may not be mistaken, I will call his attention to the language:

And on and after said date said carriers shall not solicit business or receive orders of any kind.

Mr. PAYNE. I would like to direct the gentleman's attention to something which he has overlooked in line 6:

And shall not, during their hours of employment, carry any merchandise for hire: Provided, That said carriers may carry merchandise for hire for and upon the request of patrons residing upon their respective routes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman may be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from New York may be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PAYNE. Now, Mr. Chairman, I understand that an amendment will be offered to this bill which will not allow the carriers to become collectors for these impecunious gentlemen who publish the great newspapers of the country, and will allow the carriers to distribute the papers as they come from the office, without folding and without being directed, simply by the newspapers paying 1 cent a pound postage. This amendment will be offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET], the chairman of the committee.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Put it in the RECORD, then.

Mr. PAYNE. I will read it now. I suppose there is no objection to my reading it.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Oh, no; none whatever.

Mr. PAYNE. I am told, Mr. Chairman, by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET], the chairman of the committee, that he proposes to offer this amendment additional to the lines in the bill:

Provided, That rural carriers may make and perform contracts with publishers of newspapers and periodicals and news agents for the delivery of newspapers and periodicals which are admitted to the mails at second-class rates of postage and upon which one rate of postage has been paid, if subject to postage, to patrons of their routes and under such regulations as the Postmaster-General may provide, provided there is no interference thereby with the discharge of their official duties.

Now, I think that covers all that gentlemen desire in this case. It covers all that ought to be desired. We ought not to go to the extent, because the newspaper people ask it, of providing an agent for them on every route. We ought not to go to the extent of giving them this special privilege over all the citizens of the United States. Gentlemen have asked the question here whether there was any complaint about carriers not getting in on time. There has been complaint in my district. An inspector was up there to examine and see if the complaints were well founded, and they found that they were, and some of the carriers have been censured because they did not get back in time from performing their duties on the route. Their excuse, or one excuse, was that some of this business allowed by the Department had delayed them upon their route.

I am informed that it is the proposition here to allow them to carry merchandise as the committee allows it. I find in my district that the people did not want to give up the old star-route service. Why? Because, as they expressed it, the farmer could send by the stage driver in the morning for a plowpoint and get it back at night, or for some other part of his machinery that had been broken, and that if they got rid of the star routes and it was left in the hands of a rural carrier these farmers would not have that privilege.

I am in favor of their having that privilege for the convenience of the people upon the route; but I do not believe you ought to turn this force of men into soliciting agents for any business house or firm or any publisher of a newspaper who may desire to employ them to do business as agents instead of the duty for which they are primarily employed by the Government—that is, the carrying of the mails.

Mr. OLMSTED. I should like to ask the gentleman a question. He stated that he was in favor of allowing the carrier to bring a plow point to a farmer along the route. Would he not also allow the carrier to receive the money for it from the farmer and turn it over to the seller of the plow point?

Mr. PAYNE. Certainly.

Mr. OLMSTED. Why not grant the same privilege in the case of a newspaper as in the case of a plow point?

Mr. PAYNE. That is another thing. I would not want the carrier to go around as a collecting agent among the various newspaper subscribers upon the route. I do not want him to spend his time collecting these little bills from each farmer, who when the carrier comes there may be at the other end of the farm.

Mr. OLMSTED. Oh, no; we may assume that the subscriber to the newspaper would be at the box to receive his paper, the carrier would give it to him, and take his subscription when due.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, it might seem that after this protracted debate nothing new could be added to what has already been said upon this question. But being a member of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, of which we have heard so much here, I wish to say that this is one of the provisions which were submitted to the whole committee. Nine-tenths of the work of that committee was undertaken by a subcommittee of seven; but this provision was debated and considered very thoroughly by the whole committee, and it seems to me that it is perhaps proper for me to refer to some of the reasons that induced the committee to make its recommendation in favor of the provision as it stands. The provision is as follows:

On and after July 1, 1904, letter carriers of the rural free-delivery service shall receive a salary not exceeding $720 per annum, and no other or further allowance or salary shall be made to said carriers; and on and after said date said carriers shall not solicit business or receive orders of any kind for any person, firm, or corporation, and shall not, during their hours of employment, carry any merchandise for hire for and upon the request of patrons residing upon their respective routes, whenever the same shall interfere with the proper discharge of their official duties, and under such regulations as the Postmaster-General may prescribe.

I might say that the first decision of the committee was in favor of taking away all the privileges of the rural carriers for the reason that the committee believed that the postal service should not be mixed up with these other affairs. That was the opinion of every official of the Department who said anything about the subject at the hearings or who made any recommendation to Congress. In the annual report of the Post-Office Department it is said:

Under the law the salary of rural carriers can not exceed $600 per annum, and no other allowance can be made, but it is provided that they shall not be prohibited from doing an express-package business.

The provision of law under which rural carriers are permitted to do an express-package business was intended by Congress to provide a means of additional compensation, but it is so broad in its terms that the way has been opened for a serious loss of revenue to the postal service. The Department has endeavored to restrict the express matter carried by rural carriers to such as is not mailable fourth-class mail matter, but advantage is taken of the law by business firms to secure the distribution of large quantities of advertising matter by the rural carriers. Such matter is shipped by express or freight to the carrier or some rural agent who arranges with the carrier for its distribution. Thus rural carriers, employees of the Department, are delivering to patrons on their rural routes matter which would otherwise be mailed and become a source of postal revenue. As the result of the express-package business, complaints frequently come to the Department that carriers are soliciting business for one firm to the disadvantage of others.

In many sections of the country carriers have become the agents of newspapers, soliciting subscribers, delivering papers, and collecting for the same. This has led to complaints from other newspapers circulating in the same territory, alleging that carriers discriminate against one paper in favor of another. In one State there was discovered an attempt on the part of a carriers' organization to exact certain compensation from daily papers, and any paper declining to meet such demand was to be placed on the blacklist. The ultimate result of permitting carriers to transact express-package business is great loss of revenue to the Department, and constant annoyance from complaints of merchants and publishers.

In many instances the delivery of mail is now a secondary matter, the express-package business being regarded by the carrier as the more important part of his work. He is secure in his salary from the Government, and what business he can work up as news agent or express messenger is clear gain. If carriers are to be permitted to do an express-package business, then the entire system of compensation should be changed to the contract system, the same as the star-route service. On many routes a profitable express business is not practicable, while on others it becomes lucrative, and the present system therefore results in great inequality of compensation.

It is therefore recommended that rural carriers be restricted to the discharge of their official duties, the same as city carriers, as prescribed by the Department, and to provide a compensation commensurate with the service performed.

Now, one of the chief reasons for having these things kept separate has been, it seems to me, overlooked in this debate; and that is the effect that the granting of these privileges will have upon the revenue of the Government. We have heard from the advocates of the city carrier that he wants more salary. We have heard also from the man who seems to represent the great metropolitan newspapers and the mail-order houses, who have, with the aid of the Government agents, obtained an advantage over competitors. That they are unwilling to give up these advantages is perfectly natural, but that any gentleman upon this floor should knowingly play the part of the special advocate of these interests when they are plainly inconsistent with the general welfare and the interest of the people as a whole is not so easy to understand.

Now, that is a very narrow view to take of any question of this kind. It is not the interests of these people that should control us in a matter of this kind. There is one man who has been forgotten in this whole discussion, and that man is Uncle Sam. Uncle Sam is conducting an extensive business here. It is purely and simply a business enterprise, the distribution of mails; and if you grant to the carriers these privileges what effect does it have upon the revenue of the Government? It has a disastrous effect, as shown by several officials of the Department. General Bristow, at the hearing before the subcommittee, referring to rural carriers, said:

> They are now the agents of express companies in some sections of the country, and merchandise which would otherwise go by mail goes by express, and they deliver it as the agent of the express company, although they are paid a salary to deliver mail matter. If we had the authority to prohibit them from doing business as express agents, a great deal of matter which now is delivered by them as agents of the express companies would go by mail, and it would greatly increase the revenue of the routes.

You authorize an employee of the Government to go into direct competition with the postal service. Take, for instance, the firm of Montgomery Ward & Co., of Chicago. We will suppose that they want to distribute 100 catalogues to 100 farms. It will cost 35 cents apiece, or $35 in the aggregate, to send them by mail; so, instead of sending them by mail, they send them by freight. That firm pays $2 freight on those catalogues and sends them to the rural agents for distribution, at a cost, we will say, of $3. So the Government is out $30 in its revenue by reason of the competition of its own rural carriers.

The committee was of the opinion that we can better afford to pay the rural agents a salary that would enable them to do the work efficiently without these side lines at all, because of the revenue that would thus be brought to the Government.

I am not in sympathy with those men who seem to argue that Congress is here for the benefit of city carriers, the rural carriers, or any kind of salaried employees. We are not here to give gratuities. The carrying of the mails is a business enterprise, conducted in the interest of the whole people, and is intended to be self-sustaining as nearly as possible. We ought to pay enough to get good, efficient service. These men are not drafted into the service, nor are the city carriers drafted into the service. If they do not want to serve, it is a matter of free choice—they are at liberty to resign and enter other fields of activity. If we can not get good, efficient men to take their places, we shall be justified in raising salaries just as a business concern would do. The rural carriers are now paid $600 a year, but if we take away these privileges the salary ought to be raised to $720, or perhaps more. But they ought all to be paid alike. As matters are now, the man who runs a route out of a large city makes a larger salary by reason of his express-package business than the man in the country going from a small town on a route, for instance, in the Northwest.

Experience in the administration of the free rural mail-delivery service has shown that, under the present system of permitting the carriers to do this express-package business, it is in the sections of the country where this service is the most difficult to perform that the compensation is the lowest. The result was that in that section many carriers resigned and routes had to be abandoned. General Bristow, on this point, said at the hearing:

> I think we had between 2,300 and 2,400 resignations last year—out of proportion to what they should be.
> Then, in some sections of the country, in the Northern States and in the Northwest, we have to abandon some routes because we can not get carriers. In other sections of the country we have no difficulty whatever, where horse feed is cheaper and horses are cheaper and maintenance is cheaper. But I have not thought that it would be at all practicable to fix a different compensation for a carrier in the different sections of the country. It could not be done. It would not be feasible, and so I think the service should be better paid. In some sections of the country it is necessary.

Yet I am satisfied, if you raise these salaries as recommended by the committee and take away these privileges, we can get good and efficient men to do this service.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. OVERSTREET. I ask that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] have five minutes more.

There was no objection.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Before the gentleman resumes, will he allow me one question? He cites the case of a business house sending out several tons of catalogues.

Mr. STEENERSON. No; a hundred catalogues.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. On which the rate would have been $35. Now, taking the country over, that is the particular class of mail on which the e is supposed to be a very large deficit; so that perhaps, after all, that illustration, figured out, would show that the Government has been saved several dollars deficit by reason of that arrangement.

Mr. STEENERSON. I do not think so. It would be either third or fourth class matter, upon which the Government receives 8 and 16 cents per pound and makes a profit. Now, take for instance this case: Take a publishing house. Look at the injustice it works upon the publisher. Here is a publisher of books. If he sends out his books by mail he pays the Government perhaps 30 or 35 cents on each book. One of these big department stores or trusts in Chicago or New York will buy 10,000 copies of a book and send them out and make arrangements with the rural agents to deliver them at a special rate, and the revenues of the Government are depleted to that extent. You are entering into competition with yourselves and paying the salary of the man who competes with you. As far as the postage on these books is concerned, I do not know whether the carrying of them involves a loss or not. I think not, however. It is believed there is a profit in carrying third and fourth class matter. It is on second-class matter, carried at 1 cent per pound, that the loss occurs.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. There is a deficit in that class of matter.

Mr. STEENERSON. I think not. I think in that class there is a profit. The average cost of carrying mail is estimated at 2¼ cents per pound. I think there is a profit in both third and fourth class matter. In extreme cases, where the matter is carried a long distance over many separate lines of railway, there may not be, but on the average there is a profit.

For these reasons it seems to me that we ought to carry out the recommendations made by this committee and take away these privileges; and I would say that the privileges that are retained were retained by the committee because they believed that they would meet some of the objections raised on this floor. The committee wanted to segregate this service into a postal service pure and simple, instead of permitting its being converted into an agency for private concerns, such as mail-order houses and the like. It is not good policy for the Government to help destroy the healthy competition of the small dealer in the country or village against the larger concerns of the cities. Its duty is rather to encourage fair competition, in order that the public may be protected against monopolistic combinations and resulting extortions. It should afford equal opportunities to all and favor none.

We are therefore opposed to giving the rural carriers these privileges because it is wrong in principle, affording undue advantage to some at the expense of others, because it results in unequal compensation to the carriers and interferes with the efficiency of their service, and, lastly, because it materially decreases the revenues of the postal service. This bill carries $21,180,000 for this service alone, as against $12,000,000 last and $7,000,000 the year before. We propose to appropriate by this bill for the next fiscal year $169,996,588.75. Last year the postal revenues amounted to $134,224,443.24 and expenditures to $138,784,487.97, leaving a deficit of $4,560,044.43. The excess of expenditures over receipts in the postal service for the next year is estimated at from ten to thirteen million dollars, imposing a considerable burden on the general Treasury. The demand for the extension of the rural service is steadily increasing, and the beneficent influence of the service upon farm and country life is so manifest that the demand can not be ignored.

On January 15 last there were 21,066 rural routes established, and it is estimated that by July 1 there will be over 25,000 routes in operation and by the end of the next fiscal year more than 30,000. If we are to meet this demand without embarrassment to the Treasury, we must not ignore considerations of economy in expenditures. Many of us would have liked to fix these salaries at a still higher figure than $720, but we felt that under all the circumstances that was a fair increase and sufficient to attract competent and efficient men and to maintain the service where established. However just and fair the demand for higher salaries on the part of city carriers and railway mail clerks may be, in view of the fact that the Government is now losing nearly a million dollars a month on the postal service, we felt that this is not the proper time to press these demands.

These are, briefly, the considerations that induced the Post-Office Committee to recommend the provisions of the bill before you, and I trust they appeal to your judgment as in the interest of the general public welfare. [Applause.]

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following as a substitute for the amendment now before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute for the amendment now before the committee:

"Letter carriers of the rural service shall receive a salary of not to exceed $850, with fifteen days' vacation with pay, and shall not solicit or do any business other than that required by the Government, except they may carry small parcels at the request of a patron living on the line."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Michigan, with reference to the parliamentary situation, that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is to strike out certain portions of the bill, beginning with the word "and," in line 4, and continuing down to and including all of line 12.

To that amendment the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] offers an amendment for perfecting the part which it is proposed to strike out. If the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] prevails, it then becomes a part of the bill, to which the motion of the gentleman from Illinois refers; and if the motion of the gentleman from Illinois prevails, it will all go out. All amendments which aim to perfect that part of the bill to which the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois applies would be in order. The Chair thinks, however, that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan applies also to the former part of the section and would not now be in order.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Very well; I will withhold that until the others are voted upon.

Mr. GROSVENOR rose and was recognized.

Mr. COUSINS. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa rises to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. COUSINS. The Chair stated a moment ago that the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois proposed to strike out all after the word "and," in line 4, down to line 12. The bill which I have would seem to indicate lines 14 to 24.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that there are two different prints of the bill.

Mr. COUSINS. I have the latest print, but the Clerk is evidently using the old one.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, when the idea of rural free delivery was first suggested by somebody—I do not know who he was, whether a Democrat or a Republican—and his suggestion was incorporated into the first act looking to the development of that which has grown to be a very popular and a very valuable system in the country, I take it that no one understood at that time that we were arranging for 21,000 express companies, 21,000 book peddlers, 21,000 agents of Peruna [laughter], 21,000 pension agents, 21,000 lightning-rod sellers, and 21,000 solicitors of patent medicines, patent insides and patent outsides of newspapers.

Mr. CANDLER. Any tombstone agents in there?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Where are we to stop? What is to be the limit? I say to you gentlemen now that you will make this limitation to-day, somewhere in this bill, or you will never make it, and the whole business of the country will be turned over to the United States Government, which will hire the agents of all the business enterprises of the country and pay them a salary to represent the particular employer, and they will practically become the employees of these private concerns, while the Government pays their salaries. Where is it to stop? What is to be the limit of it? It is said here that these carriers are employed only to go over these lines of travel and back again, and that it does not make any difference what they do on the way or on the way back, so they go over the line and get back again.

Why not give to the postal clerks on the cars the same privilege? Why not let them be agents, and open up a little sample room in one end of the postal car and exhibit costumes and all sorts of merchandise and have a traveling commercial agency? Why not? It would be very convenient to the merchant who can get them to work for him and work against the other fellow. They would make a mighty good thing out of it. We are to employ 21,000 commercial agents, paid by the Government, to go into every nook and corner of the American Republic in the interest, not necessarily, certainly not exclusively in the carrying of the mails, but in the business, at least, of the express company and the commercial traveler. What duty is there left? What is there left for the commercial traveler? Nothing. He is superseded. He can not travel over all the roads that these men travel. He can not visit all the country stores that these men can visit.

He is compelled to pay his expenses and his employer must pay his salary, and the Government puts itself up here in competition with every form of business except the lawyer and the preacher; and I think that in a very short time we will have rural free-delivery fellows with megaphones repeating the stump oratory of the politician at the crossroads where he stops to solicit a subscription for the Herald of Freedom or the Boomtown Delineator. [Laughter and applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, what have we provided for as this matter stands? Every fair facility for every daily newspaper in the United States. I am not surprised that the gentleman from Pennsylvania is a little anxious to increase the circulation of newspapers in his district and in his State, and I have been wondering whether my friend from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], who never omits anything, but always sees everything, has not observed the slight discrepancy there is apparently in the intelligence and the news-reading communities in which the gentleman from Pennsylvania lives as compared with those of other States of the Union. Now, I want him to have an opportunity——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman may be continued for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Ohio be extended for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I find from what I gather from this report that there are circulated in the State of Pennsylvania only 8,000,000 newspapers of every description through rural free delivery.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Eight millions.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Eight millions. While in the little State of Michigan, that does not seem to be complaining, there were nearly 16,000,000 distributed through rural free delivery.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. That may be true and easy of explanation.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It may be that Pennsylvania is anxious that it shall have a larger distribution.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Oh, no; they may have more free rural routes in Michigan.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It struck me at first as most remarkable. It is, I presume, from the fact that Michigan may have more routes than Pennsylvania and Pennsylvania more railroads.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That may be true.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. What about Ohio and Michigan? Compare how it is with Michigan and Ohio.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Oh, in Ohio we have over 18,000,000 papers sent to these routes. There is a railroad train running through every county of the State every day, and into many of them six, eight, and ten times a day, and they distribute the newspapers. So you will find when you come to look into it that the newspaper facilities in the United States are absolutely unparalleled. We gave over $100,000 as a subsidy that never had any origin that could be accounted for except for the promotion of some newspapers that wanted to get earlier in certain places of the country. Now, what is provided for here? Here is a rural route that has got 25 miles of travel on it and 100 subscribers to a newspaper published at the initial point. What is done about these papers? We do not require any more than that they shall wrap each paper singly. They may make a list of 100 names to which these papers shall go. They give a bundle to the carrier and give him the list, and he distributes them.

I was told to-day by a newspaper man who has had a good deal of experience that the word "distribute" in newspaper parlance has a special meaning; that it means a solicitor of subscriptions and the collection of unpaid bills, and all that pertains to an agency for a newspaper. We have not got the word "distribute" in this bill. The word that is the real word of the postal laws and regulations is here—they shall "deliver" the daily paper; they shall "deliver" it under regulations that the Post-Office Department shall devise. Far be it from me to lay an obstacle in the way of the dissemination of the daily newspapers throughout the whole country. I take knowledge of the fact, and I do not care whether it comes from Mississippi or New Orleans or from Ohio or Pennsylvania, there is something in it almost inevitably that should be read, and I believe in laying no obstacles in the way of the daily newspaper; nor would I lay it in the power of the United States Government to become a partisan representative of anybody's newspaper. [Loud applause.]

Nor would I employ 21,000 commercial travelers to get up all kinds of trouble between the merchants of the various towns out of which these rural free-delivery lines run. Now, it seems to me that when you have provided that these small articles may be carried upon the solicitation of the man who wants them that you have added that much to the ordinary meaning of the term "mail facilities," and when you have provided all else that is in this bill you have done all that is fair to ask the General Government to pay for, and I hope that the measure as it is reported from the committee will be adopted without these amendments. If I was to vote for one of these amendments, I should certainly vote for the one last offered by the gentleman from Michigan, although I hope that the salary may not be advanced beyond $800 a year. I believe we should try that one more year, and if it needs an increase in the future, well and good. It is not a very good time just now to increase salaries.

I do not believe that there is a Congressman on this floor who does not believe that his own salary is too low. I do not believe that there are ten Congressmen on this floor who would vote to increase their salaries, and there is no reason at this time why an extravagant increase should be made. I admit that $600 is too low. I am willing to go to $720 or $750, and if it is necessary to $800, and I would leave these men an opportunity to recover and receive what they are receiving under the present organization of the Department, and beyond that I believe we do not want to go.

Mr. KLUTTZ. Mr. Chairman, I have neither time nor inclination to reply in kind to the heated diatribes which have been launched against the fast mail item in the bill. Honorable gentlemen have vehemently, almost virulently, denounced this appropriation as a subsidy, and then, having arbitrarily and acrimoniously given it an opprobrious name, have lashed themselves into fury against it because of the very misname which they have applied to it. It is easy, Mr. Chairman, to first stigmatize and then denounce. I deny that this is a subsidy under any proper understanding of that much misused term. A subsidy, Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, is a gift or grant of money, or other thing of value, for the promotion, establishment, or maintenance of a private enterprise, which it is supposed will result in some incidental public benefit.

This, Mr. Chairman, is a case of special pay for special service, and there is no pay when that special service to the public is not rendered. If it were to enable these railroads to build, extend, maintain, or equip their lines, which they were otherwise unable to do, because of some supposed resultant benefit to the public, then gentlemen would be correct in their anathemas, it would be a subsidy, and I would be standing with them against it.

But here, the railroads are already built and in successful operation; they are already carrying the mails on the fastest possible passenger schedules; and this appropriation, as I shall endeavor to show most conclusively, is intended and used to secure an exclusive, special, expedited mail service to, and through a great section of this country on schedules absolutely controlled by the Post-Office Department, very much faster than would be possible on schedules arranged for passenger traffic, and with absolute forfeiture of pay on failure to make those schedules by as much as five minutes.

Is it accomplishing this purpose? Is it fulfilling this mission? Honorable gentlemen vehemently declare that it is not, and as against their acrimonious assertions, I shall content myself with offering direct evidence from the very highest authorities.

The first witness I shall call is the General Superintendent of the Railway Mail Service, who, in his last annual report, found on pages 23 and 24 of the Report of the Post-Office Department for 1903, says:

The fast mail service during the year has received that attention and interest at the hands of the Department which has specialized that feature of improvement in recent past years, and such additions have been made therein as it was thought would tend to further strengthen and improve the fast mail system so as to meet all requirements. As stated in my report of last year, the fast mail service can not properly be considered solely with reference to the benefits which may result to the patrons of the terminal offices by later dispatch and earlier arrival of the mails, because the entire intervening territory also partakes of the benefits of these fast trains, including localities served by lateral and connecting trains, and thus the benefits reach far beyond the immediate lines upon which the fast service may be operated.

It is gratifying to say that at this time there is hardly a railway system of any importance but operates directly or indirectly in the fast mail feature of service, either as a part of the fast mail system proper or by direct connection therewith.

One of the most important and far-reaching improvements in the fast mail system of the service was placed in operation November 2, 1902, between New York, N. Y., and New Orleans, La. The schedule was arranged to leave New York at 2.15 a. m. and arrive at New Orleans the following morning at 11.50 a. m., as follows: Leave New York at 2.15 a. m.; Washington, D. C., 8 a. m.; Lynchburg, Va., 12.17 p. m.; Charlotte, N. C., 5.25 p. m.; Atlanta, Ga., 11.15 p. m.; Montgomery, Ala., 8.22 a. m., reaching New Orleans at 11.50 a. m. (The arriving time at New Orleans now is 11.30 a. m. by recent schedule change.) The distance from New York to New Orleans is 1,369 miles.

At New Orleans this fast mail makes direct connection with trains via the New Orleans and Houston railway post-office, and thence by Houston and Eagle Pass, Houston and El Paso, El Paso and Tucson, Tucson and Los Angeles, and San Francisco and Los Angeles railway post-offices, covering a distance approximately of 3,850 miles from New York, N. Y., to San Francisco, Cal. By this new schedule New York and New Orleans are brought practically a day nearer to each other for purposes of correspondence. Previously the mails left New York at 4.30 a. m. and reached New Orleans the second night, too late for receipt by the public, and hence the mail was not available until the following morning, thus making two full days between the points in question. Under the new schedule all mail available for dispatch at 2.15 a. m. from New York is deliverable at noon next day in New Orleans.

The territory intermediate between Washington, D. C., and New Orleans, La., including lateral connections, is also correspondingly benefited, as close connections are made at intermediate junctions by railway post-offices operated on connecting lines, giving the offices and lines served and connected by the latter the advantage of the fast train from New York, with its accumulation of mail gathered en route. The fast train from New York, leaving at 2.15 a. m., also receives a connection from Boston, Mass., leaving the latter city at 5 p. m., and thus extends the benefits of the new fast train to Boston, in the East, and connections at that place, including New England intermediate between Boston, Mass., and New York, N. Y.

The following is an extract taken from a New Orleans daily paper of November 4, 1902:

"For the first time in the history of the country, letters posted in New York Sunday morning were delivered to people in New Orleans Monday, shortly after the noon hour, thus marking a new epoch in the history of railroading in the South. Letters posted in Atlanta Sunday night were brought in on the train and delivered at 1 o'clock, and for the first time Sunday New York papers were sold on the streets of New Orleans before 12 o'clock the next day after publication.

"Traveling men and tourists at different hotels were pleased to learn that this service had been inaugurated, as it saves a day in the delivery of their mail, and many of the commercial men who were not informed as to when the service was to be inaugurated were surprised to get checks from their houses yesterday that they did not expect until to-day."

The foregoing quotation is assumed to give a fair idea of the opinion held at that point concerning this effort of the Department to improve the mail facilities and provide means for a quick interchange of correspondence from New York to this important commercial section of the country.

Is not this a sufficient answer to the bold assertions of gentlemen?

The next evidence I shall offer is from the report of Second Assistant Postmaster-General Shallenberger, on page 142 of the Report of the Post-Office Department for 1903:

One very important improvement in the fast mail system was inaugurated November 2, 1902, between New York and New Orleans. A schedule was arranged by which mail leaving New York at 2.15 a. m. reaches New Orleans at 11.30 next day. Previous to that date mails leaving New York in the early morning did not arrive in New Orleans until the following night, too late for delivery to the public.

Not only has mail been quickened to New Orleans by this improvement in schedule, but corresponding advantages are derived from a close connection at New Orleans with Pacific coast trains.

Communities served by connecting lines at intermediate points enjoy the benefits of these improvements as well as terminal cities.

I shall next offer the statements made by Second Assistant Postmaster-General Shallenberger on the recent hearings before the Post-Office Committee.

It will be observed that he was repeatedly pressed to say that this service was of no benefit to people living on lateral or connecting lines, but that he emphatically negatived this; that he was repeatedly pressed to say that as good service could be gotten without this appropriation as with it, but expressly declined to so commit himself; that he was pressed to say that under similar conditions as good schedules were made in other parts of the country without special-facility appropriations, but that he failed to so admit; that he emphasized the great speed of the schedule and the stringency with which it was required to be made, showing that out of the $142,000 appropriated for the great Southern facility $48,800 had been deducted within the past year for failure to make that schedule by five minutes. But I prefer to let Mr. Shallenberger speak for himself in the following quotations from the hearings, which, for lack of time, I can only print in the RECORD:

AS TO BENEFITS.

The CHAIRMAN. The next item was for the appropriation for special facilities on trunk lines. What have you to say as to that item?

[Page 146.]

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. We have nothing to say other than what has been stated in recent years, that it is an item for which we make no recommendation. We simply use the appropriation that is placed in the bill by Congress to the best possible advantage, so as to secure some compensating service.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a provision in the current law which, I understand, has been inserted for a few years last past, to the effect that no part of this appropriation shall be expended unless the Postmaster-General shall deem such expenditure necessary in order to promote the interest of the postal service. Have you followed that provision and determined that it is necessary before you utilized that appropriation?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. We have in the sense that I have stated, that we do secure what is regarded as necessary service by the communities served by this particular line.

The CHAIRMAN. While you have made no recommendation of that item, General, have you found it to be of some service to the Government to have that item available?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I will say in answer to that that I have not regarded it as of service to the Government, but that it is of service to the communities there is no question. It is of special service to the communities reached; but when you ask me whether I consider it of service to the general postal administration, I will say that I have not considered it and have not recommended it for several years.

My predecessor, I believe, did not recommend it, the reason for that being that it seems to be a special privilege given to one section and several railway systems that is not given to railway systems in every section, and the general administration of the office would be more pleasant for me, and more impartial, if I could say to all systems and communities that there is no special appropriation out of which I could pay for expedited service.

Now, Congress having viewed this question from this standpoint, and having decided year by year that they would continue the appropriation, and they having charged me with getting compensating advantages, I have so arranged these trains and their schedules, approved by the Department, on the condition that unless they do perform this special service, which other roads are not required to do, we simply do not give the special-facility pay.

Mr. MOON (quoting the part of his question relative to the point argued). Are the people in the interior of the country supposed to be benefited by it?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I can see no reason why the benefit, if any, that attaches to the main lines should not follow the connections.

Mr. MOON (quoting from another question the part relative to benefit to the country not on the main line). Do we get any benefit from it that is worth what we are paying?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Of course the entire section of the country must be considered as getting the benefits. If we consider it as a through service from Washington to New Orleans, then, of course, Atlanta receives the mail by a very quick schedule, which is maintained within five minutes, and it necessarily receives for the entire section south and west of Atlanta those advantages.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the delivery of mail by the special trains No. 97 and No. 37 at Atlanta for points in northern Alabama, and southern Mississippi, and northern Louisiana enter into your consideration as to the benefit which is derived from this special facility?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. They receive what advantage there is in the service for the reason that we make it a continuous service and do not permit the train to leave Atlanta until it has received its special-facility connection, nor do we permit it to leave Montgomery until it has received its special-facility connection, so that that is a continuous special-facility connection all the way to New Orleans.

COULD THE SAME SERVICE BE OBTAINED WITHOUT THIS APPROPRIATION?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER (in answer to question from Mr. MOON). "I am not prepared to say what the comparative result would be if there were no special facilities, whether delays would be greater and more numerous or not. I simply say that the payment of this money is denied to the company unless the special speed is maintained."

Mr. GRIGGS. In your opinion, could New Orleans and Atlanta be reached from New York and Washington as quickly without the appropriation as with it?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I am not prepared to say that. I do not know what effect it would have—the withdrawing of this appropriation.

Mr. GRIGGS. You would not say that you could keep it up?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I would not say that I could or could not.

Mr. STAFFORD. Supposing this special-facility appropriation was discontinued, do you think that it would be possible for the Department to obtain any fast mail connections between Washington and New Orleans, either by these same points or by other railways running to New Orleans?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. We would secure the very best service that can be given to the traveling public, and especially to the passenger traveling public, and that is all that we can secure in any section of the country.

Mr. STAFFORD. And is the mail of sufficient quantity, and are there sufficient railroads to make it an inducement to make them put on the fast mail trains, as they are put on in other parts of the country?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I doubt that, but I am not positive of it.

Mr. MOON. The purpose of this subsidy is not to give those people any benefit [referring to the people living in the interior or on the roads in North Carolina, eastern and middle Tennessee, northern Georgia, and Alabama]?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. We can not say what the purpose of the appropriation is; we simply say that we use it in such a way as to procure a schedule that will be kept at the connecting points, and the result of which will necessarily be to give a better mail service for the entire community.

Mr. MOON. Providing the connections are made?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I will not make that proviso, because the connections will necessarily be made.

AS TO SPEED AND DEDUCTIONS OF PAY.

[Page 155.]

Mr. GRIGGS. And this train, if I make it correctly from the schedule as put down here by the general superintendent, makes a schedule between Washington and New Orleans of twenty-seven and one-half hours. That would be a little over 40 miles an hour for the continuous trip of 1,142 miles?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. GRIGGS. Is not that a fast schedule?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. We regard it as a very fast schedule.

Mr. GRIGGS. Is there any single-track railroad in the United States that makes it in ordinary passenger or mail service?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I doubt it. I am not prepared to say whether any single-track railroad makes that.

[Page 146.]

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Whenever they fail to keep the schedule time to five minutes we make a deduction, and the special-facility pay for the entire trip is withheld.

The CHAIRMAN. That practice has obtained for how long?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. For several years.

The CHAIRMAN. That is being pursued now?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes, sir; so that we find that the deductions in the last year were $48,846.

Mr. GRIGGS. So that left $122,347.18 paid out?

The CHAIRMAN. Have you that separated there as to the two lines, showing how much the deduction was for the Southern line and how much for the Kansas line?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The Kansas line does not appear in this statement. * * * Now, out of that I have withheld, by reason of these deductions, $48,846, so that $30,002 have actually been paid for the service rendered.

Mr. HEDGE. Those deductions are strictly made, are they? I mean when a train is late you are very strict about that?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes, sir; we watch it very closely.

It will be noted that this deduction of $48,846 was entirely from the appropriation for the Washington-New Orleans line, leaving only $30,002 as the actual cost of this great service to the Government for the year ending June 30, 1903.

There are twenty-one passenger trains each way every day from Washington to New York, making forty-two trains in all daily; while there are only three direct from Washington to New Orleans and two returning, making five trains daily in all. Failure to dispatch mail by any train to New York would mean only an hour's delay, while similar failure would mean a delay of a day or more to southern points. Does not this show the difference of supporting business for the railroads, the consequent absence of competition because of the smaller passenger business, and the necessity for this appropriation as to this southern line, which does not exist in other and more favored sections?

And now, Mr. Chairman, I have done. I think I have demonstrated that this appropriation is neither a subsidy nor a steal, but that it is what it purports to be—an appropriation for "necessary and special facilities." The attempt to crack the party whip over the heads of supporters of this measure is too puerile to require notice. Let me say to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] that many as good Democrats as he will not hesitate to answer against him on his threatened roll call. For one I shall welcome the opportunity to let my immediate constituents know that I have been true to their interests and the interests of the public, in spite of the carping of self-constituted censors.

While we are appropriating in this bill $500,000 for pneumatic-tube service, in order that transmission of mail may be expedited by a few minutes in a few great cities; while we are appropriating twenty millions for rural carriers and twenty millions for city carriers, that delivery of mail to the public may be expedited; $4,500 that people on the lake boats may have delivery by boat at Detroit; hundreds of thousands of dollars for fast ocean service; when, in fact, the spirit of this bill, and the demands of the country are for lib ral appropriations for mail expedition, I feel sure this House will not be guilty of the great injustice of cutting off this service, which has been, is, and will be worth so much to so many millions of the citizens of this country.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the pending amendments be closed in five minutes and that three minutes be allotted to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and I will reserve two minutes to myself.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Chairman, I trust the gentleman will not do that. You have had all the debate on that side all the evening.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Then, Mr. Chairman, I will say ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana moves that all debate upon pending amendments be closed in ten minutes.

Mr. OVERSTREET. That is on all amendments now pending.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman from Georgia be recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Chairman, we have a little interest in this business down South—not much, but we have tried to get an interest in the pot and are getting along a little better now than heretofore. We have a few routes down there. It has occurred to me that probably before we begin to increase salaries that we had better spread this service and give some of us some of it who have not got it to amount to anything You are endeavoring here this evening to raise the wages or salaries of carriers when there are hundreds and thousands of petitions from the South pending in this office in the Department here now asking that they be established, and they can not get them.

Mr. CROMER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. MADDOX. I have only five minutes.

Mr. CROMER. I just want to ask a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. MADDOX. It seems you have had all the debate of this subject over there all the evening among yourselves and you might hear from us a little while.

But I am not going to insist upon that proposition. I am willing to vote for the increase of salary that is put in this bill by the Post-Office Committee. Not only that, but I am willing to vote for a provision regulating the carriers in carrying bundles and parcels; in other words, to prevent the rural ca riers being an express company for the whole country, or agent for this, that, or the other firm. Now, gentlemen, you can see this is a great wrong in any town or city, for instance, where there are even two or three newspapers in that town and one of the newspapers can get these carriers to act as its particular agent. Then it has a monopoly of the whole business as against the other two.

As the gentleman from Ohio has well said, and the gentleman from New York, this service was not established for that purpose. That was not the intention of it, but the purpose was to distribute the mails throughout the country and not for these carriers to act as agents. But some gentleman has said, or it has been read from the desk, that somebody has been carrying on a regular peddling business, has been carrying it on with three wagons. Why, I never heard anything of that sort in my country. I think that is in some man's imagination, and the gentleman from New York, the leader on that side, attempted to answer somebody's question over here in reference to the Department by saying that the Department clerks have a fixed time to work. I want to say the rural carrier has the same thing. He has a schedule made out for him and he is expected to meet it, and he has a part of that time—at least many of them have in the country—just the same as a clerk has here. He has his hours all regulated; but I am absolutely opposed to these rural carriers becoming the agents of newspapers or any other business in this country, but I am willing to vote for the provision in this bill which regulates that service.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, just a word in addition to what has been said. My amendment does not permit the solicitation of orders by carriers, as the gentleman from Ohio seems to think, nor does it authorize them to peddle the patent medicine which he has advertised by naming in friendly interest. It permits them to distribute the newspapers and collect subscriptions precisely as they would collect the payment for the plowpoint mentioned by the gentleman from New York. My amendment is as much in the interest of the farmer as it is in the interest of the newspaper, because the bill as it now stands practically prohibits the daily distribution of the city newspaper in the outlying districts.

I wish to add one word as to the effect of my amendment. Gentlemen who favor striking out the whole provision may consistently vote for my amendment, because the motion to strike out the whole paragraph will come up immediately afterwards, and the adoption of my amendment will not prevent striking out the whole paragraph as amended. While, on the other hand, those who are not willing to go as far as striking out the whole paragraph, but are willing to give to the farmer and the newspaper the privilege suggested in my amendment, ought, by all means, to vote for it.

What is the amendment that the chairman of the committee says he proposes to offer if mine is voted down? It is practically the same thing, although not in the same language. Why, then, does he not support mine? Why not vote for it on this amendment and not take the time to offer it again and have it further discussed? The postal revenues of the Government will not be impaired by the adoption of this amendment. Every newspaper circulated through the country has thousands of advertisements, and every advertisement produces letter correspondence paying the highest class postage that we have and the most profitable to the Government. One little publication of an advertising character in my district showed me the figures indicating that for every dollar of postage paid on the outgoing publication they paid themselves over $50 in letter postage in answer to correspondents from advertisements contained in that publication.

I think this amendment which I have offered does not interfere with any other provision of the bill reported by the committee except to give to the newspaper this privilege and to the farmers the privilege of receiving the newspaper from the great cities daily. Substantially it puts newspapers upon the same footing as already provided in the bill for merchandise. I see no reason why the newspaper should be discriminated against.

The CHAIRMAN. The time fixed by the committee on the pending amendment having expired, the question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I ask to have the amendment reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, is it too late to offer an amendment? I will offer an amendment striking out the words "to collect subscriptions for and." I offer that as an amendment to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "collect subscriptions for and."

Mr. OVERSTREET. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Would a substitute for the pending amendment be now in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state——

Mr. OVERSTREET. I want to offer it as a substitute for the pending amendment, and I think it is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would be unable to state without seeing the amendment.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I offer the following substitute for the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana, chairman of the committee, offers a substitute for all the pending amendments, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 26, line 12, add after the word "prescribe" the following: "And provided, That rural carriers shall be permitted to do an express-package business, provided the packages and articles carried are not authorized by law to be accepted for mailing: And provided further, That rural carriers may make and perform contracts with publishers of newspapers and periodicals, and news agents, for the delivery of, but not the solicitation or collection for, newspapers and periodicals which are admitted to the mails at second-class rates of postage and upon which one rate of postage has been paid, if subject to postage, to subscribing patrons residing on their routes, and under such regulations as the Postmaster-General may prescribe, provided there is no interference thereby with the discharge of their official duties."

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, if, as I understand, there is pending an amendment to an amendment which I offered, is the substitute in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The first thing in order would be to vote upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, in order to perfect it. The Chair thinks the substitute offered by the gentleman from Indiana would then be in order.

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. BONYNGE, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania preceding the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the amendment "rural carriers will not be required to carry and deliver mail on legal holidays."

Mr. OVERSTREET. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that that is not germane to this part of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa is an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I suggest to the Chair that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa would be germane to the earlier lines of this paragraph, but not to the amendment which is now pending.

Mr. LACEY. It might be attached to the substitute. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw it for the present.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. I ask that the substitute be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the substitute offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] for the amendment pending offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED].

The Clerk again reported the amendment.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. I rise to say that, as I understand that substitute, the farmer's wife can not send for a bottle of laudanum or a porous plaster.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

The CHAIRMAN. All debate has been closed by the committee. The question is on agreeing to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. OVERSTREET) there were—ayes 78, noes 92.

So the substitute was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED].

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk again reported the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HEPBURN. Is it not now in order to consider the substitute offered some time ago by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. GARDNER]?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks not. The substitute offered by the gentleman from Michigan referred to the part of the bill affecting the salary.

Mr. GRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania by striking out the word "permitted" and inserting the word "required." That will make it then an impartial matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia offers an amendment to the pending amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the word "permitted" and insert the word "required," so that the amendment will read, "shall be required to collect subscriptions," etc.

[Laughter].

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. OLMSTED) there were—ayes 39, noes 133.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

By unanimous consent, the amendment was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were—ayes 81, noes 142.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were refused.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Is it now in order for me to offer the substitute which I did a while ago?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I offer it now for paragraph 23, on page 28 of the revised bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Michigan that amendments to the pending bill must be made to the first print. The Clerk will report the amendment with reference to the original draft of the bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. GROSVENOR having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolution of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4622. An act to amend section 2305 of the Revised Statutes of the United States;

S. 3292. An act amendatory of an act entitled "An act to provide for a permanent Census Office," approved March 6, 1902; and

S. R. 65. Joint resolution providing for an extension of time for completing the highway bridge and approaches across the Potomac River at Washington, D. C.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 12684. An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes;

H. R. 13480. An act to authorize the Southern Indiana Railway Company to construct a railroad bridge across the Wabash River in Vigo County, Ind.; and

H. R. 3256. An act directing the issue of a check in lieu of a lost check drawn by Thomas J. Hobbs, disbursing clerk, in favor of Crane & Co., of Dalton, Mass.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment, bill of the following title:

H. R. 8889. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Monongahela River, in the State of Pennsylvania, by the Eastern Railroad Company."

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 11449. An act to authorize the counties of Sherburne and Wright, Minn., to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River;

H. J. Res. 133. Joint resolution providing that the bulletins of the Bureau of American Ethnology be printed in octavo;

H. J. Res. 55. Joint resolution providing for the publication of the reports of the Board of Managers and Inspectors of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903;

H. J. Res. 113. Joint resolution for the printing of 5,000 copies, with accompanying maps and illustrations, of the report of the governor of New Mexico to the Secretary of the Interior for the year ending June 30, 1903, and the printing of 1,000 copies of the latest map of said Territory; and

H. R. 56. An act to authorize the State of South Dakota to select school and indemnity lands in the ceded portion of the Great Sioux Reservation, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 4640. An act to supplement and amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River, and to establish it as a post-road," approved February 28, 1903.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk again reported the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan, as follows:

Letter carriers of the rural service shall receive a salary of not to exceed $850, with fifteen days' vacation with pay, and shall not solicit or do business other than that required by the Government, except they may carry small parcels at the request of a patron living on the line.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I desire to modify the amendment as just read by inserting "$800" instead of "$850."

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman from Michigan allow me to call his attention——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to ask the gentleman from Michigan what part of the present bill he proposes to strike out?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I propose my amendment as a substitute for the entire section.

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not think the gentleman from Michigan wants to do that, because it would strike out the general appropriation.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the Post-Office Committee [Mr. OVERSTREET] kindly calls my attention to the fact that my amendment should begin at the bottom of page 25, with the word "on," and end with the word "carriers," in line 4, page 26.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment of the gentleman.

The Clerk read as follows:

Beginning on line 25, page 25, with the word "on," strike out all to and including the word "carriers," in line 4, page 26, and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"Letter carriers of the rural service shall receive a salary not to exceed $800, with fifteen days' vacation with pay, and shall not solicit or do any business other than that required by the Government, except that they may carry small parcels at the request of a patron living on the line."

Mr. PAYNE. I rise to a point of order. My point is that the committee having already acted on the lines which this amendment proposes to strike out, and having refused to strike them out, the motion of the gentleman from Michigan is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will inquire of the gentleman from Michigan whether the Clerk has now correctly reported the amendment.

Mr. PAYNE. I wish to withdraw my point of order. I find, by reference to Rule XVI, clause 7, this statement:

A motion to strike out and insert is indivisible; but a motion to strike out being lost shall neither preclude amendment nor a motion to strike out and insert.

I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair inquires of the gentleman from Michigan whether his amendment has been correctly reported?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I suggest that it be reported again.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Before the Clerk again reports the amendment, may I say that I wanted to include, in the portion stricken out all down to the word "prescribe," in line 12, page 26.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Strike out from the word "on," in line 25, page 25, down to and including line 12, page 26, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Letter carriers of the rural service shall receive a salary not to exceed $800 with fifteen days' vacation, with pay, and shall not solicit or do any business other than that required by the Government, except that they may carry small parcels at the request of a patron living on the line."

Mr. OVERSTREET. I move that all debate on the amendment be closed in ten minutes, of which I propose the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. GARDNER] may have five and I five in opposition.

Mr. MADDOX. Does that preclude amendments?

Mr. OVERSTREET. It does not.

Mr. MADDOX. I give notice that I want to strike out those words "not to exceed."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana moves to close all debate on this amendment in ten minutes.

Mr. STEENERSON. I want to move an amendment fixing a minimum, providing that the salary shall not be less than $720.

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment will be in order later. The present question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana, that debate on the pending amendment be closed in ten minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, this amendment provides three things: First, adequate pay, as we believe, for service rendered the Government. It is not possible to have it equitable everywhere. We simply aim to reach a fair average. I understand the amendment to mean it shall not exceed and shall not be less than $800 per annum on routes of standard length.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Strike out the words "not to exceed."

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. This whole business of soliciting has grown out of the fact that these men, whom I believe to be the hardest worked men in the public service to-day, have not received enough to meet their current needs with the closest economy. This proposition brings the compensation a little nearer to what men are receiving in towns and cities for doing a similar but not so taxing a service. The minimum of salary allowed to a mounted carrier, I think, is $900. A horse is allowed him in addition to that, giving him in the town, with good roads and short rides, as much or more than we would give to the rural carrier under this amendment.

Secondly, with regard to vacation, we allow all the rest of the carriers a vacation. We give none to these men.

Mr. COUSINS. Under the terms of the gentleman's amendment, how large could the small parcels referred to be?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I will reach that pretty soon.

With regard to the vacation, one of these carriers can not to-day attend the funeral of his own child without paying for a substitute out of his meager allowance. He can not go to a wedding or a picnic without hiring a substitute to take his place. He can not have a day off for any purpose unless he reduce his income by so much as it costs to get his place filled.

Mr. FINLEY. Does the gentleman from Michigan propose, in the event that his amendment carries, to increase the total appropriation?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Certainly; that would follow of necessity.

Mr. FINLEY. Does not the gentleman know that with the appropriation as fixed in the bill this amendment, if carried, would cut off all extension of rural free-delivery service in sections where there is none now?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Then we will have a special bill passed providing for the deficiency. These men ought to be paid. "The laborer is worthy of his hire," and no laborers are worthy of this proposed amount more than the men in the rural-delivery service of the Government. [Applause.]

I say these men are entitled to their vacations as much as city carriers—fifteen days with pay, if they want that length of time. It is simple justice to give it to them.

Third. With regard to parcels, this amendment provides that a carrier may at the solicitation, not of a publisher, not of a business house, not of a firm doing business for money, but of the patrons of the routes he travels, carry small parcels. A patron asks, "Will you do this errand for me?" "Will you take this to town?" "Will you," for example, "bring back this prescription from the drug store, or this plowpoint from the blacksmith shop?" These things come within the range of his capabilities as a public servant, and without injury to the service.

Mr. SIBLEY. There is nothing in the bill as it now stands which provides that he may not bring back the plow point for that patron upon the rural free-delivery route.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. But this is a substitute for the paragraph that puts it in. Do you see?

Mr. SIBLEY. No; I do not. I think the bill as reported by the committee provides that all service for patrons on the route may be given by the rural carrier when not interfering with the discharge of his duties.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. This is in perfect harmony with the committee.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Then why change it?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Because the other is mixed up with other paragraphs that seem to militate against the amendment. Now, another thing, gentlemen, and in conclusion, this amendment, if it shall prevail, will bring the rural-delivery carrier, who wears the uniform of the public service, up to the dignity of a Government employee, and will give him a comfortable support without being required to huckster about from house to house to eke out his living, supplementing the meager pay that the Government now gives.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, the proposed amendment involves, first, a heavy increase of the salaries of carriers beyond what the bill before the House provides; second, an additional increase by way of two weeks' vacation on pay, which would necessarily involve a third increase for the substitutes during vacation for the service which they would perform, and in the fourth place the amendment carries with it an entirely different arrangement relative to the privileges than that provided for in the bill, and which the committee a few moments ago favored by an overwhelming vote.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. OVERSTREET. No; I can not yield to any question.

Mr. Chairman, under the provisions carried in the bill we give $120 increase, which is $3,250,000 alone for increase. If you raise this salary to $800, as the gentleman suggests, it will require $6,000,000 alone for increase. Now, to add to that two weeks' vacation, you must add $33 to the carriers, which would amount to $891,000 more of increase; and this amendment provides, after all that has been paid for, to pay the substitute carriers for their work.

I say to you, gentlemen, that the only way which is proper under the present circumstances is to adhere to the provisions of this bill, so far as the regulation of the privileges is concerned, and if the committee feels that the $720 is not enough let your amendment move directly to that and not involve the question by a change of the system of privileges under the disguise that they are increases of salary. I will state, as my friend from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] so well said a while ago, that we had better have in mind the interest of the United States Treasury when we come to advancing these salaries. We provide three millions and a quarter for increase even at the rate of $720. This amendment would make at least $6,250,000, all told, on account of increase of salary alone.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I think you are mistaken in your figures.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I think not. I decline to yield.

I think, Mr. Chairman, this amendment should be voted down, because it involves four provisions. Let the gentleman offer his amendment directly to the salary, but do not play upon the sympathies of the committee to increase the salary in a manner in which you will bring in three additional propositions, which would not only be contrary to the provisions of the bill, but largely, very largely, increase the appropriation necessary for advancing the salaries alone. I call for a vote. [Loud cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The time fixed by the committee for debate on this amendment having expired, other amendments to perfect the text are now in order.

Mr. MUDD. I offer an amendment as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 26 strike out all after the word "hire," in line 7, to the end of the paragraph, and insert after the word "annum," in line 8, "with fifteen days' vacation with pay."

Mr. MUDD. Now, Mr. Chairman, one word.

Mr. OLMSTED. I offer an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. MUDD. I think I have the floor.

Mr. BURLESON. Regular order.

Mr. MUDD. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland will suspend until the committee is in order.

Mr. MUDD. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MUDD. Is it not a fact that the limit of debate was merely upon the pending amendment? In that event, Mr. Chairman, when I offer a substitute for the amendment I think I have five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Maryland that, as the Chair understands the reading of his amendment, it is not in the nature of a substitute, but perfects the text of the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan now pending.

Mr. MUDD. No, Mr. Chairman, it can not be offered as an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan, because it very materially conflicts with that.

The CHAIRMAN. To perfect the text of the bill to which the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan applies, not in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. MUDD. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan by adding after the words "small parcels" the words "and newspapers."

Mr. MUDD. My amendment comes before that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would hold that the perfection of the text is first in order, and the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland would be the first to be voted upon without debate.

Mr. MUDD. A parliamentary inquiry. Was not the limit of debate merely upon the pending amendment, not the paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that as the Chair understood the motion of the gentleman from Indiana it was that debate on the pending amendment and all amendments thereto should be closed.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Chairman, as my amendment is not an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan, but an amendment to the text, I think I have a right to be heard. I merely wish to say a word to explain what is meant by the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Maryland will proceed.

Mr. MUDD. My amendment will provide that the salary shall remain the same as provided in the bill, with an addition only of fifteen days' leave of absence with pay. It also provides that the duties of these carriers shall be confined exclusively to the work for which they are paid by the Government. It strikes out the last proviso of the section as now in the bill, and prevents the performance of services for private parties during the hours of their Government work.

It does not permit these people, if it is passed, to carry any parcels at all, thus preventing what, in my judgment, is liable to become a very serious interference with a satisfactory discharge of the duties for which they are appointed.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin will state it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will it be in order to introduce a substitute amendment at this time?

The CHAIRMAN. If it was an actual substitute, the Chair would say yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I offer the following as a substitute for the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin for the information of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after and including the word "on," in line 25 on page 25, down to and including the word "carriers," in line 4 on page 26, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"On and after the 1st day of July, 1904, the Postmaster-General is hereby directed to pay all regularly appointed rural free-delivery carriers, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the following salary: For the first year of service, at the rate of $700 per year; for the second year of service, at the rate of $720 per year; for the third and each subsequent year of service, at the rate of $850 per year, payable in each case pro rata at the end of each month; and each carrier shall be entitled to leave of absence not to exceed fifteen days in each year without loss of pay, during which time a substitute carrier shall be employed at the minimum rate of $600 per annum.

"That in determining the rate of pay for carriers the Postmaster-General shall consider the service rendered by them, respectively, both prior and subsequent to July 1, 1904.

"That all other provisions of law relating to the salaries of rural free-delivery carriers inconsistent with the provisions of this section relating thereto are hereby repealed."

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I ask that ten minutes' debate be allowed on that substitute, five minutes of that time to be allowed the gentleman from Wisconsin——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that may be considered in the nature of a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan. The Chair will put the question as to perfecting the text——

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Wisconsin may have five minutes' debate on his substitute and I may have five minutes in which to reply. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request made by the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Is not there pending an amendment and substitute already offered?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state that the substitute offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin was read for the information of the committee pending the other amendment. The first order is a vote upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. COWHERD. Then the substitute offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin is not before the House at all at this time?

The CHAIRMAN. Not until the question of perfecting the text to which the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan applies is decided.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I misunderstood the Chair. I thought the Chair said the substitute was in order, and I therefore withdraw the request.

Mr. MUDD. I ask to have my amendment again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland.

The amendment was again reported.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question will now recur on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Now, Mr. Chairman, I renew my request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that—— [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I call for the regular order.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will state it.

Mr. OLMSTED. Is not a vote upon my amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan in order before a substitute to that amendment is offered?

The CHAIRMAN. If the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania perfects the text that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan applies to or alters the amendment, it would be first in order.

Mr. OLMSTED. That is the purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was again reported.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The substitute offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin is now before the committee. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Wisconsin may proceed for five minutes and that he be allowed five minutes in which to reply. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. MADDOX. I shall object unless we are allowed five minutes on this side to discuss that proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken; and the amendment was disagreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. GARDNER].

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the paragraph and any amendments thereto which may be offered be closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana moves that all debate on the paragraph and amendments thereto be closed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I had sent an amendment to the Clerk's desk to have read and I was on my feet addressing the Chair in making a point of order against the motion of the gentleman from Indiana to close debate. I was standing on my feet in addressing the Chair as vociferously as it was in my power. [Cries of "Regular order!" "Regular order!"] I ask now that my amendment be read to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that all amendments are in order. The gentleman from Indiana in charge of the bill, who is entitled to recognition at all stages, simply moved to close all debate. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] offers the following amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after word "substations," line 25, page 25, to and including the word "carriers," in line 4, page 26, and insert:

"On and after July 1, 1904, letter carriers of the rural free-delivery service who carry upon routes 20 miles or more in length, measuring from the post-office from which the carriers start, shall receive an annual salary of $750; and those who carry upon routes less than 20 miles in length shall receive $35 per annum for each mile contained in their respective routes, but no carrier shall receive less than $300 per annum, and no other or further allowance or salary shall be paid to said carriers."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Indiana, as he has stated already, that all amendments should relate to the bill which is being perfected.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. This is directed to that part of the bill now under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana has used the pages of the new bill instead of the old one.

Mr. LOUD. I offer the following as a substitute:

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment as a substitute, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 21 and 22, page 25, strike out the words "twenty million one hundred and eighty" and insert in lieu thereof the words "twenty-one million nine hundred and forty;" and in lines 2 and 3, on page 26, strike out the words "seven hundred and twenty dollars per annum" and insert in lieu thereof the words "eight hundred dollars per annum, said sum being the salary for a rural carrier whose route is not less than 20 miles in length, and to those rural carriers whose routes are severally less than 20 miles in length shall be paid each such a portion of $800 per annum as the length of the route carried is of 20 miles."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LOUD] will stand as an independent amendment, it not being in the nature of a substitute. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER].

The amendment was considered and rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LOUD].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that each member of the committee may appear in the RECORD as offering an amendment to increase the salary of the rural free-delivery carriers, and that it was voted down. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was considered; and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LACEY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment that I offered a short time ago.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert the following provise: "Provided, That rural carriers shall not be required to carry or deliver mail on legal holidays."

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BADGER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Beginning at the word "seven," in line 2 on page 26, strike out all following to and including line 12 on page 26 and insert the following: "$800 per annum."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with amendments to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BOUTELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 13521, the post-office appropriation bill, and had directed him to report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to its final passage.

The question was taken; and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded upon any amendment? If not, the amendments will be voted upon in gross. The question is upon agreeing to the amendments.

The question was taken; and the amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The question was taken; and the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the pending bill to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads with instructions which I will send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read, and on that motion I move the previous question.

The Clerk read as follows:

On pages 18 and 19 strike out the following sections:

"For necessary and special facilities on trunk lines from Washington to Atlanta and New Orleans, $142,728.75: Provided, That no part of the appropriation made by this paragraph shall be expended unless the Postmaster General shall deem such expenditure necessary in order to promote the interest of the postal service.

"For continuing necessary and special facilities on trunk lines from Kansas City, Mo., to Newton, Kans., $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended unless the Postmaster-General shall deem such expenditure necessary in order to promote the interest of the postal service."

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken; and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. As many as are in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise and remain standing until counted. [After counting.] Seventy-six gentlemen have arisen. Unless the other side is demanded, the Chair thinks a sufficient number has arisen.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I demand the other side.

The SPEAKER. Those opposed will rise and remain standing until counted. [After counting.] One hundred and seventy-nine gentlemen have arisen, and the yeas and nays are ordered.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What is the question before the House?

The SPEAKER. It is to recommit the bill with instructions.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What instructions?

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The Clerk again reported the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Supposing this motion passes, does it open the whole bill to amendment?

The SPEAKER. The effect of the motion, if it passes, is to recommit the bill to the committee. It would then be the duty of the committee to at once report the bill back, omitting the part that is directed to be stricken out.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. And it will not affect any of the rest of the bill?

The SPEAKER. No.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 114, nays 123, answered "present" 15, not voting 129, as follows:

Mr. MCCLEARY of Minnesota with Mr. GOLDFOGLE.
Mr. PORTER with Mr. POU.
Mr. JONES of Washington with Mr. BANKHEAD.
Mr. BURKETT with Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama.
Mr. MAHONEY with Mr. RUSSELL.

Mr. RUSSELL (having voted "aye"). Mr. Speaker, I wish to inquire whether the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. MAHONEY, is recorded as voting?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk informs the Chair that he is not recorded.

Mr. RUSSELL. I am paired with that gentleman, and I therefore desire to withdraw my vote and be recorded "present."

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH (having voted "aye"). Mr. Speaker, I desire to inquire whether the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. BOWIE, is recorded?

The SPEAKER. He is not.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Then I withdraw my vote, and desire to be recorded "present."

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS (having voted "no"). Mr. Speaker, as announced from the desk, I am paired with the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TATE]. But my understanding with members of the Georgia delegation is that if that gentleman were present he would vote "no." With that understanding, I have voted "no."

Mr. LILLEY (having voted "aye"). Mr. Speaker, as I now understand, I am paired with the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. In view of that fact, I desire to withdraw my vote and be recorded "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

The question being then taken on the passage of the bill, it was passed.

On motion of Mr. OVERSTREET, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general leave be granted to print remarks on this bill for five legislative days.

Mr. FINLEY. I object.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Appropriations, to whom were referred the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12446) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, and for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, have directed me to report the same back and ask unanimous consent that the House nonconcur in gross in the amendments of the Senate, and ask for a conference.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Speaker, when this request was made a few days ago I made a point of order which was tantamount to an objection. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTAUER] then expressed a willingness, which I assume he adheres to now, that the conferees would report a disagreement unless the Senate would recede. With that understanding, I shall make no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. LITTAUER, Mr. MARSH, and Mr. TAYLOR.

SENATE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills and joint resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 4622. An act to amend section 2305 of the Revised Statutes of the United States—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 3292. An act amendatory of an act entitled "An act to provide for a permanent Census Office," approved March 6, 1902—to the Committee on Claims.

S. R. 65. Joint resolution providing for an extension of time for completing the highway bridge and approaches across the Potomac River at Washington, D. C.—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled joint resolution of the following title:

S. R. 55. Joint resolution to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to print an extra edition of the map of the United States for 1904, and making the appropriation for maps made in the acts of April 17, 1900, and of March 3, 1901, available for that purpose.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS ON POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. KLUTTZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may be allowed to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and that all gentlemen who have spoken on the bill have leave for five days.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that he be allowed to extend his remarks in the RECORD, and that all gentlemen who have spoken upon this bill have the same privilege for five legislative days.

Mr. MANN. Upon the bill?

The SPEAKER. Upon the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. With the understanding that the remarks are extended along the line of argument pursued on the floor, I have no objection to the request.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman modify his request as suggested?

Mr. KLUTTZ. I will as to the general request, but I ask individual leave to extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlemen from North Carolina that he be permitted to extend his remarks in the RECORD?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEENERSON. I ask for the same privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that he have the same privilege. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KLUTTZ. Now I modify the other request I made, at the suggestion of the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I do not care to couple it with the demand for unanimous consent, but merely say that with the understanding—an understanding that gentlemen understand—that the leave to extend remarks does not mean leave to insert new speeches in the RECORD upon totally different subjects, I will not object; but the first time that leave is abused in that way, I shall thereafter object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FINLEY. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina objects.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks upon the post-office appropriation bill. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, has not that permission been granted already?

The SPEAKER. No.

Mr. MADDOX. I thought it had, with the understanding stated by the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. No; I withdrew my objection, but somebody else objected.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a similar request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana makes a similar request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COUSINS. Mr. Speaker, I also make a similar request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa makes a similar request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPALDING. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a similar request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Dakota makes a similar request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I make a similar request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan makes a similar request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

STREET EXTENSION IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

By unanimous consent, on motion of Mr. BABCOCK, the Committee on the District of Columbia was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 1636) for the opening of R street NE. to Twenty-eighth street, and Twenty-eighth street NE. from R street to M street, and the same was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. HOLLIDAY, indefinitely, on account of important business.

And then, on motion of Mr. OVERSTREET (at 5 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, recommending an appropriation for rent of temporary quarters for post-office at Los Angeles, Cal.—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of C. W. Telfair, administrator of estate of James R. Telfair, against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of B. E. Gray, administrator of estate of Mrs. S. M. Davidson, against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Anna M. Willey, administratrix of estate of Alfred Turner, against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report submitted by Mr. BARD, from the Committee on Public Lands, on the 16th instant.

Mr. KEAN. I do not think it is worth while to read the report further. I am perfectly satisfied with the bill. The remainder of the report can be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be printed in the RECORD.

The report is as follows:

The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4372) for the relief of H. Gibbes Morgan and other co-owners of Cat Island, in the Gulf of Mexico, submit the following report thereon:

The bill is identical with bill S. 6401, as amended and reported by this committee in the second session of the Fifty-seventh Congress, and is intended to confirm to the legal representatives of Juan de Quevas a part of Cat Island, in the State of Mississippi, situate on the southerly side of the westerly part of the Mississippi Sound.

It appears from the report No. 2 (dated January 15, 1829), to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, by the register and the receiver at Jackson Court House, acting as land commissioners under authority of the act of May, 1822 (ch. 128), entitled "An act supplemental to the several acts for adjusting the claims and titles to lands and establishing land offices in the district east of the island of New Orleans," that the claim of Juan de Quevas was founded on an original Spanish permit to Nicholas Christian, granted on August 1, 1781, by Manuel de Lousas, the commandant at Mobile, for the whole of the lands of Cat Island, the quantity being unknown, and that the inhabitation and cultivation thereof extended from 1768 to 1828. This report of the Commissioner's is found in Gales & Seaton's edition of the American State Papers, Volume V, page 321, dated January 15, 1829.

The report also contains the following statement:

"Claim No. 1, designated as Cat Island, contain(s) $2,078\frac{1}{100}$ acres, most of which are unfit for cultivation. The permit on which this claim is founded calls for the whole island. From the long and continued inhabitation and cultivation it would seem that the claimant ought to be entitled to the whole island, if the laws, usages, and customs of the Spanish Government would warrant such an opinion."

This claim, with others of the same character, was approved by the Commissioners by the first section of the act of Congress approved May 28, 1830 (vol. 4, Stat. L., 408), as follows:

"That all the claims to lands reported by the register and receiver of the land office for the district of Jackson Court House, in the State of Mississippi, under the provisions of the act of Congress approved on the 24th day of May, 1828, entitled 'An act supplementary to the several acts providing for the adjustment of land claims in the State of Mississippi,' as founded on any order of survey, requette, permission to settle, or other written evidence of claim derived from the Spanish authorities, which ought, in the opinion of the said register and receiver, to be confirmed, and which, by the said reports appear to be derived from the Spanish Government prior to the 20th of December, 1803, and the land claimed to have been cultivated and inhabited on or before that day, shall be confirmed in the same manner as if the title had been completed: Provided, That in all such claims, where the plat and certificate of survey, made prior to the 15th day of April, 1813, under the authority of the Spanish Government, in pursuance of such claim, has not been filed with the said register and receiver, such claim shall not be confirmed to any one person for more than 1,280 acres; and that for all the other claims comprised in the reports as aforesaid, and which ought, in the opinion of the register and receiver, to be confirmed, the claimant to such land shall be entitled to a grant therefor, as a donation, not to exceed 1,280 acres to any one person, etc."

The act was construed by the Land Department to limit the claim of Cuevas to 1,280 acres only, and was surveyed to embrace that quantity on the western part of the island. Such survey was approved August 11, 1832, by the surveyor-general, and patent was issued according to such survey on February 23, 1882.

Before the survey was confirmed John Quavre, of Hancock County, Miss., and Mary Quavre, his wife, by deed dated November 22, 1830, granted, bargained, and sold to the United States for the consideration of $75 a parcel of land, particularly described by metes and bounds on the west point of Cat Island, and containing 1 acre, for light-house purposes. A light-house was soon afterwards erected on this site by the Government.

On August 30, 1847, an Executive order was issued, reserving for military purposes, with other lands, "all that part of Cat Island now owned by the Government." (See letter of Secretary of the Treasury, September 1, 1847, No. 19458; also Commissioner's instructions to register and receiver at Augusta, September 8, 1847, and letters to register and receiver, Augusta, Miss., June 11, 1852.)

On October 25, 1895, the President approved the recommendation of the Secretary of War that "all that portion of Cat Island, Mississippi, which was reserved by Executive order of August 30, 1847, except that portion which lies between a north and south line 1,000 feet to the east of the easternmost corner of Cat Island light-house and the westerly part of the island," be placed under the control of the Secretary of the Interior for disposition under the act of July 5, 1884, "these lands having become useless for military purposes, but the excepted portions are required by the Treasury Department for light-house purposes."

And, on November 13, 1895, orders of the War Department, declaring "that said lands were turned over to the Secretary of the Interior for disposition as provided by law, the same being no longer required for military purposes," were published for the information and notice of all concerned.

The excepted tract of land described in the Executive order of October 25, 1895, included the parcel of 1 acre conveyed by Cuevas and his wife to the United States, and other adjoining lands on either side of the 1-acre tract which had been patented to Cuevas. In the letter of January 8, 1896, referred to as letter "E," from the Commissioner of the General Land Office to the Secretary of the Interior, he states:

"From formal inquiry at the office of the Light-House Board I am advised that the land needed for the reservation on Cat Island is situated on the western end of the island along the limits of the private grant of 1,280 acres confirmed to Juan Cuevas under act of Congress approved May 28, 1830 (4 Stats., 408), and that the site for the light-house thereon was purchased from the owner of the private grant in 1830 by the Government. Therefore if any additional land adjacent to this purchase is needed by the Light-House Board it would seem that it could only be acquired by purchase from the owner thereof."

On the report of the engineer and inspector of the eighth light-house district, dated May 12, 1900, it is stated that—

"The island is gradually washing out at the west until at an average tide the reservation is covered by 1½ feet of water. The light-house is built on screw piles now standing in the water, and as the land adjacent to it is owned by private parties it would, if desired, have to be purchased from them, and there is no necessity for any additional reservation, the present site in the water being considered sufficient."

Notwithstanding such statement, your committee believe that there will be no injustice in requiring that the claimants shall convey to the United States the additional land which was deemed necessary for the purposes of a light-house and attempted to be reserved by the Executive order of October 25, 1895. It is evident from the description of the site, which is now covered, at an average tide, by 1½ feet of water, that the adjoining lands can be of little value.

It appears that no action has been taken by the Department of the Interior under the act of July 5, 1884, to dispose of the lands turned over to it by the War Department, and therefore Congress is free to deal with the matter as if the claim had been presented for the first time.

The Commissioner of the General Land Office, in his letter of December 23, 1902, to the Secretary of the Interior, in relation to a bill referred to this committee in the Fifty-seventh Congress, second session (S. 6491), "for the relief of H. Gibbes Morgan and other coowners of Cat Island, in the Gulf of Mexico," reports, after stating the history of the title, as follows:

"It appears from letters on file in this Office that the claimant, Cuevas, sold the entire island under the conscientious belief that he was the owner of the same, and upon examination of the report of the register and receiver on the private claim of Cuevas, together with the act of Congress by which the claim was confirmed, it would seem that the entire island was confirmed to Cuevas.

"I can not find that the matter has ever been fully discussed or considered by this Office or by the Department, though the lands having been reserved for military purposes, as above stated, the island has been the subject of several communications from this Office to the Department, in all of which it seems to have been taken for granted, as a matter of course, that only 1,280 acres of the land were granted by the confirmatory act.

* * * * * * * *

"Reference to the report shows that the claim of Juan de Cuevas embraced Cat Island; that the area was not known; that the date of the claim was 1781; that the inhabitation was from 1768 to 1828; that there was no survey, and that it was founded on written evidence of title (Spanish permit), and was recommended for confirmation by the register and receiver. The confirmatory act first declares that claims such as this be confirmed in same manner as if title had been complete. The act then proceeds to limit the confirmation of certain claims to 1,280 acres, but there is no indication that the limitation was intended for the claim of Cuevas, and were the matter now for the first time presented for the consideration of this Office I would be inclined to hold that the whole of the island was confirmed to him, but this view of the case does not seem to have been heretofore adopted, since patent was issued by the Government to embrace only a part of the island, and the amount of the land conveyed by it was limited in express words to 1,280 acres. Not only this, but the Government has since issuance of the patent continuously asserted title to the remainder of the island by holding it in reservation until it was turned over to this Department by Executive order of 1895, to be disposed of under act of July 5, 1884 (23 Stat L., 103).

"Inasmuch as the proposed legislation is intended to confirm the title in Cat Island to Cuevas and his assignees or transferees, I see no objection to so doing, as it appears to have been the intention to confirm said claim by the act of May 28, 1830."

Your committee concur in the statement and opinion of the Commissioner of the General Land Office above quoted. The original title, based upon the Spanish permit, was for the whole of Cat Island. The report of the register and receiver, acting as commissioners, expressly stated that the permit, on which this claim is founded, calls for the whole island and contains 2,078$\frac{1}{100}$ acres; and that in view of the long and continued inhabitation and cultivation it would seem that the claimant ought to be entitled to the whole island. From the circumstance that the island is mostly unfit for cultivation, and that the lands have never been required for settlement, there is no considerable value involved in the question whether the United States should recognize the right of the claimants to the remainder of the island.

Therefore your committee recommend that the bill be amended as follows:

On page 2 strike out the word "is," at the beginning of line 5, and all that follows down to and including the word "lies," in line 7, and insert in lieu thereof the following, to wit: "is upon condition that the legal representatives of said Juan Cuevas claiming the same through or under him shall convey to the United States, by good and sufficient deed, all that portion of Cat Island described as an excepted part thereof in Executive order of October 25, 1895, and lying."

And your committee recommend that the bill do pass with amendment as aforesaid.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there object to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, on page 2, line 8, after the words "Cat Island," to strike out:

is subject to the reservation made under Executive order of October 25, 1895, reserving that portion of said Cat Island which lies.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

is upon condition that the legal representatives of said Juan Cuevas claiming the same through or under him shall convey to the United States, by good and sufficient deed, all that portion of Cat Island described as an excepted part thereof in Executive order of October 25, 1895, and lying.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of Juan Cuevas, otherwise called Juan de Cuevas, John Quaive, or Quaivie, under the permit from the Spanish commandant at Mobile, dated August 1, 1781, to Cat Island, in the Gulf of Mexico, in its entirety, except as to the lands hereinafter described, be, and the same is hereby, confirmed in him and his legal representatives claiming the same through and under him, the said Cuevas, and that a patent issue accordingly in the name of said original claimant: Provided, however, That nothing in this act contained shall in any manner impair the right or title of the Government in or to that portion of said Cat Island to which the Government obtained title by deed from John and Mary Cuevas November 22, 1830, and on which Cat Island light-house is now situated: and this confirmation of said claim or title of said Cuevas or his legal representatives to said Cat Island is upon condition that the legal representatives of said Juan Cuevas claiming the same through or under him shall convey to the United States, by good and sufficient deed, all that portion of Cat Island described as an excepted part thereof in Executive order of October 25, 1895, and lying between a north and south line 1,000 feet to the east of the easternmost corner of Cat Island light-house and the western part of the island.

SEC. 2. That this act take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 13521) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12446) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. PERKINS. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the request of the House of Representatives for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. PERKINS, Mr. WARREN, and Mr. DANIEL were appointed.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12833) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill on page 41, line 12.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Washington Aqueduct," on page 41, after line 16, to insert:

For preliminary surveys for additional conduit from Great Falls, $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Rock Creek Park," on page 42, line 4, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twelve" and insert "fifteen;" and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert:

And the board of control is hereby authorized to accept dedications of land for the purpose of adding to said park, without expense to the United States or the District of Columbia, and such land, when accepted, shall become a part of said park and be under the jurisdiction of the said board of control.

So as to make the clause read:

For care and improvement of Rock Creek Park, to be expended under the direction of the board of control of said park, $15,000; and the board of control is hereby authorized to accept dedications of land for the purpose of adding to said park, without expense to the United States or the District of Columbia, and such land, when accepted, shall become a part of said park and be under the jurisdiction of the said board of control.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Public schools," on page 43, line 25, after the word "teachers," to insert "director of cooking, director of sewing;" and on page 44, line 2, before the word "in," to strike out "thirty-two" and insert "thirty-four;" so as to make the clause read:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 59, to insert:

For house and furniture for a chemical engine company, to be located on land to be donated to the District, near Benning, D. C., including cost of connecting said house with fire-alarm headquarters, $23,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 59, after line 5, to insert:

For construction, under the direction of the Commissioners of the District, of a fire boat, $53,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 59, after line 10, to insert:

For one-third size steam fire engine, $5,200.

Mr. McCOMAS. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa whether we have anywhere in the bill made provision for any greater water pressure for putting out fires? There was some effort made to provide for a greater pressure.

Mr. ALLISON. I will state to the Senator that the committee considered that question very fully, and decided that at this session it would not be wise to enter upon what is known as the "high-pressure system," it requiring for its completion $750,000. In this bill the committee added, as the Senator will see from the amendments, a considerable addition to fire protection, especially the provision just disposed of for constructing a fire boat.

Mr. McCOMAS. That is a very necessary provision.

Mr. President, I know the bill is large and the revenue is insufficient to meet all the estimates, but the recent calamity in my own State, in Baltimore, seems to be very persuasive that before long there should be an effort in this city to obtain high water pressure for fire. Because of the wide streets and avenues, the terrible calamity which came upon Baltimore is less li ely to occur here; but the same thing may occur at any time, and the long delay of the introduction of a system of high water pressure is a dangerous delay while it lasts.

I appreciate the trouble so far as the revenues are concerned; but there are few things more urgent, after the recent experience only 40 miles away, than that we should have in this city a proper pressure to resist fire by the application of water. The fire department of this city is surely not large in proportion to the area of the city, and not quite large enough in proportion to the population.

I hope that the revenues will permit next year the very wise and fully informed Senator from Iowa and his committee to take up the important subject of high water pressure, and that there will not then be any objection to it.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I do not like to meddle with a matter about which I know but little; but I came to the Senate one morning within the past six weeks and was informed by a very high official of the Government that if a fire were to break out that day in the part of the city, or in this Capitol, the condition of things was such that there would be no adequate water supply to put it out. I have no doubt that the person who made that statement to me was well informed. Whether the high pressure should be on the aqueduct or on the committee I do not undertake to say, but I will add, in justice to the committee, that I presume no pressure on them would be needed.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, the desire for high water pressure service was not urged on the committee largely until after the recent fire in Baltimore. In looking that matter up, we found that there had been no specific estimate made for this high-pressure system, and it did not seem to be in position for the committee to act on the question at this moment. If, however, it had been in such position, with the other necessary things provided for in this bill, we decided that it was inopportune to begin that work at this time.

I do not know at what particular date the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] had the interview to which he refers. It may have been some very cold morning when there was some difficulty in connection with the water department. I am satisfied that we have a very good supply of water at this time. The difficulty, perhaps, is with the size of the pipes with which the water is distributed. An improvement in that respect must undoubtedly be very soon undertaken; but I think it is not so pressing as to be required in this bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 59, after line 20, to insert:

For one 65-foot aerial hook-and-ladder truck, $3,700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 59, line 24, to increase the total appropriation for increase in the fire department from $38,300 to $133,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Health department," on page 60, line 4, to increase the number of sanitary and food inspectors at $1,200 each from "six" to "thirteen."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

Mr. STEWART. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment on page 60, line 4, in reference to the health department of this District, was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Nevada desires to call attention to the amendment on page 60, in line 4, to which he refers. The Senator was engaged for a moment and did not observe that the amendment was being acted upon. I hope he may have the opportunity to make what remarks he wishes to make on the subject, and that the amendment may be considered as still open.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not understand to which amendment the Senator from Nevada referred.

Mr. LODGE. The amendment is on page 60, line 4, changing the sanitary food inspectors from six to thirteen. I understand the Senator from Nevada desires to have the vote by which the amendment was adopted reconsidered.

Mr. ALLISON. That may be done by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be regarded as open.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; that it be regarded as still open.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, the health department is more important to the health and happiness of the people of this District than any other department under the District government. I am sorry to say it, but I feel bound to give my opinion thereon, that the health department is the worst managed of any department that I have ever heard of.

With regard to milk, meats, etc., it is——

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator allow me to ask him to what particular part of this provision he is addressing his remarks?

Mr. STEWART. I am addressing myself, in the first instance, to this whole provision for the health department, and to the subject generally. I do not think it is well provided for. I do not know that I can offer an amendment that will provide for it, but the department ought to be entirely reorganized.

The Appropriations Committee has reported to increase the number of inspectors by seven over the number provided for in the bill as it came from the House and under the present organization I think there were too many provided for in the House bill.

The health officer is paid $3,500 a year. Such an amount of money ought to be sufficient to get a competent person to attend to the duties of the office, but I am sorry to say we have no such person there. He does not attend to his legitimate duties, but devotes his time to drafting bills for Congress to reject.

Mr. SPOONER. Who is the health officer?

Mr. STEWART. Mr. Woodward.

So far as the inspection of milk and meat is concerned, I have been led to investigate that matter personally. In regard to the inspection of meat, I offered a resolution of inquiry some time ago. As the resolution is short, as are the responses to it, I should like to have the document read, so that the Senate may see what sort of a man the health officer is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

OFFICE COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, March 14, 1904.

SIR: The Commissioners of the District of Columbia have the honor to transmit herewith the accompanying communication from the health officer of the District of Columbia and its inclosures as their response to the following resolution in the Senate:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
March 3, 1904.

Resolved, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia report to the Senate what inspection is made of meat, poultry, game, fish, and oysters imported into the District of Columbia in cold-storage or refrigerator cars, giving details of when, where, and the manner of such inspection.

Attest:

CHARLES G. BENNETT, Secretary.

Very respectfully,

HENRY B. F. MACFARLAND,
President of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Hon. WILLIAM P. FRYE,
President pro tempore United States Senate.

HEALTH DEPARTMENT, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, March 10, 1904.

GENTLEMEN: In response to the accompanying resolution of the United States Senate, passed on March 3, 1904, I have the honor to submit the inclosed copies of reports made by the food inspectors and by the inspector of marine products relative to the inspection of meat, poultry, game, fish, and oysters brought into the District of Columbia in cold-storage or refrigerator cars.

Respectfully,

WM. C. WOODWARD, M. D.,
Health Officer.

The COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, D. C.

HEALTH DEPARTMENT, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, March 5, 1904.

DEAR SIR: Referring to the resolution passed by the Senate on the 3d instant, calling for information concerning "what inspection is made of meat, poultry, game, fish, and oysters imported into the District of Columbia in cold-storage or refrigerator cars," we have the honor to report as follows concerning the inspection of such articles:

Meats shipped to this city in refrigerator or cold-storage cars are unloaded at a very early hour in the morning and are taken directly to the wholesale houses to which they are consigned. At an early hour in the morning we visit these establishments and inspect, by smelling and handling each and every carcass, the meat just arrived, and oftentimes while it is being unloaded from the wagons, in order that it may be thoroughly examined before it is distributed to the retail dealers. It is deemed more practicable to inspect the meats in the manner stated above in view of the way in which the meats are packed in the cars, and also in view of the fact that no meats are sold until they have been received and recorded at the wholesale houses.

With reference to the inspection of poultry, game, fish, and oysters we would state that such articles are brought to this city in refrigerator cars, packed in boxes or barrels, rendering it quite impracticable to give them a thorough inspection in the cars. These goods are consigned to wholesale and commission houses, where they are unpacked and placed in their cold-storage rooms. We visit these wholesale and commission houses early every day and examine these goods, by handling and closely scrutinizing the same, before they are offered for sale. No inspections are made in the cars themselves.

Besides the above we might add that we visit all the cold-storage and refrigerator rooms of the Center Market every day in order to keep in touch with any of the above-mentioned goods that may have been stored there.

The articles of food mentioned above, together with all other articles of food, are daily examined in the various markets and market stores of the city.

Respectfully,

J. R. MOTHERSHEAD,
THOMAS CAVANAUGH,
W. H. H. HOOVER,
Food Inspectors.

Dr. WILLIAM C. WOODWARD,
Health Officer.

HEALTH DEPARTMENT, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, March 7, 1904.

SIR: In reply to the Senate resolution of March 3, 1904, inquiring what inspection is made of meat, poultry, game, fish, and oysters in the District of Columbia in cold-storage or refrigerator cars, I have the honor to present the following special report relative to the inspection of fish, oysters, etc., which arrive at the different wharves in this city:

The condition of these products is determined by their general appearance and odor, and they are passed or condemned, as the case requires. None of said products are inspected by me while in cold-storage or in refrigerator cars. At times, however, some frozen fish, shipped from the North, reach the wharves, where they are duly inspected as described before. Some of these fish are sold in a frozen state. I make no inspections of meat, poultry, and game.

Respectfully submitted.

GWYNN HARRIS,
Inspector of Marine Products.

WILLIAM C. WOODWARD, M. D.,
Health Officer.

Mr. STEWART. The very reading of that communication shows that there is no investigation about these things which amounts to anything. We do not know whether these examiners are competent or not. They are appointed by the Commissioners on the recommendation of the health officer.

There is very much danger of ptomaine poisoning in the use of these products——

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question, or to ask the chairman of the committee a question?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Mr. ALDRICH. As to the sanitary and food inspectors provided for in this paragraph now under consideration——

Mr. STEWART. I will come to that in a moment.

Mr. ALDRICH. I was going to ask whether there is any law which regulates their duties?

Mr. STEWART. The health officer insists upon being a law unto himself.

Mr. ALDRICH. Is there no provision of law regulating the matter?

Mr. STEWART. I am coming to that point. I want to deal with the other matter first.

Most of the beef consumed in this country is killed in Chicago—thousands of head a day. The price of beef on the hoof never was as low as now, and the price of meat never so high. This cold-storage meat is very dangerous. Last July I bought a very fine-looking quarter of beef from the Armour Company, from cold storage. I took it up to my place at Ashburn, had it cooked and made into sandwiches to give some people lunch who were there attending a sale. After they ate it they complained of feeling ill, and about thirty-five or forty of them got very sick. We got all the doctors there were in that section of the country, who sat up with those sick people all night. Some were sick for but a day and some of them did not get over it for a week.

There was great excitement, the people believing there had been poison put in the meat. It was suggested that some colored people had committed the deed. There was one colored boy who had been left with it while the others were at lunch. I knew that, but I told my man in charge not to let that be known, because the people would have hanged him immediately. They were so much excited that they would take it for granted that the colored boy must be guilty. I took specimens of the meat over to the Agricultural Department and to other places and had it analyzed, and they told me that it contained ptomaine poison.

I will read from the dictionary what ptomaine poisoning is. The Standard Dictionary gives the following definition:

> Ptomaine: An alkaloid, usually poisonous, derived from decomposing or putrefying animal matter; also, in the usage of some writers, one of the similar alkaloids produced by disease germs in the living body.

The decaying of animal matter produces this poison. When we reflect that practically all the beef is killed in one place, kept for months, and then sent over the country, we must know that it is very liable to be affected in that way, and that it probably is. I do not believe that there is a first-class hotel in this city buying this beef that does not injure the health of its patrons.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. STEWART. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. What sort of an inspection of meat would the Senator deem adequate? Would an eyes-and-nose inspection be sufficient?

Mr. STEWART. An eyes-and-nose inspection will amount to nothing if another thing is done to the meat—I do not know that it is done; I do not charge it, but it is urged, and it is very natural that it should be done—namely, the putting of formaldehyde into it. It is said they put it in when the animals are killed—when they pile the carcasses up—and they may lay for a year or two in cold storage. In a case of that kind, the appearance will be all right and the smell would not be bad, but the meat would be poisonous.

I do not know about this myself, but I have been told by butchers and experts that the use of formaldehyde is general, so that the meat is preserved from decay. They say, and probably it is correct, that all the meat is kept for a long time frozen, and when it is thawed out and the air comes to it, it decays very rapidly. To prevent that rapid decay the preservative is put in.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to ask a question, if the Senator will permit me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. STEWART. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. I only ask for information; I have never examined this question; but I inquire of the Senator how these food inspectors are appointed?

Mr. STEWART. They are appointed by the Commissioners on the recommendation of the health officer.

Mr. SPOONER. Under a civil-service examination?

Mr. STEWART. No.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator know the sort of examination to which they are subjected?

Mr. STEWART. I do not think they are given much of an examination.

I am coming to another part of the subject now. I happen to have a good deal of knowledge in regard to the milk inspection. In regard to that service I have for the last five or six years tried to help the health officer to get more inspectors. As the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] reminded me the other day, I have appeared before the Appropriations Committee and asked for more inspectors in order that the milk might be properly inspected.

The provision of this law was drawn by the health officer, and all the laws in regard to this matter are drawn by him. At present the milk is not inspected. The health officer at first said there were four or five hundred places where no inspection is had and the other day before the House Committee on the District of Columbia he said there are two thousand places in the District of Columbia where milk is sold where it can not be inspected under the law. There is no law to inspect such milk. The law that was passed by Congress only provided that dairies should be inspected. The police court holds that a place is not a dairy unless the selling of milk is its principal business. So the great mass of places where milk is sold are not inspected at all.

Then there are places about the town and near by in the suburbs where there are from 250 to 500 cows kept. The milk drivers gather the milk from those cows and bring it into the city, and that milk is not inspected at all. Milk can not be inspected in stores, groceries, and saloons. It can be brought to those places and sold, and there is no inspection provided for the milk so sold. Tuberculose cows may be kept right in the city here and their milk sold without inspection.

Then there is another matter which needs particular care. Milk is sent here from the country outside with material in it to preserve it. Formaldehyde, which is a rank poison, is put in it. This milk is seldom inspected. There is not sufficient force to do it. Not one in a thousand cases is examined, because there are no inspectors to do it. They can put in a composition of lime and sugar to thicken the milk and cream without any detrimental effect, if they do not put in too much. Professor Babcock, of the University of Wisconsin, a great institution, has recommended it in certain cases.

But it is dangerous to let the milkmen do it, because they may add something else. They may put in something such as formaldehyde, which is a poison. Formaldehyde is an embalming fluid, and it preserves the milk for a long time. There is no doubt that milk comes here from a distance in which these foreign substances are used. There is a regulation against such practice, but there is no organized machinery for enforcing it.

Then there is another very objectionable practice here, and that is filling the bottles in the wagons in the morning before daylight. I suppose that one-half or perhaps three-fourths of the milk is filled in the wagons. The driver will take a few bottles and fill them from the cans in the wagons. Then he will go on and gather up bottles wherever he can find them—his own or anybody's else. These bottles are not washed, and they are given to the next customer.

Of the inspectors in the health office, only two are engaged in this business; and one great complaint is that these two inspectors go around in the middle of the day. I do not know myself of any specific instance; it is only hearsay; but it is very common talk everywhere, and I have been told by many milk dealers that the inspectors will come around and find milk that has been left over and has soured, which the dealer says he intends to send back. The inspectors take samples of that milk against the protest of the milkman, who did not intend to sell it, but to return it to the shipper, and they bring him into court and he is fined. There is nobody to whom he can go and explain the matter; there is no head of this department; and so he can explain it to nobody.

The milkmen were very much opposed to inspection. When I introduced a bill for that purpose they were all up in arms about it; but I had them appear before the Senate District Committee, and we talked it all over, and they said "If you give us a bill like that; if you provide a proper head of the department, somebody to whom we can go and explain matters; if you provide for an inspection of all the dairies, so that there will be clean work, we want the bill. If you have a man at the head who is a business man and a milkman to whom we can go, it is all right. As at present organized there is nobody in the health office to whom we can make complaints."

This milk bill was sent to the health officer, and he drew up two bills, exceedingly long, irrelevant, and twisted in every possible way, as a substitute for it. Of course, they could not be enacted into law. They were too complicated and they were indefinite, so that it would be all confusion, just as it is now. He insisted that it be left to him and to his discretion. There are twenty-odd inspectors——

Mr. ALDRICH. Twenty-four inspectors in the bill under consideration.

Mr. STEWART. Twenty-four of these officers. Their duties are not defined; there is no head. If a milkman has been wrongfully accused—which is generally the case—there is nobody for him to go to.

In his examination this year before the District Committee the health officer said he had visited the dairies. I examined him about a year ago, and he said that he had not visited any dairies, that he had never seen the milk separated, and that he did not know anything about it. He does not know anything about the subject, but he pretends to, and thus mixes it all up.

The analytical chemist of the Department does his duty. He is a good man, but he has no administrative functions, and he can do nothing. I think, instead of increasing the number of these inconsequential officials, which tends to disorganization, it ought to be diminished.

In the milk bill which passed the Senate recently I left out the health officer, as I thought the provisions of the bill could be executed without him; but the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] thought we ought to have him in the bill, and so we put him in as a member of the board of milk inspection, but not giving him power to destroy everything. We fixed it so that we got a good bill.

I will read what it is and tell what it means:

That a board of milk inspection is hereby created, to be composed of the health officer of the District of Columbia, the Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry in the Department of Agriculture, and the superintendent of dairies, to be appointed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and who shall be familiar with the dairy business and who shall possess a knowledge of analytical chemistry, and said board of milk inspection shall be charged with the enforcement of all laws relating to the production and sale of milk and cream in the District of Columbia. There shall also be appointed by the said Commissioners, on the recommendation of the board of milk inspection, one analytical chemist and one bacteriologist—

We put in a bacteriologist on the motion of the Senator from Missouri, but it is as useless a provision as any that can be conceived of. A bacteriologist is not useful for anything in this connection. A number of physicians were present at a hearing before the subcommittee of the Committee on the District of Columbia in the House the other day. They were asked what a bacteriologist could do, and they said that all he could do would be to tell how many bacteria there were in a cubic centimeter of the milk. Take a specimen of milk and carry it across the town, and there will be twice as many bacteria in it when you get across. The bacteriologist can only determine the number of bacteria, which determination requires several days, and is therefore entirely worthless, especially as you can not then tell whether they are harmless or injurious bacteria.

All of the scientists upon the subject say that it can not be made of any practical use. It is a mere fancy, a theory that is not applied in any practical way. What does he do? A man brings a sample of milk to the office. He may be a half hour or an hour in doing that. He will find ten times the number of bacteria in it that it had when he started. They accumulate. The way to keep bacteria out of milk is to keep it clean as it comes from the cow, reduced down to a proper temperature. If you let milk get up to a high temperature, nobody can keep them out.

Mr. HOPKINS. I should like to ask the Senator from Nevada what provision is made with reference to the shipment of milk from Western States—say Iowa or Illinois—into the District?

Mr. STEWART. We have a provision against the shipment of impure milk into the District. I will read it. It is not in the present law.

There shall also be appointed by the said Commissioners, on the recommendation of the board of milk inspection, one analytical chemist and one bacteriologist, who shall assist the superintendent of dairies and shall under direction of said board, perform such other duties relating to their profession as may be required by the health officer of the District of Columbia, one clerk, and one skilled laborer. And there shall also be appointed by the said Commissioners, on the recommendation of the said board, six inspectors, who shall be qualified veterinary surgeons, who have been graduated after a proper period of study by a school of veterinary medicine authorized by law to confer the degree of doctor of veterinary medicine or some similar degree, whose duty it shall be to inspect all places and dairy farms where milk is produced for sale in the District of Columbia.

Now, these persons must examine the farms. They must examine the cow. They ought to be veterinary surgeons. There are only a few shippers of milk from a long distance into the District of Columbia. The officers can send a man to inspect the property, no matter where it is, just as well as if it is near by, or they can stop the introduction of the milk and inspect every cargo that is brought in.

Mr. HOPKINS. What I desire to learn from the Senator from Nevada is whether the bill to which he has referred is broad enough to permit the inspection of dairies in Western States—say Illinois or Iowa—from which milk is sent to the District of Columbia?

Mr. STEWART. Yes. The bill says:

No person, firm, or corporation refusing to such inspectors free access to the premises to be inspected shall bring any milk or cream into the District of Columbia. And there shall also be appointed by the said Commissioners, on the recommendation of the said board, eight inspectors, who shall be experienced in the dairy business and whose duty it shall be to inspect all milk and cream brought into the District of Columbia for sale, and also to inspect all places within the District from which milk or cream is sold.

Mr. HOPKINS. There is no provision in the bill, as I gather from the reading, that the milk that comes in shall be examined.

Mr. STEWART. Yes, there is.

Mr. HOPKINS. But you do not make provision there for the examination of dairies outside of the District of Columbia.

Mr. STEWART. Oh, yes; the whole of it is here. The veterinary surgeons are all to work on the outside.

Mr. HOPKINS. I think the subsequent language limits the power that is given in the first part of the paragraph.

Mr. STEWART. No; that refers to another set of inspectors. The first is a board of six.

And there shall also be appointed by the said Commissioners, on the recommendation of the said board, six inspectors, who shall be qualified veterinary surgeons, who have been graduated after a proper period of study by a school of veterinary medicine authorized by law to confer the degree of doctor of veterinary medicine or some similar degree, whose duty it shall be to inspect all places and dairy farms where milk is produced for sale in the District of Columbia.

That covers it all. They are outside. If a man will not allow his dairy to be inspected, he can not send his milk into the District.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the bill which the Senator has in his hand provide for the comprehensive management of this whole department, or only in reference to milk?

Mr. STEWART. Only in reference to milk.

Mr. ALDRICH. It does not provide any machinery for the enforcement of other provisions?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir.

Mr. ALDRICH. There does not seem at present to be any provision of law which defines the duties of these various sanitary and food inspectors, and there seems to be a large variety of them at different salaries. I do not know whether the Senator intends to cover that.

Mr. STEWART. No; I am just covering the milk part of it.

Mr. LODGE. I understand this is only the milk inspection.

Mr. STEWART. Only the milk inspection. The other can be provided for.

Mr. LODGE. The report of the three food inspectors which the Senator had read here is the most extraordinary thing I have ever seen. It has never been called to my attention before. If that is the only kind of inspection we have here, the inspection of food products in Washington is worthless.

Mr. STEWART. That is all it is.

Mr. LODGE. It so appears on the face of the report. It is the most incompetent statement I ever saw.

Mr. STEWART. That is all we have.

Mr. LODGE. That is all we have?

Mr. STEWART. That is all we have. We have no inspection in any department now, milk or anything else; and this shows the caliber of the man who is called health officer.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly something ought to be done to give us competent and efficient men and a proper inspection of meat in this city. It appears from their own report that there is no inspection worthy the name.

Mr. STEWART. I offered the resolution because I believed there was no inspection. I could not hear of any. I inquired, and then I offered the resolution.

The bill continues:

The superintendent of dairies shall have, under said board, charge of the inspection of milk and cream herein provided for, and he may, in his discretion, suspend any inspector and report the same to said board. The superintendent of dairies shall receive—

It is all provided for, and an appropriation made for it. This then defines a dairy as a place where milk is sold, so that they can be inspected.

Then there is a provision in the third section that no milk or cream shall be brought in that has any preservative in it—anything put in to preserve it. This measure provides for the detailed work, and I will say with regard to it, to the credit of the milkmen, although they will be put to additional expense, they are unanimously for it. Some of them are not doing this now because, they say, "If we have an inspection that will apply to all, we are perfectly willing to be inspected, but have all inspected." But when you talk to them they say, "What is the use of inspecting us? Here are a thousand or two places that are not inspected at all. They are filling milk in bottles in wagons. They bring milk from tuberculous cows right into the District of Columbia. There is no restraint. They bring milk from abroad with formaldehyde in it in competition with us, and we can not stand that competition and give clean milk. We must have the privilege of doing all these things, too, if others can do that." They say, "If you will inspect all, and have clean milk, we will all be satisfied with it."

Every man dealing in milk has come forward. I did not think they would all come in. They say "We will have to change our operations; we will have to have clean places to wash our bottles; we will have to have more room; but we are all willing to do it if you have an inspection of the milk in general."

I do not suppose there is any chance for this bill, because the health officer will do what he can to beat it. I have here the two bills that he drew. He insisted upon drawing them. They are longer than the moral law. They do not provide any system. Now, I protest against this young man running this thing any longer, because he has been tried and found wanting. He gets along very smoothly when he comes up here. He has had this inspection business about eight or ten years, and I have been talking to him and trying to get him to improve it until I am tired and disgusted.

A Senator can draw up a bill and send it down to the health officer. He remodels it, and when he sends it back you do not know it. No matter how much study you may give it with the aim of remedying this condition, this young man gets up something else. He devotes the best part of his time in preparing substitutes. He has his pets in there. I do not know what for. There is not a man in there who knows his duty at all except Mr. Hird, the chemist. He is a modest man and attends to his own business. Perhaps I ought not to name him, because they may persecute him. All the balance is in confusion. There is nobody at the head. The chief inspector does not know anything about dairies. I believe of all these twenty-four he assigns only two men to attend to the milk business.

I hope that the amendment for the other seven will be nonconcurred in at all events. I hope the House will do something on this business. It is not a pleasant matter, and I hate to complain of anybody, but the condition of milk and meats in this District is too bad.

Mr. SPOONER. Has the vote been reconsidered?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. It is all open.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that that has already been done.

Mr. SPOONER. Is the Senator from Iowa willing to pass over this portion of the bill and take it up later, in order that some amendments may be drawn and offered to it? I am quite impressed myself——

Mr. ALLISON. I am willing that it shall be passed over, but I should like to say a word or two before it is passed over. However, I would rather hear the Senator from Wisconsin before making any observations myself.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Nevada is not through, as I understand.

Mr. STEWART. I am substantially through. I believe that if this matter goes over until Monday the committee can frame a whole paragraph, that will include milk and every other inspection. It is very important that the existing condition shall not continue for another year, and people be poisoned here by the wholesale.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask a question, if I knew who had the floor.

Mr. STEWART. Of whom do you want to ask it—of me?

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada has the floor and yielded to the Senator from Wisconsin. Does the Senator from Wisconsin now yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. COCKRELL. At the instance of the Senator from Nevada we passed this bill to which he has reference, and it has gone to the House. It has been referred to the appropriate committee. They have referred it to the District Commissioners. The District Commissioners are now considering it. They have heard the Senator; they have heard all parties; and they will make a report to the Committee on the District of Columbia of the House.

Now, I do not think this matter ought to be precipitated on this bill. I think the Senator ought to be content to fight out the question before the committee in the House, where all parties can be heard and are being heard.

Mr. STEWART. That scuttle game has been going on six or seven years, and every time there comes a bill that will not hold water.

Mr. SPOONER. It will not hold milk.

Mr. STEWART. No. The law we have now on the statute books, under which you can not inspect 2,000 places now, although it has been amended, was drawn by this same authority. The health officer draws them all. The Commissioners do not pay any attention to it.

This thing has been going: They bring in from all over milk that is not inspected at all; milk from the shanties near by here. That has been going on all the time. He is not authorized under the law to inspect them. Take the filling of the bottles in the wagons. There is an ordinance against filling bottles in wagons, but that goes on all the time. There is no force to inspect it. Congress has given him all the inspectors he has asked for. He has a long list of twenty-four in addition to these, and here are seven more. He has all these inspectors, and under the decisions of the court and under the amendment they can do nothing.

Must we wait on him? If Congress is under him, if we have to wait for him, it will all amount to nothing. We have waited ten years for him, and plenty of people have been murdered. I do not propose to submit to it any longer, if it is possible to get away from it. If the Senator from Missouri knew what is going on as well as I do, he would not want to wait either.

Mr. COCKRELL. I know this much, that you had a very full hearing before men who are as much interested in it as you or I—men whose wives and children are here—men whose families are affected by it just as much as ours. Now, why precipitate it here? Why precipitate it on every bill that comes up? There is the legitimate place for it. They are investigating this matter.

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Mr. COCKRELL. They will do justice in the matter.

Mr. STEWART. This man do justice! Why has he not done justice during the last ten years?

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not want to go into the matter of any personal animosities between the Senator from Nevada and the health officer.

Mr. STEWART. I deny it. I have no feeling in the world against him except a feeling of disgust.

Mr. COCKRELL. You show it all the time as plain as A B C.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, we have passed a bill providing for milk inspection. I think legislation is very necessary. I understand that bill, with the Senator's amendments, was made satisfactory to the Commissioners and to the health department. It went over to the House, and has gone to the committee, and the health officers are up here trying to kill it or delay it.

Mr. STEWART. They have had it referred back.

Mr. LODGE. It is an old trick. We have all seen it done. I think we need some good legislation, and I think we need it now. My attention has never been called to the matter of meat inspection until this morning. I think that report is as bad as anything can be. I did not take any interest in it until I heard it read, and if that is the only inspection of meat we have here in this city there is no inspection of it worth anything. Under those circumstances, I hope something will be done to get competent and efficient men there. Give them all the men they need, but let us have some efficient men.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I heartily agree with what the Senator from Massachusetts says. But who is to judge as to the competency of the officers? Are we going to make the decision?

Mr. LODGE. It is obvious from the report that the men who signed it are not competent. I need nothing but their own testimony. That is a report which on its face shows their incompetency.

Mr. COCKRELL. You have to trust to somebody to make the selection. We all want good government. We all want a clean administration of the matter by competent men.

Mr. LODGE. Then let us get some other method.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then turn out the District Commissioners and put in men who have the ability to make proper selections. That is the only way to do it.

Mr. STEWART. It is not the selection of the men, but it is the legislation.

Mr. LODGE. The Commissioners do not make the selection.

Mr. STEWART. This man Woodward has been running the legislation for ten years. I have his testimony, which was taken by the District Committee. He estimates that there are 2,000 places where milk is sold that he can not inspect. He admits that all of this dirt is going on, but none of the bills that he has ever drawn—and he draws them all—provides against it, and they do not prescribe the duties of the inspectors. They are all subject to his personal control. He just wants a large number of inspectors, and then he does what he pleases with them. They do nothing to benefit this community. I think this man has been dictator long enough.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, if it does not interfere with the Senator from Wisconsin——

Mr. SPOONER. Nothing interferes with me.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I should like to ask the Senator from Nevada one question.

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I think he is the only member of the Committee on the District of Columbia whom I see present. The chairman is not here, although other members of the committee may be. Who is really responsible for the legislation that we enact here from time to time about the District of Columbia?

Mr. STEWART. About milk inspection?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Does the Committee on the District of Columbia take what the Commissioners send up here? Are they really the lawmaking power for the District of Columbia?

Mr. STEWART. In regard to the health office?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Do the committee look into the matter for themselves, or do they accept the recommendations of the Commissioners and make the laws to suit them? That is what I should like to ask.

Mr. STEWART. The District Committee was unanimous on the Senate milk bill. They have been unanimous on other bills, but they go to the other House and they go back to the District Commissioners, and we never hear anything more of them. They have been able to overrule us. The committee has been honestly endeavoring ever since I have been on it to get a milk bill, but we can not get it.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. With reference to other legislation, are we legislating just as the Commissioners tell us to legislate, or when their recommendations come here are they ever overruled in committee?

Mr. STEWART. So far as I am concerned, I overrule them every time I do not agree with them, and generally I do not agree with them. But on this business the committee are all together.

There is another subject—the question of nuisances. The health officer claims exclusive jurisdiction over every matter pertaining to nuisances. He sends all sorts of unconstitutional and ill-digested bills to the District Committee. The committee reform them and report them back unanimously to the Senate, and then he insists on their being recommitted and thus causes their ultimate failure. That same man has drawn plenty of substitute bills; and it has finally been referred back to the committee at his suggestion. He runs all those things. He is boss everywhere.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to ask the Senator from Nevada if there is not a law in the District which defines nuisances, or do the Commissioners themselves decide, or does the health officer?

Mr. STEWART. The health officer decides everything.

Mr. ALDRICH. With respect to nuisances?

Mr. STEWART. He decides everything.

Mr. ALDRICH. There is no law, then?

Mr. STEWART. He is a law unto himself. That is all the law we have on that subject.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, have I the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin is recognized.

Mr. SPOONER. I wish to give, in just a word, my reasons for asking the Senator from Iowa to let this provision go over in order that some amendments may be drawn and offered to it, if on further consideration they seem necessary. I have the utmost confidence in the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. During the fifteen years I have been here, I have never known the District to be better officered in that respect or by more conscientious men.

Mr. STEWART. It is not the Commissioners.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator object to my paying a just compliment to the Commissioners?

Mr. STEWART. I thought the Senator was applying what I had said to the Commissioners.

Mr. SPOONER. I was not attributing anything to the Senator from Nevada except an earnest desire that the milk which is used in this District——

Mr. STEWART. And the meat.

Mr. SPOONER. Particularly the milk, should be carefully guarded in the interest of the public health.

I look upon the Commissioners as men not only of fine ability, but of great earnestness and efficiency in the discharge of their duties, and in what I say I do not wish to be considered as reflecting at all upon them. I suppose, as the health office is a department which is of course apart from the ordinary administrative duties of the Commissioners, the Commissioners follow very much, and must, the head of that department.

Now, it is better to have no department of that kind and no system of inspection at all than to have a poor an inefficient one. If the people are lulled to a sense of security in that respect, if there is an expensive and considerable health department, by the presumption that everything which they purchase in the way of food is carefully inspected they will be less careful than if there were no such department.

I agree entirely with the Senator from Massachusetts that, so far as concerns the inspection of meat, fish, oysters, poultry, game, and the like, this report is utterly inconsequential, and I think it is discreditable. If there were in force here a carefully devised and efficiently enforced system of inspection, no such report as this would have been or could have been sent to the Senate. I do not know anything about these inspectors. The report is simply transmitted by the health officer, who may be an excellent man in his way. I know nothing about him. But this report is signed by the food inspectors, and they report to the Senate how they do it:

> At an early hour in the morning we visit these establishments—

They do not inspect on the cars, and I do not know that they could—> we visit these establishments and inspect by smelling and handling each and every carcass.

Whether or not they are there when they are unloaded nobody knows. They find what is in the storage room, but it would be a very easy matter and a very usual matter, if dealers were disregardful of the public health, for them to neglect to place in the cold-storage room a piece of fish or a part of a carcass that was in some way or some portion of it tainted. Their inspection is confined to smelling and handling the carcass sometimes, they say, while it is being unloaded from the wagons. But after that their inspection is confined to the cold-storage room.

I have done a little bit of inspection myself in this city during the years I have been in here, and with some results. I suppose every Senator has. I used only the nose, but I have been obliged several times to reject upon that inspection some food which has been purchased by members of my family or sent to my house. Even under the best system of inspection I suppose there might and would be instances of that kind.

I think the inspectors should be subjected to competitive examination of the most rigid and careful kind.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no doubt of that.

Mr. SPOONER. And one object I have in asking that this matter go over is that an amendment may be drawn which shall provide for a careful examination, under the rules and regulations of the Civil Service Commission, of this small army of inspectors who are now on the rolls, and provision that hereafter appointments shall be made only on competitive examinations, conducted under civil-service rules and regulations. I do not know of any one subject upon which there should be a more rigorous and careful examination to ascertain the fitness of employees than in the matter of food inspection. That is all I have to say.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I agree with Senators who have spoken that the matter of food and sanitary inspection is one of the most important functions of the government in this District. Especially is that so with reference to food. The District is so isolated and so situated that nearly everything that is consumed here must be brought from a distance, and therefore it is important that the most rigid inspection should be had as respects the food we eat and the surroundings of our homes and our public places.

But, Mr. President, in the ordinary method of doing business in the Senate and in the other House it is not the function of the Committee on Appropriations to make laws or to amend laws respecting any of the administrative subjects here.

Now the Senator from Nevada criticises this appropriation. The present law provides for thirteen inspectors. The House of Representatives, on a motion made in the House, cut down the current appropriation from thirteen to six, striking out seven inspectors. I understand from the observations of the Senator from Nevada that he proposes to adhere to the House provision, reducing the number of inspectors we now have from thirteen to six.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART. If that is not done he will certainly do it, because he has the power now. He is certainly working over there, and certainly will run it if that is not done. If that is done he may let the milk bill pass. He will not let it pass if it is not done. It relieves him.

Mr. ALLISON. I fear that is not a wise method of dealing with this question. The Senator's remarks were largely confined to a criticism of the milk inspector.

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. There is a provision in the bill for six milk inspectors, and I understand from the Senator from Nevada that the bill which he had in charge here a few days ago, and which passed the Senate, provides for six.

Mr. STEWART. It provides for six. If the Senator will allow me, that has been raised to thirteen. He has to use the milk inspectors for that purpose. So he has that already. He can use them for that purpose and can get, of course, any number, and these men can be used for milk inspectors or for anything hereafter.

Mr. ALLISON. The remedy, it seems to me, from the situation is to provide a sufficient force to deal with this question. The laws we now have on the statute books are supposed to give to the necessary administrative authorities all the power they need for the purposes of full and complete inspection.

I quite agree with the Senator from Wisconsin that our Commissioners are intelligent, alert, and active in administering the affairs of the government of the District of Columbia. They are the administrative officers. Every department of the District government is under their jurisdiction and control. I understand that the health officer is a subordinate of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. The health office constitutes one of the departments under their jurisdiction, and I feel sure they are trying to secure proper inspection of food in this District. I think they might do more, and I think these inspectors might do a great deal more, but I do not believe it is wise to reduce the number to six, and that is the real question before the Senate.

The Committee on Appropriations requested the Commissioners to furnish a detailed statement of the duties performed by all the inspectors in this District. Thirteen of them are provided for under the Senate committee amendment and six are provided in the bill as it came from the House. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia, in the hearings before the Committee on Appropriations, were requested by us to state the duties of each one of the thirteen inspectors. Beginning on page 99, there is a full statement of what these inspectors do from day to day. I confess that I think they might do more.

Mr. STEWART. Now, let me ask the Senator a question. Are there not about 2,000 places where they sell milk not inspected?

Mr. ALLISON. I will come to the milk question. I am now speaking of the general question. These thirteen inspectors are not milk inspectors; they are general sanitary inspectors. The District is divided into eight subordinate districts, in each of which there is located one of these eight inspectors, as I understand from the statement of the Commissioners. The inspectors in the subordinate districts have control of all the matters in their respective districts that come up and are necessary for proper sanitation, including everything within those districts.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

Mr. ALLISON. So eight of these inspectors are evidently needed for this purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. I was about to say that it is evident we can not close this matter to-day, and the Senator from Connecticut is desirous of having a short executive session. I will therefore move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not yield for the purpose of being taken from the floor.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will wait until the Senator is through with his remarks. I did not mean to take the Senator off the floor.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. So there are eight inspectors here who are provided for and who seem to be necessary. Whether they are doing their duty or not is another question. But it is a question which we can not regulate in this Chamber. We can not say that an inspector in subordinate district No. 1 or in district No. 7 is not doing what he ought to do. That is a matter of administration and not of legislation. So I fear that after we have passed all the laws we can pass in order to make effective those laws there is still something for the three Commissioners to do, who are the administrative and executive power in this District.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President——

Mr. ALLISON. I wanted to explain that this matter——

Mr. ALDRICH. I beg the Senator's pardon. I did not mean to take him off the floor.

Mr. ALLISON. I will be through in a few minutes.

Mr. STEWART. The trouble is that this is a separate department, and the Commissioners do not exercise any jurisdiction over it. We send bills to the Commissioners, and we send to them for reports, and they turn the matter over to him without comment on their part. He makes the reports that come here in regard to every matter connected with sanitation. Are we, then, not responsible in providing for a competent head for the inspection of milk and providing somebody to take charge of it and report on it? There is nobody there in the office now. Are we not to define his duties and qualifications?

Mr. ALLISON. There is a most carefully prepared statute on the statute book respecting inspection. The Senator from Nevada is not satisfied with that law, and he has brought in a bill through the Committee on the District of Columbia, which is one of the ablest committees we have in this body and which is always ready to do anything to promote the interests of this District. That committee has dealt with this question, and the Senate on its request has also dealt with it. It is impossible for us now to do otherwise than to appropriate in this bill for the present organization and system of inspection in the District already provided for. Now, we have six milk inspectors in addition to the inspectors I have named and who are provided for in the first paragraph. These inspectors report what they do, and they do very much. They perhaps do not do all they ought, but they are endeavoring, I think, to comply with the law. No person can bring milk into the District except on first having a license from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator is mistaken about that.

Mr. ALLISON. A permit.

Mr. STEWART. No; they do not have any permit. There are probably 400 tuberculous cows right in the District or gathered all around here whose milk is brought in without a license. It is that that I want to remedy.

Mr. ALLISON. I am not speaking of the cows in this District. I am speaking of the milk that is imported into the District from outside.

Mr. STEWART. We want to protect the people of the District from poisonous milk wherever it is produced.

Mr. ALLISON. I do, and I know the Senator does. I know he has much feeling on this subject, and I sympathize with him. When I drink milk I want to drink pure milk. But these laws provide not only for the inspection of all the herds in this District, but they provide for the inspection of all the herds of cattle the product of which is brought into the District; and no milk can be imported here from outside the District of Columbia without a permit. The inspectors are fully authorized not only to investigate as respects the milk imported, but they are authorized and directed to go to the sources of supply in Maryland, Virginia, and elsewhere from whence the milk comes.

So I want to call the attention of Senators to the fact that, whilst there may be great reason for criticism here, whatever that reason is it is chiefly a criticism of the administration in this District, for which the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are responsible; and if there are imperfect statutes, then the responsibility rests with the Commissioners and with the Committee on the District of Columbia, whose duty it is to first provide laws for these inspections in order that we may make the necessary appropriations.

Mr. STEWART. I ask permission to have the milk bill printed in full. I read part of it in my remarks.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no objection. I hope it will be put in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection. The bill is as follows:

A bill (S. 2402) to secure sanitary milk and cream for the District of Columbia.

Be it enacted, etc., That a board of milk inspection is hereby created, to be composed of the health officer of the District of Columbia, the Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry in the Department of Agriculture, and the superintendent of dairies, to be appointed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and who shall be familiar with the dairy business and who shall possess a knowledge of analytical chemistry, and said board of milk inspection shall be charged with the enforcement of all laws relating to the production and sale of milk and cream in the District of Columbia. There shall also be appointed by the said Commissioners, on the recommendation of the board of milk inspection, one analytical chemist and one bacteriologist, who shall assist the superintendent of dairies and shall, under direction of said board, perform such other duties relating to their profession as may be required by the health officer of the District of Columbia, one clerk, and one skilled laborer. And there shall also be appointed by the said Commissioners, on the recommendation of the said board, six inspectors, who shall be qualified veterinary surgeons, who have been graduated after a proper period of study by a school of veterinary medicine authorized by law to confer the degree of doctor of veterinary medicine or some similar degree, whose duty it shall be to inspect all places and dairy farms where milk is produced for sale in the District of Columbia.

No person, firm, or corporation refusing to such inspectors free access to the premises to be inspected shall bring any milk or cream into the District of Columbia. And there shall also be appointed by the said Commissioners, on the recommendation of the said board, eight inspectors, who shall be experienced in the dairy business and whose duty it shall be to inspect all milk and cream brought into the District of Columbia for sale, and also to inspect all places within the District from which milk or cream is sold. The superintendent of dairies shall have, under said board, charge of the inspection of milk and cream herein provided for, and he may, in his discretion, suspend any inspector and report the same to said board. The superintendent of dairies shall receive a salary of $3,000 per annum; the analytical chemist, $2,400 per annum; the bacteriologist, $1,800 per annum; the veterinary inspectors of farms and places where milk is produced, $1,300 per annum each; the inspectors and the clerk, $1,000 per annum each; and the skilled laborer, $800 per annum; in all, $24,800, which sum is hereby appropriated, one-half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia and one-half out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; and from and after the appointment by the said Commissioners of the inspectors herein authorized the offices of such inspectors as are now provided for by law for the enforcement of the laws relating to the production and sale of milk in the District of Columbia shall cease and determine.

It shall be the duty of the officers herein provided for to execute the provisions of this act and all laws and regulations relating to the production and sale of milk and cream in the District of Columbia, and for that purpose shall at all times have access to farms and other places where milk or cream is produced, to dairies from which milk or cream is sold, and to wagons or other vehicles used in the business of distributing milk or cream. And the superintendent of dairies may suspend the permit of any person who obstructs free access to the officers herein named at any hour of the day or night to his premises or property used in the business of producing milk or cream to be sold in the District of Columbia or of selling milk or cream in said District.

SEC. 2. That every place in the District of Columbia where milk or cream is sold is a dairy. All doors, windows, or other openings to any dairy shall be at least 15 feet from an opening of a stable, soap factory, or other building wherein any business injurious to milk or cream is conducted, and no opening to such stable or building shall hereafter be made within 25 feet of an opening in a dairy. Each dairy shall have house room sufficient for cooling, preserving, and bottling milk, and also conveniences for the cleansing of bottles, cans, and all utensils of every kind used in the business.

SEC. 3. That no milk or cream shall be brought into or sold in the District of Columbia which contains any foreign substance used as a preservative, as coloring matter, or for any other purpose whatever. Any person offering for sale any milk or cream containing any such foreign substance or substances shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be punished by a fine of not more than $100 or imprisonment for not more than sixty days. Any person sending any milk or cream into the District of Columbia for sale which contains such foreign substance or substances shall be fined not more than $100 or imprisoned for not more than sixty days, or both such fine and imprisonment, and shall be subject to indictment by the grand jury and trial in the District of Columbia.

SEC. 4. That all milk and cream retailed in the District of Columbia shall come from a regularly established dairy or dairy farm licensed to sell milk in the District of Columbia. All bottles used in handling milk or cream must be cleansed in such dairy or dairy farm before being used a second time. No bottles used in handling milk or cream shall be filled outside of a regularly established dairy or licensed dairy farm. Any person filling a bottle with milk or cream outside of a dairy or licensed dairy farm for delivery in the District of Columbia shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be fined not more than $50 or imprisoned for not more than thirty days. Any person who shall procure bottles to be filled with milk or cream outside of an established dairy or licensed dairy farm for sale or delivery in the District of Columbia shall be fined not more than $100 or imprisoned for not more than three months.

SEC. 5. That no dealer in milk or cream shall use bottles or other vessels for handling milk or cream belonging to any other person, firm, or company without the written consent of the owner thereof first had and obtained. If any such dealer shall use, appropriate, or have in his possession for use or appropriation, bottles or other vessels belonging to any other person, firm, or company without the written consent of the owner thereof, he shall be fined in a sum not more than $50, or be imprisoned for not more than thirty days, or both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 6. That no permit to bring milk or cream into said District, or to sell milk or cream in said District, shall be granted to any person who is not prepared to conform to the provisions of this act and all other laws now in force regulating the production and sale of milk and cream in the District of Columbia before making application for such permit, and no person now holding a permit to bring milk or cream into the said District, or to sell milk or cream in said District, shall continue in the business more than sixty days after the passage of this act without complying with the provisions of this act and obtaining a renewal of his permit for that purpose.

SEC. 7. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, on the recommendation of the superintendent of dairies, shall have power to make all rules and regulations necessary to carry this act and all other laws and regulations respecting dairies or dairy farms into full force and effect, and such rules and regulations shall have the force and effect of law.

SEC. 8. That all acts and parts of acts in conflict with this act are hereby repealed.

Passed the Senate March 9, 1904.

Mr. ALLISON. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. McCOMAS. I want only a couple of minutes.

I wish to say to the Senator from Nevada, with whose purpose to improve milk inspection I have sympathy, I voted for the bill he urged, but because I approve a good bill that the Senator from Nevada introduces it is not necessary to assent to his unjust judgment upon a faithful, intelligent, and exceedingly valuable officer.

Mr. STEWART. No officer of that kind has been reflected upon.

Mr. McCOMAS. The one who has been reflected upon is the health officer of the District. My reason for saying this is because I have observed him for years. I know that Doctor Woodward is a man of high character, wonderful industry, great learning, which he is always adding to; a student of these very questions, who gives his nights and days to them, and that he himself stimulates and controls to a great degree the important investigations. His highest ambition is to give pure food and milk and the like to the people of this District. He is doing his best. He is a man of great ability. He is a man of rare executive ability. These excellent Commissioners would not have kept him here if he had not been. He came to this place by merit; he has remained in it by merit, and I protest that he is not deserving of the strictures of my friend from Nevada.

Mr. STEWART. I have made no strictures on him but what I know. I know that he makes no inspection of milk or anything else. He fixes it all up.

Mr. McCOMAS. I say this officer is faithful in the performance of all his duties under the inspection laws, which laws I will not take time now to refer to. It is not pertinent or necessary to do it here. The inspection laws of this District, gradually built up as they are, have been really good, and the administration is far better than is now said here. There may be bad things, for which I believe there is——

Mr. STEWART. Do you think it is his duty to lobby around Congress here to prevent the passage of bills that the committee has brought up?

Mr. McCOMAS. I say that, in the absence of a tittle of evidence of his doing that, I deny that he is doing it. I have known him for ten years; I have not seen him to talk to for a year past. If he has been around the Capitol and the Senate lobbying I have not seen him. I do not believe he has.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator from Maryland permit just one word? The Senator from Nevada speaks of his lobbying. I do not recollect ever having seen Doctor Woodward more than once, and that was in the Appropriations Committee room eight or ten years ago, about the second or third year of his service here. If he has been lobbying, it must have been with the Senator from Nevada, for he seems to be the only one who knows about it.

Mr. STEWART. I know about it.

Mr. McCOMAS. He may have talked with the Senator from Nevada; he has not talked to me, and, as I said, I have not seen him here for a year. I want to conclude by saying now, connectedly, that this is one of the best officers; he is performing some of the best service; he is doing his duty, and his whole duty. Upon the milk question I want no debate and therefore I do not debate that. I hope when he gets the inspectors, or when somebody gets them, as the Senator from Nevada desires, that will be well done; but the Committee on Appropriations here are doing their duty, and they are doing it properly. They would do less than their duty if they did not put back those thirteen inspectors.

I have had considerable observation and experience in this District here for years, and in some respects a little closer to some parts of this administration here than other gentlemen may have had on the question before the Senate. I hope the Senate will stand by the thirteen inspectors, and I will vote to stand by one of the best officers, and I hope the Senator from Nevada, who wants to be just, will by and by change his opinion, which is erroneous.

Mr. STEWART. I can not change it on the facts before me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 1508) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection thereon of a public building to be used for a Department of State, a Department of Justice, and a Department of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, that the consideration of the appropriation bill may be proceeded with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and it will be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I am about to conclude what I intended to say, which is that under the provisions of existing law the Committee on Appropriations have presented these provisions in order that those responsible for the administration of that law may have the necessary means. I see there is much discussion upon this subject. Therefore I ask unanimous consent that these provisions for the health department may be passed over for the time being, and I express the hope that the Senator from Rhode Island will allow us to go on for a while as respects matters which are not in controversy. Then I will yield to him for an executive session.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think it will be impossible to do anything more with the appropriation bill to-day.

Mr. ALLISON. I think it is not impossible, and I wish to go on to-day with matters that will not lead to debate. I think there are a good many that will not be debated.

Mr. ALDRICH. I can not very well be persistent against the appeal of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, but I fear that no progress will be made or can be made to-day.

Mr. ALLISON. I have some fear myself, from the situation, but I want to try.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the provisions touching the health department be passed over for the present. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suppose there will be no expectation to take them up to-day.

Mr. ALLISON. They will go over until after the other items have been disposed of.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] and other Senators interested in the matter have left the Chamber, and I certainly shall move an executive session now, unless it is understood that these provisions shall go over until Monday.

Mr. SPOONER entered the Chamber.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Wisconsin is here.

Mr. ALDRICH. I shall insist upon my motion unless it is understood that the provisions shall go over until Monday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa still has the floor.

Mr. ALLISON. I will not insist that these provisions shall be again taken up to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They will be laid over, then, until Monday.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that they may go over until Monday. That is my understanding.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Passing Sunday, they will go over until Monday.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to inquire, because of the observation which was made upon my arrival, if it was some matter I am interested in in the debate?

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Rhode Island suggested that a good many Senators had left the Chamber.

Mr. SPOONER. And the Senator from Iowa suggested I had just returned, and that led me to make the inquiry.

Mr. ALLISON. Among other Senators, the Senator from Rhode Island mentioned the Senator from Wisconsin, and I said he had just returned.

Mr. SPOONER. Oh!

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I desire to make some progress with the bill. I see it is manifest that this question can not be disposed of to-day, but I hope Senators will allow us to go on for a time with the ordinary reading of the bill for action upon other amendments.

Mr. SPOONER. Are we still on the health department items?

Mr. ALLISON. Those were passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The health department provisions have been laid aside until Monday.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill at page 62, line 23.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Courts," on page 63, line 7, to increase the appropriation for the salary of judges of the police court from $3,000 each to $3,500 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 63, line 15, to increase the appropriation for the police court from $21,090 to 22,090.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 64, after line 6, to insert:

For acquiring, by purchase or condemnation, additional ground in square No. 489, in the city of Washington, for a site for a new police court building, $35,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary; for preparation of plans for said building, $2,500; in all, $38,000.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 8, in the word "square," the letter "v" is printed for "q."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That has been changed already.

Mr. ALLISON. It is a typographical error.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I should like to inquire what the necessity is for a site for a new police court building, and what amount it is expected will be necessary to expend in the erection of the building. There is provided now $38,000 for the site and for plans. How much is the building to cost, because if we buy the land it is equivalent to saying that the building is to be built? I should like to inquire as to the necessity for a new police court building. I suppose the police courts are now held in the building which is on Judiciary Square.

Mr. ALLISON. No, Mr. President——

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I may be mistaken about that. I should like information on the subject.

Mr. ALLISON. This land to be purchased is a lot adjoining the present police court building. The police court is on the corner of Sixth and Louisiana avenue, and there is an adjacent building which is now rented for the purposes of the police court. It is proposed to buy this land and to construct upon it and upon the premises we already own a new police court building, which it is estimated will cost $75,000.

The House inserted a provision in the bill that the police court shall be provided for in the new municipal building. All agree that it is necessary that at an early day new quarters shall be provided for the police court. The committee are unanimously of the opinion that it is wiser and better to retain the police court where it now is, and that it is also necessary that at an early day a new building shall be erected upon the quarters now owned and to be purchased under this amendment. It is proposed to construct a plain, suitable building, and the cost of the building will be about $75,000.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Yesterday we eliminated the House provision that the police court should go into the new municipal building.

Mr. ALLISON. Yesterday we eliminated the House provision respecting the transfer of the police court to the new municipal building.

Mr. McCOMAS. Mr. President, I do not want to delay the Senator from Iowa in his desire to get through with the bill, but I do want to say a word about this provision and the one which precedes it.

There is not a wiser provision than this one which is now put upon the bill by the Senate. The old police court, lying on the corner of Sixth and Louisiana avenue, is not sufficient for present purposes. They hold now two courts, running all the while—two police judges with juries—and the accommodations are not commensurate with this day and this civilization. They need the additional building.

Now, the Senate committee added it to the old building space to have the space increased that they may have a proper building. Nothing is more needed than that building.

But, Mr. President, even better than that building was the action of the Senate committee in striking out, on page 16, the provision of the House, the like of which I never saw attempted anywhere else, and if I had not seen it in this bill I could not have supposed it would have been attempted in this bill. The House provision was to put the police court, with all its surroundings, its people, its witnesses, and the drunken and disorderly portion of mankind, in close contact with the offices of the register of wills and the recorder of deeds. Those are the offices which experience shows should always be near the court-house. All over the country where they can have those offices so located they are in the court-house, and they are now in this court-house at Judiciary Square.

I myself remember cases of ejectment when as many as 50 or 100 immense folios of records would be brought into the court in the trial of a case, and they were brought from downstairs all into the court room of trial. Ejectment cases for about six or eight years were very numerous in this District, because after the early settlement of Washington people did not attend to the purchase of lots that had grown valueless, squatters came upon them, and then men organized here to get titles to large parts of the city; and when the war came squatters who were black, squatters who followed the Army, occupied these lands, and the ejectment suits in this jurisdiction were out of all proportion to the age of the settlement of the city of Washington.

Now, it would have been required under this bill that deeds should be brought into the courts from another part of town if the House provision prevailed, and the courts could be delayed in the trial of the cases of ejectment and trespass that frequently require the records of deeds, and it was impracticable in every way.

Then, besides, the judges of probate, with other matters of contest with respect to wills, require all of the papers to be brought from the office of the register of wills into the courts almost daily, and to separate the two was against the public interest, was a great inconvenience, and, had it been done by the House provision, could not have continued for five years. It would have been changed perhaps next year by public clamor. It would have been insufferable.

Then widows and orphan daughters and mothers are required to go to a probate office very frequently at a time when the distress of mind is the greatest and when they, being veiled and desiring to be hidden from general observation, and of course with a crowd of people, would have been compelled to go through the crowded corridors of the police courts to go to probate the will of a husband or a father or son, or to go there as legatees in settlement of those estates.

There could be no greater incongruity than placing in juxtaposition the police court and the probate court and taking the records of deeds and of testamentary papers for a century and a quarter away from offices close to the courts where they belong. To cap the climax, after mixing the police court with these two it was proposed to put in a further provision that in the basement there should be a heating and lighting plant and a repair shop for the District of Columbia—in the same building where the probate court must have hearings in respect of the probate of testamentary papers, which should be filed in offices where they can be accessible for the information of the court. There would be the clatter of wheels and axes and hammers in repair shops all the while going on downstairs in the District repair shop, while upstairs in the probate court wills were being probated or a widow was trying to be heard, with her children gathered around her. I think no special credit is due the Senate committee for striking out that provision, for they could do no less, but it is to its credit to put this provision for a separate police court in now.

I know what the facts are, for I speak from a personal observation of several years. I hope the Senator from Iowa will insist on the provision reported by the Senate committee being retained and upon keeping out the incongruous and very bad arrangement stated in the House bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 64, line 19, to increase the appropriation to defray the expenses attending the execution of writs de lunatico inquirendo and commitments thereunder, etc., from $600 to $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will ask the Senator from Iowa to allow me to call up at this time the unobjected pension bills on the Calendar, which we were unable to complete yesterday.

Mr. ALLISON. Of course it will be impossible to finish the District appropriation bill to-day; and I will yield to the Senator from North Dakota at this time for the purpose indicated by him.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. C. R. McKENNEY, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolutions:

A bill (S. 270) authorizing the Winnipeg, Yankton and Gulf Railroad Company to construct a combined railroad, wagon, and foot-passenger bridge across the Missouri River at or near the city of Yankton, S. Dak.;

A bill (S. 3430) to authorize the Buckhannon and Northern Railroad Company, a corporation under the laws of the State of West Virginia, to build a bridge across the Monongahela River near the town of Rivesville, in the State of West Virginia;

A joint resolution (S. R. 28) authorizing the printing of additional copies of Agricultural Bulletin No. 124, being a report on irrigation in Utah; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 34) authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the Military Academy at West Point Alfonso Zelaya, of Nicaragua.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12684) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes; asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. CURTIS, and Mr. STEPHENS of Texas managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 8889) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Monongahela River, in the State of Pennsylvania, by the Eastern Railroad Company;" and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12684) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes, and asking for a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. STEWART. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives and agree to the conference asked for by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. STEWART, Mr. PLATT of Connecticut, and Mr. DUBOIS were appointed.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION AND MILITARY RECORD BILLS.

Mr. McCUMBER. I now ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the unobjected pension bills on the Calendar, and also to consider bills correcting military records.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota asks unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of unobjected pension bills on the Calendar and bills correcting military records reported from the Committee on Military Affairs. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Chair would suggest to the Senator from North Dakota that the clerks at the desk would very much prefer to have the pension cases first considered and the military cases follow them, so as to avoid confusion.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is perfectly satisfactory, Mr. President. We shall have time enough to consider all of the cases.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I wish to inquire, as there was considerable legislation in regard to pensions yesterday, whether a bill to pension some Indian scouts was then passed?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; that would not come under this order.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I wanted to look at that bill. I do not know that I have any objection to it. I merely wanted to inquire whether it had been passed over for future action or whether it had been passed.

Mr. McCUMBER. Those cases do not come under the rule under which we are now acting.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Very well.

GEORGE M. GIBBONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. One pension bill was passed over yesterday. What action does the Senator desire in reference to that?

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT] is now present. The bill was passed over on account of his absence yesterday.

Mr. SCOTT. What is the bill?

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 4252) granting an increase of pension to George M. Gibbons.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES C. FISHER.

The bill (H. R. 11939) granting an increase of pension to Charles C. Fisher, alias John C. Pickerell, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Charles C. Fisher, alias John C. Pickerell, late of U. S. S. Grampus, Great Western, and Champion, United States Navy, and to pay him a pension of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN D. VERNAY.

Mr. CULLOM. I believe the Calendar of unobjected pension bills is now concluded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. But the Calendar of bills to correct military records comes up next.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask consent to call up at this time the bill (S. 402) for the relief of James D. Vernay. It is to correct the records and reinstate First Lieut. and Bvt. Capt. James D. Vernay in the Army.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the unanimous-consent agreement those bills are to be taken up in their order.

Mr. CULLOM. I know that; but I am obliged to leave the Senate Chamber for a few moments, and I should like to have this bill taken up now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill named by him. Is there objection?

Mr. KEAN. I do not think this bill should be taken up under the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. CULLOM. I am now asking unanimous consent.

Mr. KEAN. It was not contemplated under the agreement that we were to consider bills of this character.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not know exactly what the agreement was.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Jersey object?

Mr. KEAN. I think the bill had better go over.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] knows all about this case. It comes from the Military Committee. The beneficiary is very poor, and I think the bill ought to be considered.

Mr. KEAN. I do not make any objection on the merits of the bill——

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read as it is proposed to be amended.

Mr. CULLOM. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been read. Is there objection to its consideration?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments. The amendments were, in line 7, before the word "in," to strike out "captain mounted" and insert "first lieutenant;" in the same line, after the words "United States," to strike out "(to whom a Congressional medal of honor was awarded for most distinguished gallantry in action);" in line 10, before the word "retired," to strike out "list of:" in the same line, before the word "of," to strike out the word "officers" and insert "list;" in line 12, before the word "that," to strike out the word "at" and insert "of;" in the same line, after the word "grade," to strike out "on account of severe wounds received in battle, creating a total disability which he is under," and insert "the retired list being thereby increased in number to that extent;" and on page 2, line 3, after the word "however," to strike out "That he shall receive no pay for the period he was out of the service" and insert:

That no pay or allowances shall become due or payable to this officer since his dismissal from the Army by sentence of court-martial up to the passage of this act.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now let the bill be read as it will read if the amendments are agreed to.

The Secretary read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and is hereby, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint James D. Vernay, late first lieutenant and brevet captain, United States Army, a first lieutenant in the Army of the United States; and when so appointed he shall be placed upon the retired list of the Army, unlimited, with the pay and emoluments of a retired officer of that grade, the retired list being thereby increased in number to that extent: Provided, however, That no pay or allowances shall become due or payable to this officer since his dismissal from the Army by sentence of court-martial up to the passage of this act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendments reported by the Committee on Military Affairs.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THEODORE F. NORTHROP.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the first military desertion bill.

The bill (S. 1654) for the relief of Theodore F. Northrop was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that Theodore F. Northrop, late first lieutenant, Second Regiment New York Cavalry Volunteers, shall be held and considered to have been a captain of cavalry, in command of scouts in the army of General Sherman, from September 10, 1864, to May 22, 1865.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CARL W. ALBRECHT.

The bill (S. 4405) to correct the military record of Carl W. Albrecht was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of War to correct the military record of Carl W. Albrecht, who was enrolled into the service of the United States in Company H, Thirteenth Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, April 29, 1898, as Charles Albrecht, and whose name stands on the roll as Charles Albrecht.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM A. HAMMOND.

The Secretary read the title of the bill (S. 1665) to amend the act approved March 15, 1878, entitled "An act for the relief of William A. Hammond, late Surgeon-General of the Army."

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Does the bill come under the agreement?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does not come under the agreement.

Mr. KEAN. It does not.

GEORGE H. WHITE.

The bill (S. 3938) for the relief of George H. White was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of War to revoke and set aside so much of General Orders as approved the finding and sentence of the general court-martial dismissing Capt. George H. White, Nineteenth Regiment Michigan Infantry Volunteers, and to issue to him a certificate of discharge as of date March 1, 1863.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MAJ. JOHN MURPHY.

The bill (S. 3503) to amend the record of Maj. John Murphy was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that John Murphy, late major of the Fifty-eighth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as of date October 8, 1865.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to insert at the end of the bill the following:

Provided, That no pay, bounty, or allowance shall accrue by virtue of the passage of this act.

That has been omitted. It was an oversight in the committee, or the bill would not have been reported without the addition of those words.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TALTON T. DAVIS.

The bill (S. 4343) for the relief of Talton T. Davis was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to correct the military record of Talton T. Davis, of Marion, Kans., late of Company H, Twenty-first Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and to grant him an honorable discharge as of date October 8, 1862: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or allowances shall be allowed by reason of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JACOB NIEBELS.

The bill (S. 716) granting an honorable discharge to Jacob Neibles was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments, in line 5, after the name "Jacob," to strike out "Neibles" and insert "Niebels;" and in line 6, after the word "Infantry," to insert "Provided, That no pay, bounty, or emoluments shall accrue by virtue of the passage of this act;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to correct the military record of and grant an honorable discharge to Jacob Niebels, late of Company E, Fourth Regiment Minnesota Volunteer Infantry: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or emoluments shall accrue by virtue of the passage of this act.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an honorable discharge to Jacob Niebels."

JAMES B. BOYD.

The bill (S. 2950) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of James B. Boyd was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in line 9, after the word "sixty-five," to insert the following proviso: "Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emolument shall accrue by virtue of the passage of this act:" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion standing against the name of James B. Boyd, late of Battery I, Fourth United States Artillery, to amend his military record accordingly, and to grant to said James B. Boyd an honorable discharge as of date November 23, 1865: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emolument shall accrue by virtue of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JACOB M'DOWELL.

The bill (S. 2330) to correct the military record of Jacob McDowell was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in line 7, after the word "service," to insert:

As of date February 26, 1865: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall accrue by virtue of the passage of this act.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to correct the military record of Jacob McDowell, late captain of Company K, One hundred and sixtieth New York Volunteer Infantry, and issue to him an honorable discharge from said service as of date February 26, 1865: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall accrue by virtue of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eight minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 3 o'clock and 3 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, March 28, 1904, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, March 26, 1904.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read, corrected, and approved.

APPOINTMENT OF BOARD OF MANAGERS OF THE NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to submit the following resolution, with the unanimous report of the committee, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 136) for appointment of members of Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

Resolved, etc., That Martin T. McMahon, of New York; John M. Holley, of Wisconsin; William Warner, of Missouri; William R. Shafter, of California; Henry E. Palmer, of Nebraska; and Franklin Murphy, of New Jersey, be, and the same are hereby, appointed as members of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers of the United States—Gen. Martin T. McMahon to succeed himself, his term of service expiring April 21, 1904; William Warner to fill a vacancy caused by the resignation of Col. Sidney G. Cooke, whose term of service expires April 21, 1906; Gen. William R. Shafter to succeed Maj. William H. Bonsall, whose term of service expires April 21, 1904; Capt. Henry E. Palmer to succeed himself, his present term of service expiring April 21, 1904; Franklin Murphy to fill a vacancy caused by the death of Gen. Alfred L. Pearson, whose term of service expires April 21, 1906.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HULL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

ALFONSO ZELAYA, OF NICARAGUA.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. R. 34) authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the Military Academy at West Point Alfonso Zelaya, of Nicaragua.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to permit Alfonso Zelaya, of Nicaragua, to receive instruction at the Military Academy at West Point: Provided, That no expense shall be caused to the United States thereby: And provided further, That in the case of the said Alfonso Zelaya the provisions of sections 1320 and 1321 of the Revised Statutes shall be suspended.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HULL. Just a simple word in explanation.

Mr. MADDOX. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. HULL. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. MADDOX. I have only reserved the right of objection. I want an explanation of what this is.

Mr. HULL. This is the usual resolution which is passed by Congress when any of our sister republics make the request of the State Department for the privilege, at their own expense, of sending a cadet to West Point. The State Department refers this matter to the Senate and House in a letter that is submitted with the report, asking that the usual courtesy be given Nicaragua that has heretofore been given to other South American republics. They pay all the expense of the cadet. They can not send one unless this resolution should pass.

Mr. MADDOX. Will the gentleman state how many South American republics now have this privilege?

Mr. HULL. I think there are only two there now. There are always one or two cadets from some of the South American republics who get into the Academy in this way, and unless Congress suspends the provisions of the law it will be impossible for this one to be admitted.

Mr. MADDOX. Where is this one from?

Mr. HULL. He is from Nicaragua.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I do not like to object, and I do not know that I will object—I never have to any reasonable request of the gentleman from Iowa; I have never felt called upon to do so—but it is a little remarkable, to say the least of it, that we grant the privilege to some one—a foreigner—when a citizen of our own States, or anybody in the United States, is not permitted to have his son appointed to West Point except in the regular way, no matter how much he might be willing to pay for it. I will not object to this one, but I feel very much inclined to do so.

Mr. HULL. I wish to say to the gentleman that I have no interest in this matter. It is a courtesy we have refused no South American republic that ever requested it. And in connection with the privilege of educating students from various parts of the United States, every Member of Congress has the privilege of appointing cadets, besides the large number that are appointed at large by the President.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I want to suggest to the gentleman, with this as a precedent and following this theory, we would admit, I presume, all that would apply from any South American republic to get a military training, under which in the event of war we would be furnishing a power against ourselves. Now, I want to see just how much this right is going to be abused.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I have no particular fear of any South American Republic, with one cadet at West Point, so outstripping the United States of America in military prowess that we will ever suffer any military inconvenience therefrom.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. We want to know how much it will carry and how many applicants will be allowed there.

Mr. HULL. They can have but one from any republic at one time. Congress would not consent to more.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. How many have been granted, may I ask the gentleman, in the last ten or fifteen years?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Iowa permit me to submit a suggestion?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. SLAYDEN. This is a courtesy which has been extended from time to time to various governments. It is one which has never been abused, and there has been nothing suggested which would indicate in the mind of the most timorous that there is danger to be expected from the education in a military way of young men of South American republics at the Military Academy at West Point.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. As bearing upon the point, I asked the question to know how many have been educated there in the last ten or twenty years.

Mr. HULL. I will say to the gentleman from Indiana I am just informed by a gentleman on my right that the last one from Nicaragua graduated from the class in 1894. Of course it would require an act of Congress——

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I mean in reference to young men from South America.

Mr. HULL. We have one or two of them——

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I mean in the last ten or fifteen years.

Mr. HULL. I have not gone over all that, but I think in the last ten or fifteen years there have been six or eight.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LACEY. I will ask my friend if the principal officer now in the Japanese fleet was not educated at Annapolis at the expense of the Government?

Mr. HULL. No; not at the expense of the Government, because all his expenses were paid by his own Government.

Mr. LACEY. But his education is bearing fruit now in the East.

Mr. HULL. Very well; that is a question for Congress to pass upon.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HULL, a motion to reconsider the votes by which both resolutions were passed was laid on the table.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE, DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES, EASTERN DISTRICT OF PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3015) to provide for an additional judge of the district court of the United States for the eastern district of Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following Senate bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint an additional judge of the district court of the United States for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, who shall reside in said district and who shall possess the same powers, perform the same duties, and receive the same salary as the present district judge of said district.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PALMER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, under the order of the House certain bills on the Private Calendar are in order to-day. I ask unanimous consent that on the day following the disposition of the sundry civil appropriation bill, immediately after the reading of the Journal, the matters which are in order to-day shall be then in order for consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that on the day immediately following the passage of the sundry civil appropriation bill bills on the Private Calendar under the order pertaining to pension bills shall be in order. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

GRANTING RIGHT TO DAVENPORT WATER POWER COMPANY IN THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER, IN SCOTT COUNTY, IOWA.

Mr. WADE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 4142.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following Senate bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the assent of Congress is hereby given to the Davenport Water Power Company, a corporation created and organized under the laws of the State of Iowa, its successors and assigns, to erect, construct, operate, and maintain a canal along the north bank of the Mississippi River between Leclaire and Davenport, in Scott County, in the State of Iowa, to erect, construct, operate, and maintain a power station thereon, and to project, erect, construct, operate, and maintain such dams and other works as may be necessary within said limits for the development of water power and the generation, use, and transmission therefrom of electric energy and power at, in, and upon the Rock Island Rapids of the Mississippi River: Provided, That the said canal and appurtenant works shall be so designed, constructed, and operated as not to interfere in any way with the safe and convenient navigation of steamboats and other vessels or of rafts and barges over the Rock Island Rapids at any stage of water; and the expense of any reconstruction or extension of or addition to existing works for the improvement of navigation on the said Rock Island Rapids which may be found necessary, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, on account of the construction, maintenance, or operation of the said cana and appurtenant works, shall be borne by the said company, its successors, or assigns, under conditions to be prescribed by the Secretary of War: And provided further, That detailed plans for the construction and operation of the said canal and appurtenant works shall be submitted to and approved by the Secretary of War before the commencement of the construction of any portion of the said works; and that after the approval of the said plans no deviation therefrom shall be made without the prior approval by the Secretary of War of the said deviation: And provided further, That the said works and appurtenances shall be so designed, constructed, and operated as not to overflow or otherwise damage the lands and other property of the United States at Rock Island Arsenal, or injure or diminish the water power of the United States at the said arsenal, or the water power of any person, firm, or corporation having hydraulic works already constructed: And provided further, That before entering upon the construction of the said works, compensation shall be made to any person, firm, or corporation whose lands or other property may be taken, overflowed, or otherwise damaged by the construction, maintenance, and operation of the said works, in accordance with the laws of the State where such lands or other property may be situate.

SEC. 2. That the withdrawal of water from the Mississippi River and the discharge of water into the said river, for the purpose of operating the said canal and appurtenant works, shall be under the direction and control of the Secretary of War, and shall at no time be such as to impede or interfere with the safe and convenient navigation of the said river by means of steamboats or other vessels, or by rafts and barges, or to injure or diminish the water power of the United States at Rock Island Arsenal, or the water power of any person, firm, or corporation having hydraulic works already constructed: Provided, That if any litigation arises from the construction, operation, or maintenance of the said works, or from the obstruction of any part of the Mississippi River by the said works or any portion thereof, cases may be tr ed in the proper courts as now provided for that purpose in the States of Illinois and Iowa and the courts of the United States: And provided further, That suitable fishways shall be constructed and maintained by the said company, its successors and assigns, at such of the dams and in such manner as may be required from time to time by the United States Fish Commission.

SEC. 3. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the works herein authorized be not commenced within three years and completed within six years from the date hereof.

SEC. 4. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and being read the third time, was passed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the title will be amended.

On motion of Mr. WADE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS MONONGAHELA RIVER, NEAR RIVESVILLE, W. VA.

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3430) to authorize the Buckhannon and Northern Railroad Company, a corporation under the laws of the State of West Virginia, to build a bridge across the Monongahela River, near the town of Rivesville, in the State of West Virginia.

The Clerk read the bill at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I want to make a statement in reference to this bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Has it received the approval of the War Department?

Mr. DAYTON. It has. I want to say to the House that this bill was introduced in the House as House bill 9871, sent to the War Department, and received its approval with certain amendments, and was reported favorably by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. A similar bill was introduced in the Senate, was there reported upon under a letter from the Secretary of War approving it, and was passed. The bill which I ask the consideration of at this time is the Senate bill which has passed. It is identical with the one reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. I therefore move that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of the Senate bill, and I ask that it may be put upon its passage in lieu of the House bill, and that the House bill may lie on the table.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DAYTON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The bill H. R. 9871 was laid on the table.

TO OPEN FOR SETTLEMENT CERTAIN LANDS IN OKLAHOMA.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9) to open for settlement 505,000 acres of land in Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indian reservations in Oklahoma Territory.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all of that part of article 3 of section 6 of the act of Congress of date June 6, 1900, entitled "An act to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Indians of the Fort Hall Indian Reservation, in Idaho," and making appropriations to carry the same into effect, which reads as follows, to wit: "That in addition to the allotment of lands to said Indians as provided for in this agreement the Secretary of the Interior shall set aside for the use in common for said Indian tribes 480,000 acres of grazing land, to be selected by the Secretary of the Interior, either in one or more tracts, as will best subserve the interests of said Indians," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

SEC. 2. That the 480,000 acres of land set apart in the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indian reservations, in Oklahoma Territory, by the Secretary of the Interior, referred to and mentioned in section 1 of this act, and the 25,000 acres of land set apart as a wood reservation in the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indian reservations, in Oklahoma Territory, by the Secretary of the Interior shall be opened to settlement by proclamation of the President of the United States within three months from the passage of this act and be disposed of at public auction to the highest bidder for cash: Provided, That no one person shall be permitted to purchase more than 160 acres, under the rules and regulations adopted by the Secretary of the Interior: And provided further, That the money arising from the sale of said lands shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States and placed to the credit of said tribes of Indians, and said deposit of money shall draw 5 per cent interest per annum; and the principal and interest of said deposit shall be expended for the benefit of said Indians in such manner as Congress may direct: And it is also provided, That such sales shall be subject to any leases made for agricultural purposes prior to the passage of this act, the rentals accruing after such sale to belong to the purchasers under this act.

SEC. 3. That said lands shall be sold for not less than $1.50 per acre, and shall be sold upon the following terms: One-fift of the price bid therefor to be paid at the time the bid is made, and the balance of the purchase price of said land to be paid in five equal annual installments in advance. And in case any purchaser fails to make such annual payment promptly when due, all rights in and to the land covered by his or her purchase shall at once cease, and any payments theretofore made shall be forfeited. And no title to said land shall inure to the purchaser, nor any patent of the United States issue to the purchaser until the purchaser shall have resided upon and improved said land for the full term of five years, without any commutation of time, and shall have in all respects complied with the terms and provisions of the homestead laws of the United States: Provided, That such purchaser shall prove up within six years from the date of sale; that aliens who have declared their intention to become citizens of the United States may become purchasers under this act, but before proving up and acquiring title must take out their full naturalization papers.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby vested with full power and authority to make such rules and regulations as to the time of notice, manner of sale, and other matters incident to the carrying out of the provisions of this act as he may deem necessary.

The following amendments reported by the committee were read:

In line 11, page 2, strike out the words "at public auction to the highest bidder for cash" and insert in lieu thereof the words "upon sealed bids or at public auction, at the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, to the highest bidder."

After the word "Interior," in line 14, page 2, add the following: "And such purchaser must be duly qualified to make entry under the general homestead laws."

In line 6, page 3, strike out the word "promptly."

In line 15, page 3, strike out the words "prove up" and insert in lieu thereof the words "make final proof."

In line 19, page 3, strike out the word "full" and insert in lieu thereof the word "final."

In line 18, page 2, strike out the word "five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "four."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. STEPHENS of Texas, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI RIVER AT YANKTON, S. DAK.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 270) authorizing the Winnipeg, Yankton and Gulf Railroad Company to construct a combined railroad, wagon, and foot-passenger bridge across the Missouri River at or near the city of Yankton, S. Dak.

The Clerk read the bill at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; was read the third time, and passed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Indian appropriation bill, to nonconcur in the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the House nonconcur in all the Senate amendments to the Indian appropriation bill and ask for a conference. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. CURTIS, and Mr. STEPHENS of Texas.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the order of business which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That on the day following the day the Committee on Invalid Pensions have had assigned to it by the special order of the House made March 26, 1904, House bill 9548 shall be made the special order after the reading and approval of the Journal.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Is that a request for the consideration of one bill?

Mr. MAHON. The bill is now in the second reading.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Why does not the gentleman ask for time to be given the War Claims Committee?

Mr. MAHON. This is the bill making appropriations for the findings of the Court of Claims under the Bowman Act.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The omnibus bill?

Mr. MAHON. Yes; I do not think it will take over half an hour to pass it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE CONNECTICUT RIVER.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4672) to authorize the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad Company to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Connecticut River.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BRANDEGEE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

DISTRICT BUSINESS.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent that it may be in order to call up District business one week from Monday next, instead of on Monday next, which is the regular day. I do this on account of the appropriation bill which is to be considered to-day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to call up District business one week from Monday next. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MANUFACTURE, DISTRIBUTION, AND SUPPLY OF ELECTRIC LIGHT AND POWER IN THE TERRITORY OF HAWAII.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 7266, which I will send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following bill, of which the Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill to ratify, approve, and confirm an act duly enacted by the legislature of the Territory of Hawaii to authorize and provide for the manufacture, distribution, and supply of electric light and power on the island of Oahu, Territory of Hawaii.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I object to the consideration of that bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama objects.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, may I not ask the gentleman to withhold his objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly, I will, if the gentleman wants to make an explanation.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman withdraws his objection, I shall renew it at this time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, I do not withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York objects.

DONATING CERTAIN GUN TO GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC POST AT NELSONVILLE, OHIO.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 14110) to authorize the donation of a certain unused and obsolete gun now at Chickamauga Park, Ga., to Phil Kearny Post of the Grand Army of the Republic, at Nelsonville, Ohio, which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to donate one 6-pounder smoothbore bronze gun of 3⅔ inches caliber, now at Chickamauga Park, Ga., which was issued to the commissioners of the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park under the provisions of the act of Congress approved August 5, 1892 (vol. 27, Stat. L., p. 376), and is not now needed by the Commission, to the Phil Kearny Post of the Grand Army of the Republic, Nelsonville, Ohio.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which the Clerk has reported. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, I think I heard in the reading of that bill something with reference to Chickamauga Park. I will ask the gentleman from Ohio to explain.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, a number of these small guns were donated by Congress for the adornment of Chickamauga National Park. They were so set out as to have two guns together. This is an odd gun, and a report is made by the commissioners of the park that they do not want the gun.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GROSVENOR, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

DONATION OF LOTS IN FORT DALLES MILITARY ADDITION TO THE DALLES, OREG.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9985) providing for the donation of lots A, B, K, and L, in block 39, in Fort Dalles military addition to The Dalles, Oreg., as shown on the plat of the city of The Dalles and surroundings, and filed in the local land office at The Dalles, Oreg., to the Oregon Historical Society, which I shall send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue to the Oregon Historical Society, an organization duly incorporated under the laws of the State of Oregon December 17, 1898, a patent in the name of the United States for lots marked "A," "B," "K," and "L," in block 39, in Fort Dalles military addition to The Dalles, in the State of Oregon, as shown on the plat of the city of The Dalles and surroundings, now on file in The Dalles land office, such patent to issue only after the said Oregon Historical Society shall have filed with the Secretary of the Interior proper and satisfactory proofs of its incorporation. And such patent to be conditioned that the said lots and buildings thereon shall be held and maintained solely for historical purposes, with a reservation that the Secretary of the Interior shall be empowered to declare a forfeiture to the United States whenever he shall find the same has been converted to other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

ALLEGHENY COLLEGE, MEADVILLE, PA.

Mr. BATES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10208) for the relief of Allegheny College, of Meadville, Pa., which I shall send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That on account of the burning of one of the buildings of Allegheny College, Meadville, Pa., on Friday, December 18, 1882, known as Culver Hall, whereby a shortage of $358.23 was incurred to ordnance and ordnance stores issued to said college under its bond, dated March 2, 1877, the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to relieve said Allegheny College, at Meadville, Pa., from any further money responsibility under said bond not exceeding the above-named amount.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill just reported. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BATES, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ALLOTMENT OF DOCUMENTS.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10866) to amend section 68 of volume 28 of the United States Statutes at Large with an amendment, which I shall send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 68 of volume 28 of the United States Statutes at Large be, and the same is hereby, amended so that it shall read as follows:

"Whenever in the division among Senators, Representatives, and Delegates of documents printed for the use of Congress there shall be an apportionment to each or either House in round numbers, the Public Printer shall not deliver the full number so accredited at the respective folding rooms, but only the largest multiple of the number constituting the full membership of each or either House, including the Secretary and Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, and Clerk, Sergeant-at-Arms, and Doorkeeper of the House, which shall be contained in the round numbers thus accredited to each or either House, so that the number delivered shall divide evenly and without remainder among the members of the House to which they are delivered; and the remainder of the documents thus resulting shall be turned over to the superintendent of documents, to be distributed by him, first, to public and school libraries for the purpose of completing broken sets; second, to public and school libraries that have not been supplied with any portions of such sets, and, lastly, by sale to other persons; said libraries to be named to him by Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress; and in this distribution the superintendent of documents shall see that as far as practicable an equal allowance is made to each Senator, Representative, and Delegate."

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

In line 3, page 1, after the word "sixty-eight," insert the words "chapter twenty-three," and amend the title.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, this is the same bill that was read several days ago, and objection was made to it by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MADDOX] because he desired an explanation of the amendment to the statute. I would say in explanation that it simply amends the law now in operation relative to the distribution of public documents and gives the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House a share in the distribution, the same as the Clerk of the House, and the Sergeant-at-Arms and Secretary of the Senate. This allotment was made up to the Fifty-first Congress, when, because of a lapse in conduct of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House, it was taken from him.

Mr. MADDOX. If the gentleman will permit me, I will state to him that I have examined the matter, and I have no objection to it, as I understand it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the title will be amended.

IRRIGATION IN UTAH.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for present consideration of the joint resolution which I send to the desk.

The joint resolution (S. R. 28) authorizing the printing of additional copies of Agricultural Bulletin No. 124, being the report on irrigation in Utah, was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there shall be printed from the stereotype plates of the Report of Irrigation Investigation in Utah, under the direction of Edward Mead, chief of irrigation investigation, Office of Experiment Stations, Department of Agriculture, 4,000 copies, of which 400 shall be for the use of the Senate, 600 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 3,000 for the use of the Department of Agriculture.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution; which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRODUCTION OF PRECIOUS METALS, ETC.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for present consideration of the concurrent resolution of the House which I send to the Clerk.

The Clerk read concurrent resolution No. 32, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 6,000 additional copies of the Report of the Director of the Mint on the Production of the Precious Metals for the calendar year 1902, bound in cloth and wrapped; 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, 1,000 for the use of the Senate, and 3,000 for the use of the Director of the Mint.

Resolved, That there also be printed 8,000 additional copies of the Report of the Director of the Mint Covering the Operations of the Mints and Assay Offices of the United States for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1903, to be bound in cloth and wrapped, 3,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, 2,000 for the use of the Senate, and 3,000 for the use of the Director of the Mint.

The amendments proposed by the Committee on Printing were as follows:

In line 2 strike out the word "six" and insert the word "three."
Strike out all after the word "wrapped," in line 5, down to and including the word "thousand," in line 7.
Strike out the word "eight," in line 9, and insert the word "three."
Strike out all after the word "wrapped," in line 13, down to and including the word "thousand," in line 16.
So that the resolution as amended will read as follows:
"Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 3,000 additional copies of the Report of the Director of the Mint on the Production of the Precious Metals for the calendar year 1902, bound in cloth and wrapped, for the use of the Director of the Mint.
"Resolved, That there also be printed 3,000 additional copies of the Report of the Director of the Mint Covering the Operations of the Mints and Assay Offices of the United States for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1903, to be bound in cloth and wrapped, for the use of the Director of the Mint."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

Mr. MADDOX. I wish to inquire how many copies of these documents are to be printed under the resolution as now proposed to be amended, and how they are to be distributed?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. This resolution provides for the printing of 6,000 copies of these documents—3,000 of each report.

Mr. MADDOX. What I want to understand more particularly is why are we proposing to give so many of these copies to the Director of the Mint.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. This resolution proposes the printing of an additional edition. The copies of the previous edition and of previous reports intended for the Director of the Mint have long since been exhausted, while an examination of the condition of affairs in the folding room discloses the fact that the allotment to the credit of Members and Senators has by no means been exhausted. We therefore think it useless to have this distribution include the House and the Senate.

Mr. MADDOX. Does this provide for the usual distribution?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. The usual distribution was made to the Senate and House on previous editions of these reports, but the Congressional allotment was not largely distributed.

Mr. MADDOX. What is the usual proportion of these documents? The same proportion ought to be maintained now.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Allow me to repeat that this is an additional edition, for distribution by the Director of the Mint, whose supply of these documents is exhausted.

Mr. MADDOX. But it strikes me that the same proportion ought to be observed in the distribution of this additional edition.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. That would have been provided for in the resolution by the committee had not an examination of affairs in the folding room demonstrated that to give an allotment to Members of the Senate and House would have been simply wasting the documents.

Mr. MADDOX. I reckon not; we could distribute them all right. If I knew the proportions here proposed, I would move to amend.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. If the gentleman desires any additional numbers of the publication, he can secure them by making a requisition on the Director of the Mint.

Mr. MADDOX. I would rather have the documents entered up to my own account here at the folding room.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. The distribution provided in this resolution was adopted simply in the interest of economy and to provide against wastefulness.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Will the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MADDOX] allow me a word? As I understand, under the general printing law the Director of the Mint is allowed 1,000 copies of each of these reports for his use. He finds that the demand for each of these reports is greater than the number allowed to him, and annually he has come to Congress asking authority for the printing of this additional number. The copies already printed have been distributed in the ordinary proportions among members of the House and Senate and the Director of the Mint. It is found that the full number allotted to Senators and Members has not been called for, and the amendment to this resolution has been occasioned by that fact. As I understand, the resolution as now presented makes no allotment to Senators and Members, but authorizes the printing of 3,000 copies of each of these reports for the use of the Director of the Mint. I ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS] whether I am right about that?

Mr. MADDOX. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Printing if it is the purpose of that committee to supply all of these Departments that wish these books with a sufficient number to fill all demands that may be made upon them from the outside?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I would say to the gentleman that this is in line with the recommendation of the committee in two previous Congresses.

Mr. MADDOX. I understand them to say this is an addition to the original bill that has been passed for this purpose.

Mr. SOUTHARD. No.

Mr. MADDOX. Why not stand on the original proposition?

Mr. SOUTHARD. A resolution was introduced in the Fifty-seventh Congress and passed the House, as I understand it, but failed to pass the Senate, and the time of the large or frequent call for this report having passed, it is altogether likely that the number ordinarily needed by the House and Senate will not be required.

Mr. MADDOX. I do not think it is right, but I am not going to object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS, a motion to reconsider the votes by which the several propositions were agreed to was laid on the table.

WESTERN ALASKA CONSTRUCTION COMPANY'S RAILROAD.

Mr. LOVERING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 13740) for the relief of the Western Alaska Construction Company's railroad.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time of the Western Alaska Construction Company to comply with the provisions of sections 4 and 5 of chapter 239 of the laws of the United States, entitled "An act extending the homestead laws and providing for the right of way for railroads in the district of Alaska, and for other purposes," approved May 14, 1898, in acquiring and completing its railroad now under construction in Alaska, is hereby extended as follows:

First. That time to file the map and profile of definite location of its first section of at least 20 miles with the register of the land office in the district of Alaska, as provided in said sections 4 and 5, is hereby extended to and including the 31st of December, 1904.

Second. The time to complete the first section of at least 20 miles of its railroad, as provided in said section 5, is hereby extended to and including within one year after the filing and approval of the definite location of said section of said railroad as in said chapter and by this act it is provided; and such railroad company shall be entitled to all the benefits conferred upon it by the provisions of such act upon its due compliance with all the provisions thereof, excepting only the provisions thereof relating to the filing of the map and profile of definite location of its first section of not less than 20 miles of its road within twelve months after filing with the Secretary of the Interior a preliminary actual survey and plat of its proposed route, as prescribed in said sections 4 and 5 of said act, and the provisions thereof relating to the completion of the said first section of its road within one year, as originally provided in section 5 of said act: Provided, That such railroad company shall file with the proper register of the land office for the district of Alaska a map and profile of the first section of its road of at least 20 miles on or before December 31, 1904, and shall complete such section of its said road within one year after such definite location has been approved by the Secretary of the Interior, as provided in said section 5 of said act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I should like to have the gentleman in charge of the bill make some explanation of it. It is a long bill, and we could not hear it read.

Mr. LOVERING. The Western Alaska Construction Company ask simply for the extension of time in which to build their railroad. There are only four months in the year in which they can work up there, and they have not had time to comply absolutely with the requirements of the Government in this respect. I would say that this bill has the entire approval of the Department of the Interior and the General Land Office and is unanimously reported by the committee.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Is the purpose of it simply to hold their road?

Mr. LOVERING. Oh, they have already constructed 10 miles of road and have the material on the spot to construct 40 miles. They are acting in perfect good faith.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. This is to prevent the forfeiture of their rights?

Mr. LOVERING. Yes.

Mr. LACEY. They should have built 20 miles last year to come within the provisions of the Alaska right-of-way act. They only built 10 miles. The season is very short there, only three or four months. The material is on the ground, and this gives them until next January to complete what they ought to have completed by last January. They are going on in good faith and have the material there and are constructing the road.

Mr. WYNN. I should like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts whether any extensions of time have been allowed before?

Mr. LOVERING. No.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

FORT WALLA WALLA MILITARY RESERVATION, WASH.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 12685) for the reappraisement and sale of the undisposed lands within the Fort Walla Walla Military Reservation, in the State of Washington.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the lands originally embraced within the Fort Walla Walla Military Reservation, in the State of Washington, remaining undisposed of shall be reappraised, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, by legal subdivisions, and the appraisers, in their report, shall note the character of each legal subdivision and state whether it is chiefly valuable for stone, mineral, timber, agricultural, or grazing purposes, and if any of the legal subdivisions of said land is improved the appraisers shall appraise separately the improvements on said land and the land independently of such improvements, and they shall describe generally the character of such improvements, and also report the names of the persons who made such improvements and the parties claiming to own the same.

SEC. 2. That upon the approval of such reappraisement by the Secretary of the Interior said lands shall be offered for sale to the highest bidder, for cash, at such times and under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may determine: Provided, That the land and improvements shall not be sold at less than the appraised value: Provided further, That if the highest bidder shall be the person who made the improvements upon such land, or his assigns, the appraised value of the improvements shall be deducted from his bid, and he shall be required to pay only the remainder to the United States, and if the highest bidder is some one other than the party who made such improvements, or his assigns, then the appraised value of the improvements shall be paid to such party, or his assigns, and the remainder to the United States, and the Secretary of the Interior must be satisfied that the improvements shall have been paid for, as herein provided, before patent is issued to the purchaser of any of said lands.

The following committee amendment was read:

Provided also, That this act shall not affect the lands in the existing Fort Walla Walla Military Reservation, area 619.57 acres.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDOX. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. LIVINGSTON. We should like to hear some explanation of this bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Speaker, this military reservation was set aside in 1859. It consisted then of about three sections of land, the post, the meadow, and the timber reserve. The post reserve is the land referred to in the last amendment to the bill, and there is still reserved something over 600 acres.

Subsequently the other two parts were turned back to the Interior Department for disposal, and Congress passed acts providing for the appraisement of them; but pending the enforcement of it Congress passed some legislation for the relief of persons who settled upon the land before it was set aside by Executive order as a military reservation, leaving a little over 400 acres still in the hands of the Interior Department.

In 1897 this land was appraised, with the improvements which were put there by four or five settlers who went onto the land about thirty years ago, after it had been set aside as a reservation, but who, owing to the unsettled condition of the country, believed that they would get title from the Government. When the land was appraised the improvements that these men had put upon it were included in the appraisement. If they were to acquire the title to the land under the appraisement heretofore provided for, they would have to pay for the land and also for the improvements that they themselves had put on it. That hardly looks fair, and this bill simply provides for the reappraisement of about 400 acres of land, according to the report of the Secretary of the Interior, appraising the land and the improvements separately. The provision is that if the purchaser, the highest bidder, is the owner of the improvements, he shall not have to pay the appraised value of his own improvements.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Suppose he does not get it. Does the other party pay for these improvements?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The other party pays for the improvements and he gets it, and the Government gets the value of the land. It is recommended by the Interior Department and has the unanimous report of the committee.

Mr. MADDOX. You say you have a unanimous report from the committee?

Mr. JONES of Washington. It is unanimously reported from the committee.

Mr. MADDOX. Was it referred to the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. JONES of Washington. It was referred to the Secretary of the Interior, and his report is printed in the report of the committee, and he suggests the last amendment put in the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JONES of Washington, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

HOUSE ELEVATOR CONDUCTORS.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report from the Committee on Accounts.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution No. 228.

Resolved, That the Committee on Accounts be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to provide for the payment to the following conductors of the House elevators in the Capitol the following sums, to wit: L. B. Cook, $200; George Winters, $200; M. F. O'Donnell, $200; S. A. Barnes, $160.47; R. E. Walker, $200, and J. K. Duncan, $200, being the difference between $1,100 and $1,200 per annum from July 1, 1902, to July 1, 1904, as has been customary in the past under the general deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the gentleman tell us something about this. There seems to be some discrimination made against these gentlemen who operate these elevators.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. The law gives the elevator men $1,200, but there is no appropriation made annually for that amount. This simply gives them an appropriation for the two years that this appropriation is not made for. It is a supplementary allowance, and has been done before by Congress. I have here the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD——

Mr. MADDOX. Do I understand you to say that the law gives it to them, and there is no appropriation?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Yes, sir.

Mr. MADDOX. And your committee is making the appropriation?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Yes, sir. There is an appropriation of $1,100 a year, but not of $1,200 for the purpose.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Speaker, I object until I can look into the matter.

Mr. MADDOX. But the gentleman says it is a privileged report. It is a matter that your committee ought to look after.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I do not think it is privileged.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. I will say to the gentleman from Indiana it is done every year, and I will read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD——

Mr. HEMENWAY. But I understand you are going back with this.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. We are only appropriating for the next year.

Mr. HEMENWAY. You are going ahead and not confining it to this fiscal year.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Yes, sir. It is for this fiscal year. If the gentleman will permit me, here is the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 15, 1902.

Mr. MADDOX. It is subject to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair misapprehended the terms of the resolution. The Chair supposed that it was a resolution directing the payment of this amount from the contingent fund. If so, it would be privileged. But it does not seem to be a resolution for that purpose. It is really a resolution directing the Committee on Appropriations to include in the deficiency appropriation bill this amount. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, if the Chair will withhold his decision with reference to the privileged character of the resolution just a moment, I would like to call his attention to the fact, having been on that committee for eight years at least, it has been customary for the Committee on Accounts to report such resolutions—not "directing." I have never known that expression to be used before. I was not present when this resolution was considered by the Committee on Accounts last Thursday, and therefore am not familiar with it; but it has been customary for the Committee on Accounts to report a resolution providing that the Committee on Appropriations shall make an appropriation for these matters, and until that has been done by law that the amount be paid out of the contingent fund. That is the usual way of reporting these resolutions.

The SPEAKER. That is not this resolution.

The following-named committees shall have leave to report at any time on the matters herein stated, viz: * * * the Committee on Accounts, on all matters of expenditure of the contingent fund of the House.

The Chair thinks this is not a privileged resolution. Is there objection to the present consideration?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I object until I can have time to look into it.

Mr. BARTLETT. I have not called the matter up. Your colleague on that side called it up.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. I hope the gentleman will not object to this. This is the usual appropriation made every year. This is the same appropriation that is made by the Senate, and for some time these men were cut off by the House from $1,200 to $1,100, and it has been provided in this way by the House for the last six or eight years. It is a small amount, and I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I do not know what you have got in there, and you seem to seek to provide for two fiscal years. That is unusual. I think we had better let it go over until I have an opportunity to see it.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. I ask the privilege of withdrawing the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia withdraws the resolution for the present.

D. S. PORTER.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations is authorized to provide in the general deficiency appropriation bill for the payment to D. S. Porter of the sum of $500 for extra and expert services to the Committee on Pensions as assistant clerk of said committee by detail.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken; and the resolution was agreed to.

HERMAN GAUSS.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations is authorized to provide in the general deficiency appropriation bill for the payment to Herman Gauss of the sum of $750 for extra and expert services to the Committee on Invalid Pensions as assistant clerk of said committee by detail.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to know something about that. I have heard the other case, as we have thrashed this over before in the House. Now, who is this man?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. He is a clerk from the Pension Bureau detailed to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Porter is detailed——

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. To the Pension Committee. There is a different man in the Committee on Invalid Pensions and the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MADDOX. Why do you give this one so much more than the other?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Because he has so much more work to do; so many more bills come before the Committee on Invalid Pensions than before the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MADDOX. Then is there any necessity for the clerk detailed to the Committee on Pensions at all?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman allow me a word? I will say that the gentleman referred to, Mr. Gauss, works more hours than any other clerk of any committee, the Appropriations Committee not excepted. It is expert work, it is careful work, and this is the usual resolution, and I certainly would be very sorry indeed not to see it pass.

Mr. MADDOX. If the gentleman will allow me, in the language of my old friend Cox, who was here, let us get this straight. Which committee is this man assigned to?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. To the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. MADDOX. Then the other was the clerk to the Committee on Pensions, which we have already passed?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Yes, sir.

Mr. MADDOX. I presume that is the one I ought to have objected to.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

F. R. LANSON.

Mr. SIBLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which I will ask to have reported at the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9135) for the relief of F. R. Lauson.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to issue to F. R. Lauson, of Tionesta, Pa., a duplicate of United States 4 per cent bond No. 100044, the original having been burned; but before issuing said duplicate bond the Secretary of the Treasury shall take from said Lauson a bond in the sum of $300, with two satisfactory sureties, conditioned to indemnify the United States against said original bond No. 100044, and all claims therein.

The amendments were read, as follows:

In line 4 change the word "Lauson" to "Lanson."
In line 5, after the word "centum," insert the word "coupon."
In line 6, after the word "four," insert the words "funded loan of 1907."
In line 8 change the word "Lauson" to "Lanson."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania which committee reports the bill?

Mr. SIBLEY. The Committee on Claims.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have always understood, Mr. Speaker, the custom of the House was that the Speaker did not recognize for unanimous consent bills coming from the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SIBLEY. I want to say to my friend, if he will pardon me for a moment, that this is not a claim. It merely authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to reissue a bond for one that was burned. It involves no claim upon the Government. The House passed it unanimously in the last Congress, but it did not get over to the Senate. It is an act of tardy justice. If it was a claim upon the Treasury I should think it would be clearly out of place, but as it is I trust the gentleman will not object.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I simply want to say this, that I do not see anything on the face of the claim of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that would warrant my being opposed to the bill. I believe, though, that each side of this House ought to be kept on an equal footing. If it is going to be a custom of the Speaker to allow Members to take bills from the Claims Committee, to select meritorious bills for unanimous consent, I think it is all right, but if we are not going to enter into proceedings whereby the Members can take up by unanimous consent bills coming from the Committee on Claims and Committee on War Claims, I do not think then any privileges ought to be shown; but as the Speaker has made this the first opening, and as he may hereafter recognize Democrats on this side to take up bills from the Committee on Claims, I will not object to this bill, and if we are going into it by unanimous consent——

The SPEAKER. The Chair has recognized the gentleman to ask unanimous consent. The Chair has a well-defined policy touching the laying of bills before the House for unanimous consent, and the Chair will say that policy does not cover the considering of claims so called by unanimous consent, so the Chair would decline to make a bargain about it. So far as recognizing both sides of the House is concerned, the Chair has not kept books; the Chair has been clearing off a good many matters by unanimous consent, at least for the consideration of the House. One side of the House has not been recognized as much as the other this morning because requests have not been made of the Chair. Is there objection?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended.

On motion of Mr. SIBLEY, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

RAILROAD BRIDGE ACROSS WABASH RIVER IN VIGO COUNTY, IND.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill H. R. 13480, an act to authorize the Southern Indiana Railway Company to construct a railroad bridge across the Wabash River in Vigo County, Ind., with Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

CRANE & CO., DALTON, MASS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 3256) entitled "An act directing the issue of a check in lieu of a lost check drawn by Thomas J. Hobbs, disbursing clerk, in favor of Crane & Co., of Dalton, Mass.," with Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent, the Committee on Military Affairs was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8473) to supplement an act of Congress approved February 27, 1899, entitled "An act for the relief of the Fourth Arkansas Mounted Infantry," and the same was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. HUNT for ten days on account of important business.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the sundry civil bill; and pending that motion I ask unanimous consent that the House agree to ten hours' general debate, five hours to be controlled by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BENTON] and five hours by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill, and pending that motion asks unanimous consent that general debate be had for ten hours, five hours to be controlled by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BENTON] and five hours by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY]. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. BURTON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House bill 14416, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 14416) making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, this is the last of the general appropriation bills to provide for the expense of the Government for the fiscal year beginning July 1 next.

It attracts more interest from the membership of the House and the country at large than does any one of the twelve regular appropriation bills, for the reason that it provides in great or small degree for every one of the many branches of the public service, and in particular for the many civic public works authorized by Congress and in progress in every State of the Union, such as public buildings, that afford to the masses of the people substantial evidence of the wealth and dignity of our great national Commonwealth; for light-houses and the establishment for their maintenance, to aid and encourage the development of our commerce at home and our commerce with the maritime nations of the earth—a system that is to-day the best and most generously equipped in the world, and the only one that is maintained by any country absolutely without direct charge or tribute upon or from commerce; for the continuance of work on the deep-water harbors and waterways of the country, work that is in progress under the continuing-contract system inaugurated by the Fifty-first Congress, that has been handed down and will forever be known to fame as the first Reed Congress; the Life-Saving Service that has proved so beneficent and humane a blessing to our seafaring people and to all who are exposed to the perils of the ocean; the Fish Commission, that has developed the food-fish interests of our seas and inland waters to an extent that is almost incredible; the public-land service, that provides for the disposal of the public domain to the eager homeseeker—a service, also, that has, through the Geological Survey, pointed out the way to incalculable wealth buried beneath the surface of the earth; the maintenance of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, those havens of rest and comfort provided by a grateful Republic for the needy veterans who have fought in its wars.

All of these, together with many other meritorious objects, are provided for in this bill—expenses of the United States courts, the expense of public printing and binding, and of other functions of government that are probably uninteresting to mention now, as well as many purposes not strictly germane to any one of the other appropriation bills, or which have arisen and become necessary since those bills were passed.

This is the result worked out by the committee in the preparation of this bill, namely: A reduction under the estimates submitted of $17,147,116.09, and of $28,915,208.99 under the like appropriation for the current fiscal year, which must be gratifying to the House, and will, I am sure, meet the approval of the country.

This large reduction is made and is proper, notwithstanding the bill carries every dollar that is required for each public building now authorized and in the course of construction and the exact amount stated to be necessary by the Engineer Department for all river and harbor improvements in progress under the contract system.

The sum total of all the annual supply bills, including the one under consideration, as reported to the House by the committee charged with their preparation, is $597,802,324.26. Adding to this sum the requirements estimated at $84,971,820, under permanent appropriations for interest on the public debt, the expenses of collecting customs, and other purposes, exclusive of the sinking fund, we have the total adjudged to be necessary to conduct the Government next year, namely, $682,774,144.26.

No appreciable increase that would materially affect the latter sum has been made by the House in the consideration and passage of the bills.

In January last it was my privilege to call the attention of the House to the serious situation then confronting Congress, demanding the consideration of estimated expenditures submitted by the Departments in the regular annual Book of Estimates, amounting, exclusive of the sinking fund, to $727,474,206.79, a sum which I predicted then, and which subsequent events have verified, would be augmented by supplemental estimates that would swell the whole to not less than $747,317,922.79, or an excess of $42,845,862.07 over the revenues, which are estimated at $704,472,060.72 for the fiscal year 1905.

By the omission to pass a general river and harbor bill at this session of Congress and by the wise economy exercised in the preparation of the appropriation bills, notably in the case of the bill under consideration, where a reduction of more than $17,000,000 is made under the estimates, the sum total of all our proposed expenditures is reduced, as stated, to $682,774,144.26, or nearly $22,000,000 under the estimated total revenues. This reduced sum is sufficient to meet all reasonable additions that may be or have been made to the bills by amendments of the Senate and sufficient also to cover all legitimate deficiencies that may have to be provided for next session.

The large and unprecedented reduction of nearly $29,000,000 made in this bill compared with the appropriations for the current year was made possible, in the first place, by reductions in amounts for each of three objects, namely:

For public buildings, from $12,511,783.79 to $4,556,233.79, a reduction of $7,955,550. A careful inquiry into the exact status of each building and the ascertainment of available balances under previous appropriations justify this reduction.

For river and harbor contract work the total is reduced from $20,228,150.99 to $7,872,200, or a reduction of $12,355,950.99. The committee ascertained that there were balances available for river and harbor works amounting to $37,000,000, and with the unqualified concurrence of the Chief of Engineers that the amount in each case carried by the bill was amply sufficient, the whole has been thus reduced.

For the National Homes for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers the total is reduced from $4,894,813 to $3,782,689, making a net reduction of $1,112,124, which was possible for the reason that the sundry civil act for the current year carried two unusual amounts under the heads, namely, "For completing the Mountain Branch, at Johnson City, Tenn., $900,000," and "For completing the Battle Mountain Sanitarium in South Dakota, $350,000."

In the next place, the last sundry civil act carried an unusual number of items that are not necessary to be continued for another year, such as the following items, each of which carried $100,000 or more:

Agricultural Department building	$270,000
Denver mint, furniture and machinery	240,000
Garfield and Providence hospitals, new buildings	200,000
Great Britain, to carry out treaty of January 24, 1903, with	100,000
House of Representatives, office building	751,000
Louisiana Purchase Exposition, exhibits	175,000
Manila military posts	1,000,000
Chicago military post	280,000
Fort Snelling military post	110,000
Schuylkill Arsenal building	125,000
Relief of destitution in the Philippines	3,000,000
National Museum building	250,000
Newport, R. I., wharf	100,000
Revenue-cutter steamers	220,000

[Mr. BENTON addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. BENTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MIERS].

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, the Secretary of the Interior on March 15, 1904, issued an order governing the granting of pensions under the June, 1890, act, to take effect April 13, 1904. I have had a great many inquiries from soldiers over the country and from Members of the House as to what the effect of this order will be—how much it will cost to execute it, how many and what class of soldiers would be benefited, and similar questions. I have had a good deal of curiosity, as well as a very great desire, to know for myself, and to that end I have made a calculation that I desire shall go into the RECORD for the information of the House and to the country concerning these inquiries.

It may seem a little presumptuous that a Member of the minority should attempt that responsibility, but having waited since the 15th of March and no gentleman from the majority and no one from the Bureau having undertaken to furnish information, I thought I might venture to make some suggestions along that line.

I desire that the order itself shall be inserted in the RECORD, which is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, March 15, 1904.

The COMMISSIONER OF PENSIONS.

SIR: Your letter has been received, submitting for my consideration an order touching the rate of pension allowed under the act of June 27, 1890. The order in question is as follows:

Order No. 78.] DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF PENSIONS,
March 15, 1904.

Whereas the act of June 27, 1890, as amended, provides that a claimant shall "be entitled to receive a pension not exceeding $12 per month and not less than $6 per month, proportioned to the degree of inability to earn a support, and in determining such inability each and every infirmity shall be duly considered and the aggregate of the disabilities shown to be rated;" and

Whereas old age is an infirmity, the average nature an extent of which the experience of the Pension Bureau has established with reasonable certainty; and

Whereas by act of Congress in 1887, when thirty-nine years had elapsed after the Mexican war, all soldiers of said war who were over 62 years of age were placed on the pension roll; and

Whereas thirty-nine years will have elapsed on April 13, 1904, since the civil war and there are many survivors over 62 years of age: Now, therefore,

Ordered, 1. In the adjudication of pension claims under said act of June 27, 1890, as amended, it shall be taken and considered as an evidential fact, if the contrary does not appear, and if all other legal requirements are properly met, that when a claimant has passed the age of 62 years he is disabled one-half in ability to perform manual labor and is entitled to be rated at $6 per month; after 65 years, at $8 per month; after 68 years, at $10 per month, and after 70 years, at $12 per month.

2. Allowances at higher rate, not exceeding $12 per month, will continue to be made as heretofore where disabilities other than age show a condition of inability to perform manual labor.

3. This order shall take effect April 13, 1904, and shall not be deemed retroactive. The former rules of the Office fixing the minimum and maximum at 65 years and 75 years, respectively, are hereby modified as above.

E. F. WARE,
Commissioner of Pensions.

In response thereto I have to state that one copy of the order has been approved by indorsement thereon, and is herewith transmitted for the files of your Office.

Very respectfully, E. A. HITCHCOCK, Secretary.

Under this order it is provided that when a soldier shall have attained the age of 62 years he shall be deemed to be one-half disabled and shall be admitted to the pension roll at $6 a month. At 65 years of age he shall receive $8 a month; at 68, $10 a month, and at 70, $12 a month. I desire next to place in the RECORD an estimate furnished by the Pension Bureau, giving the number of soldiers, the age, and the service, in order that we may make an estimate as to how many will have arrived at the ages of 62, 65, 68, and 70 years.

According to an estimate furnished by the Commissioner of Pensions, there will be surviving July 1, 1904, 870,000 pensioners.

ESTIMATE.

The following table shows the estimated number of soldiers of the civil war surviving July 1, 1904, and the length of service at each age (compiled from records in Pension Office):

Age.	Years of service.						One-half and less.	Total survivors each age.	Annual death rate.	Deaths first year.
	Three and up.	Two and one-half to three.	Two to two and one-half.	One and one-half to two.	One to one and one-half.	One-half to one.

In this inquiry there are two questions involved. The first is, What proportion of the soldiers will have arrived at the ages indicated in this order on the 13th of April, 1904? For that purpose I use this estimate, furnished by the Bureau, and the best one I can find, with the date of July 1, 1904. From that estimate I ascertain that those who have arrived at the age of 62 are 78 per cent; those who have arrived at the age of 65 are 68 per cent; those who have arrived at the age of 68 are 49 per cent, and those who have arrived at the age of 70 are 29 per cent. I find that to be true from this table, and I think it is a matter of demonstration from the public history and from the knowledge of man. The war began in 1861, forty-three years ago. A man who is 62 years old now was 19 years of age then and 23 at the close of the war. As a matter of history, you will remember this is about correct. Those who went into the service in 1862, a large portion, were 19 or more years of age.

At the close of the war, in 1865, I think the public history will prove the fact that a large portion of them—about the number found here, 78 per cent—were 23 years of age. So that for the purposes of this argument I shall assume the figures and the percentages that I stated a moment ago to be correct. The next question is, What class of soldiers will be affected when this order is executed? There are, as it were, three classes of soldiers. One class, which is drawing a pension under the general law, is the soldiers who have proven their disability of service origin. Another class, which is drawing under the act of June, 1890, by reason of their disabilities, although not proven to be of service origin. Under this order there will be another class to take into account. That class will be the soldiers who heretofore have not proven any pensionable disability and are not on the pension roll.

By data furnished by the Pension Bureau—and, I believe, conceded to be approximately correct by all gentlemen—there are 180,000 or 200,000 soldiers living who have never proven their disabilities and are not pensioned. Let us see how the execution of this order will affect this class. First, we ought to determine out of 180,000 or 200,000 soldiers how many will probably, under this order, be admitted to the pension roll. It is the intent of this order that all a soldier has to do is to prove that he is 62 years of age, without proving any disability, and he will then be entitled to a pension at $6 a month, or $72 a year.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to know the gentleman's idea of this proposition: Under the order that he is speaking of will it be necessary for the applicant for a pension, in his judgment, to be examined by the medical board?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. As I understand this order, it will not be unless the soldier wants to go on the roll at a higher rate than that authorized by the limit of age. In other words, if he is 62 years of age and he is satisfied with $6, then no other proof is necessary. If he is 65 years of age and is satisfied with $8, no further proof than his age and ninety days' service is necessary, and the same with respect to 68 and 70 years of age; or at least I think that is the intent of the order.

Mr. NORRIS. My question, if the gentleman will allow me, was prompted by a newspaper article which I read on the subject. That article quoted the law with reference to applications for an increase. The law, as I understand it, provides that the increase shall date from the day of the medical examination. Then the question recurred as to whether it would always be necessary in getting an increase, even under this order, to go through the formality of a medical examination.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I would much prefer to answer that more fully a little later.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I think myself that unless section 4698½ of the Revised Statutes is amended the gentlemen over at the Pension Bureau will find great difficulty in executing this order, but if necessary this section can be amended.

Mr. NORRIS. That was my idea.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I think the law must be changed in order to properly execute the order. I prefer to take this subject up a little later in the discussion.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. On that subject, Mr. Chairman, the Department, under the rule of practice followed over there, has no difficulty in considering 75 years an age at which they will allow $8, unless unusual disability is shown in the case. Now, I think, under the same practice, they will have no difficulty in this.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I think that is not the question presented by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS].

The data furnished by the Pension Bureau lead us to conclude that there are about 180,000 soldiers of the war of the rebellion that are not on the roll. Assuming that of this number 100,000 would take advantage of the order, the increased expenditure at $6 per month, $72 per year, would require $7,200,000.

The order further provides that when the soldier becomes 65 years of age he shall be placed on the roll at $8 per month. This is an increase of $2 per month, or $24 per annum. By the foregoing table we have determined 68 per cent of the soldiers have arrived at the age of 65. Then we have 68,000 to be increased by $24 per annum, requiring $1,632,000.

The order further provides that at the age of 68 the soldiers shall be put on the roll at $10. This is an increase of $2 per month, $24 per annum. Forty-nine per cent have attained the age of 68. There would be 49,000 to be increased by $24, and this would require $1,176,000.

The order further provides that when the soldier becomes 70 years of age he shall be placed on the roll at $12 per month. This would be an increase of $2 per month, or $24 per annum. Twenty-nine per cent have attained the age of 70. There would be 29,000 more who are to be increased $2 per month, or $24 per annum. This would require $696,000. Total, $10,704,000.

Thus it will be seen that it will require an increase of $10,704,000 to execute this order in favor of the men who are not on the roll at all; over $10,000,000 per annum for the men who have no present pensionable standing, for the men who presumably have not an ache or a pain, men at least who have never established any at the Bureau. With such a liberal order without the warrant of law giving this enormous sum to this class, we would be led to expect great things for those who wear the scars and have established their claims by proof on file at the Pension Bureau. I do not at this time care to discuss the right of the Bureau to make such an order, further than to say that if it establishes a service pension it is certainly legislation, and the Bureau would not claim the right to legislate.

If it is a matter of proof, it has been the privilege and duty of the Bureau to apply the proof all these years; and if it has not done it, it has been very derelict in duty. I prefer to proceed with the inquiry as to the effect of the order and see what it proposes for the men that carry the wounds and injuries from long and hard service and for the men who have established their disabilities under the June, 1890, act.

First let us see how many are drawing pensions under the old law less than $6. See the report of the Commissioner of Pensions of June 30, 1903, and it will be ascertained that four men are drawing $2 per month. This would be an increase of $4 per month or $48 per year, and, there being four of them, it would require $192. There is one man drawing $3 per month. This would be an increase of $3 per month, or $36 per annum. There are eight men drawing $4 per month. This would be an increase of $2 per month, $24 per year. This would require $192. There are seven men drawing $5 per month. This would be an increase of $1 per month, or $12 per year, and would require $84. Total, $504.

This is the amount for those on the roll by reason of the general law. We will next ascertain how many on the roll whose claims have been established under the same act are drawing less than $6. By an inspection of the report of the Commissioner of Pensions of date June 30, 1903, at page 73, it will be ascertained that there is not one. If there are only twenty soldiers all told who are drawing less than $6, why fix an age limit of 62 for $6? The order fixes the age limit of 65 in order to draw $8? The real age limit is therefore 65, and 62 is inserted in the order to fool and mislead the public.

Let us proceed with the investigation.

Next, those at 65 are to be increased to $8 per month. To determine how many are drawing between $6 and $8 under the general law, see report of Commissioner of Pensions of June 30, 1903.

There are 37,410 that are drawing $6. If they are to be increased to $8, the increase would be $2 per month, or $24 per year. Sixty-eight per cent have attained the age of 65, and 68 per cent of 37,410 is 25,438. At $24 would require $610,532.

There are 290 others drawing $6.25 to $7.75. Would be an average increase of less than $1, but we will count it $12 a year. Sixty-eight per cent of 290 would be about 200. That number at $12 would require $2,400.

Next those at 68 are to be increased to $10 per month. This would be $2 per month, or $24. Same report shows that 34,156 are drawing $8. Forty-nine per cent have reached the age of 68. Forty-nine per cent of 34,156 is 16,636. At $24 would require $401,664.

There are 558 drawing between $8.75 and $9.75. Counting the average of $1 per month, $12. Forty-nine per cent of 558 would be 275. At $12 per annum would require $3,300.

Next those at 70 are to be increased to $12 per month. This would be $2 per month, or $24 per annum. Same report shows that 23,739 are drawing $10. Twenty-nine per cent have reached the age of 70. Twenty-nine per cent of 23,739 would be 6,884. At $24 would require $165,216.

There are 273 drawing between $10.20 and $11.75. With this average increase at $1 per month, $12 per annum. Twenty-nine per cent of 273 would be 80. At $12 require $960. Total under general law, $1,184,072.

Next we will determine the amount of increase under June act. (See same report.)

Those at the age of 65 are to be increased to $8. There are 87,984 drawing $6. To increase to $8 would be $2 per month, or $24 per annum. Sixty-eight per cent of 87,984 is 59,829. At $24 would require $1,435,896. There are 6 drawing from $7 to $7.50. Take $1 as the average—$12 per year—would be, if all are 65, $72.

Next, those at the age of 68 are to be increased to $10—$2 per month, $24 per annum. There are 141,203 drawing $8. Forty-nine per cent of 141,203 would be 69,189. At $24 would be $1,660,536, and 1 at $12 would be $12.

Next, those at the age of 70 are to be increased to $12 per month, an increase of $2 per month, or $24 per annum. There are 53,744 drawing $10. Twenty-nine per cent of 53,744 is 15,585. At $24, $374,040. One at $1 per month, $12 per annum, would make $12. Total, under June act, $3,470,568.

RECAPITULATION.

To those not now on the roll	$10,608,000
To those under June, 1890, act	3,470,568
To those under the general law ($504+$1,184,072)	1,184,576
Total increase	15,263,144

You have under this hurry-up order an increase on account of the soldiers who have no pensionable standing, without a wound and without any disease, with no disability of any kind that can be established—at least, never has been—$10,704,000.

First, $10,704,000 to those with no pensionable standing, then $3,470,568 to those under the June, 1890, act, and only $1,193,606 to those who trace their disabilities to service origin. This is the reverse of what we should expect. It gives an increase of $14,174,568 to men who do not show their present disability to be of service origin.

To the great army of men making up the present great roll of honor, some limbless, armless, blind, totally disabled by rheumatism, locomotor ataxia, or any and all other causes, many of whom are unable to dress or undress themselves, many unable to feed themselves. Many gave three and some four years of the best part of their lives. Many spent months, some years, in rebel prisons; all drawing under the general law, where all their disabilities are established and of record. The sum total of all their increases is $1,184,072 + 504; total, $1,184,576.

They say that thirty-nine years after the close of the Mexican war the Mexican soldiers were given a service pension of $12 a month. I would first of all call your attention to the fact that it was not done by an Executive order that can be ignored, changed, or repealed by the next Administration, or ignored by the present one. It was done by law, as this House would have done except for this Executive order. Congress passed a law by which the executive department should be governed. The precedent was both just and patriotic; but as to the old heroes of 1861–1865, who fought for four years as no other men have ever done in any controversy in any country, their limit at 62 years is fixed at $6. You cite the precedent of the Mexican soldiers, who met all the responsibility that came to them within about a year, and their pensions were fixed at $12. So much for the precedent. The harder the service the less the recognition.

Some gentlemen have asked, has the Bureau the right to issue the order? I am not prepared to say the Bureau had no such authority. There was already by a former administration an age limit of 65 fixed as one limit and 75 as the other. I think they therefore had the right by reason of precedent.

I think they had the right for another reason. That is this: In this great Department that has been in existence for over forty years they have been taking proof, have been examining disability, and if it is ascertained as a matter of public history, by reason of examinations made and records kept, that a man at 62 years of age is half disabled, and if at 65 he is two-thirds disabled, I think it would be right to apply this as evidence. "History has proven that fact and should make a prima facie case."

It is not so much the right of which I am complaining, but the circumstances under which it was done. There had been a great demand from the Grand Army of the Republic for a service-pension bill. The Invalid Pensions Committee had wrought in season and out and was about ready to conclude and report on a service pension, with other legislation that would have been wholesome, when the Executive order came and stifled the will of the Grand Army of the Republic and of the House, including the fifty-odd Members who had introduced bills looking toward the liberalization of the pension laws.

The President of the United States or the Secretary of the Interior, Congress in session, charged with the duty of enacting legislation, with legislation already formulated and ready to present to the House, issued this order. I submit it was, at least, in very bad taste, and if the Executive order has carried this House away from legislation on this subject, where is it to end? If an Executive order may do what is done in this case, another Executive order may change the rule, and that Department may execute pension orders just as it pleases, without reference to law or the right of the soldier.

As an American citizen, as a Representative charged with a duty, I would have much preferred that this House should have done this by orderly legislation, even if the present order was to be executed. And I am quite sure this House would never have approved this order. If this order establishes a service-pension law, it is legislation, and the Department did not have the right. If it is simply an application of evidence, they might and should have applied it years ago.

None receiving pensions above $12 can be reached by this order, no difference what their condition may be—limbless, armless, or what the nature of the injury may be, this order gives them no relief. I ask you, gentlemen, who are charged with legislation, are you willing to see an Executive order go into force that will spend $14,174,568 for the men who have no disability of service origin and only $1,184,576 for the great army of men who have proven their disabilities to be of service origin?

To me it looks like the case is wrong end first. I would rather have enacted some legislation that would have given $10,000,000 to the men who can prove and have proven and placed on record their disabilities of service origin. And this House on pension days has universally increased the pension of an old soldier who is found to be totally disabled to the extent of requiring the aid and assistance of another to $30 per month. Not a dollar is given to this class.

Would you not rather have given to that class a pension of $30, what we are doing on every pension day? It would take less than $2,000,000 to do it. Yet this order takes $10,000,000 and places it on those who have no disability which they can prove of service origin and leaves this class entirely out. Would you not, if you had been permitted to meet the responsibility, rather have done something for the men to whom we are giving on every pension day, and thereby have relieved the House of a great many of these special pension bills and placed the money where it is needed the worst?

I approve every bill we pass. Whenever you point me to an old soldier who is totally disabled to the extent of requiring the aid and attention of another, by special bill or otherwise, I shall always vote to increase his pension. But I do not like to do it for one and leave the others in the same condition all over the country without any relief. I prefer that this House, after a report from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, shall consider the whole matter, and in a high patriotic spirit enact some legislation that will not only relieve the House, but will be of some service to the old soldiers of all classes and conditions.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. Does not the gentleman think the same responsibility rests on the House to legislate as he suggests is done under this order as if the order had not been made?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I welcome the inquiry, and answer yes. I want to say further, in answering the question, one purpose I have in this argument and in putting these figures in the RECORD is that this House may understand what the order is, and thereby see the necessity of doing just what the gentleman from Nebraska suggests.

Why this hurry-up order, and who is the author of it? In the Washington Post of March 18, in speaking of the Senate steering committee, it was said:

> The committee discussed an order of business for the rest of the session, and decided to sidetrack the general building measures, the several labor bills, the Hepburn-Dolliver liquor bill, and all similar legislation. The meeting yesterday was the first session the steering committee has held for the purpose of deciding on an adjournment programme. It lasted nearly an hour and was attended by all but one member.
> It is said one of the reasons for meeting at this early date was the issuance of the Executive order in lieu of service-pension legislation, which removed one of the principal factors which might lengthen the session of Congress. It had been known that Members of the House were urging that a service-pension bill be enacted, and that their insistence would result in delaying a final adjournment. With this out of the way and nearly all other obstacles to early adjournment, there is believed by the steering committee to be less likelihood for a demand for Congressional investigations of the Post-Office and other Departments.

So all building bills are to be sidetracked. All labor bills are to be laid aside. By whom? By the majority. Why? Is it to show its friendship for labor, or is it because it is afraid to meet the issue and leave it to the country?

Does anyone believe this will satisfy the soldiers? Will this satisfy that great organization, the Grand Army of the Republic? Will this satisfy the country? Will this satisfy the fifty Members who have introduced bills to liberalize and increase pensions? If I were to answer, I would say "No."

But the author says there is a precedent, and cites the act of 1897 that gave to the Mexican soldiers at 62 years of age a pension of $12 per month. I grant the law and approve it as wise and patriotic. How does this order follow the precedent? At the age of 62 it only gives relief to twenty soldiers now making the great pension roll, and only grants $504 of relief to those at the age of 62. It offers to the soldiers who fought more hard battles, made greater sacrifices than any other class of soldiers ever did, the sum of $6 per month, and, while pretending to fix the age limit at 62, in fact establishes the minimum age limit at 65 years; cites the Mexican law that gave $12 absolute at 62 to uphold the order that gives to twenty of the heroes of the rebellion $6, and fixes the age limit at 65.

Shame on such mockery!

And the "Executive order in lieu of the service-pension bill." "Members of the House were urging a service-pension bill." "In order to avert the service-pension bill the Executive order was promulgated." Do you sanction an adjournment to defeat labor legislation? If you do, don't go to the country declaring that you are the friend of labor. If this Executive order is your idea of the obligation of the Government and your duty to the soldier, you must explain to them and to the country.

"Members were urging the service-pension bill." Yes, and we were so urging it that it could not be put off any longer. It would have been reported to this House before now. It remains to be seen whether your President can kill pension legislation this way. It has been talked for days that he advised such an order. I do not believe this House will approve any such sharp practice. It has been said it was a shrewd political move; that your President is a man of action; that he does something. I grant you that he is a man of action; but don't he sometimes act too quickly, before considering what the result will be? Don't you think in the matter of the Executive order he acted without knowing that it would cost the country nearly $11,000,000 to place names on the roll that had no pensionable standing?

Don't you think he acted without knowing that he was offering an affront to the great army of veterans now on the pension roll by killing their bill? Don't you think he acted unwisely when he advised the adjournment of Congress to avoid the responsibility of further investigating post-office frauds and to avoid the responsibility of taking a position in favor of or against the Hepburn-Dolliver bill?

Don't you think he acted hastily when he advised adjournment of Congress to avoid action on labor bills? Don't you think if you act on the advice of this man who does something, for effect and for political advantage, that it may cost you the next House of Representatives and his sure defeat for reelection? Don't you think that because he is a man that does so many ill-considered and poorly advised things is the reason why the country, and especially the business interest of the country, is afraid of him?

Don't you think such double dealing and doing so many rash acts may cause the Democratic party to elect to the Presidency some safe, conservative man who is the friend of capital and labor alike? Don't you think you better consider the Hepburn bill before you adjourn? Don't you think you better take up these bills introduced by the friends of labor and let the country know how you really stand toward these great questions? Don't you think you better reconsider and act on the pension legislation now formulated and ready for action?

Or won't you think at all, and will you follow without thinking this man, who acts on impulse and is ready to defeat legislation by a trick and scuttle away to avoid responsibility? Is that what this House is organized for, or is it to meet and transact the public business to the best interest of the whole country? Such conduct is more like madmen than Representatives of the people. Remember that whom the gods would destroy they first make mad.

This body of Representatives to be adjourned! Why? Because it is about to be called upon to vote on labor legislation. This House has had pending before it the eight-hour bill and the anti-injunction bill ever since I have been in Congress, and the Republicans have been in the majority, and under some pretext or another have prevented consideration.

Adjourn Congress! Why? Because the Republican managers are not willing to say how they stand on labor legislation; because they are not willing to say how they stand on public building bills; not willing to say how they stand on the Hepburn-Dolliver liquor bill; adjourn while a great many Members of Congress were urging the passage of a service-pension bill. We were—Members were—urging and the committee was ready to act, and an Executive order came for the purpose of cutting off legislation on that subject.

I would therefore answer the inquiry of the gentleman from Nebraska: Yes; I think the House is duty bound to enact a pension law that will express the judgment of the House on this subject. The responsibility rests with every Member of the House, and so far as I am concerned I am willing to meet it, and if need be remain in session for not only one month, but two, three, or four months, and I am glad to accept the responsibility with others Members of this House and show how we stand on labor legislation and all these other bills. So far as my influence is concerned I shall insist that we stay here and meet these responsibilities, so that labor, the old soldier, and the country may know what we represent. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I ask leave, then, Mr. Chairman, to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and leave is granted.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Under the leave to extend, and in conclusion, I would urge that the House of Representatives proceed to perfect and pass a bill that meets with the judgment of the House. If that can not be done, then I favor the execution of the Executive order in the way that will be equitable and give the greatest relief to the old soldiers. To that end, if it is necessary to amend section 4698½, so as to certainly exempt the applicant from examination I am heartily in favor of doing so.

I would further enact a provision that will make the application so simple that there need be no delays on that account, and suggest the following as a form for an application:

Hon. COMMISSIONER OF PENSIONS.

SIR: Having reached the age of —— years, I hereby apply for such increase of pension as may be warranted under the act of June 27, 1890, under order No. —— construing said act.

I am a pensioner under the act by certificate No. —— at the rate of $—— per month.

I served as —— Company —, —— Regiment, —— Volunteer ——, from ——, 186–, to ——, 186–, and in Company —, —— Regiment, —— Volunteer ——, from ——, 186–, to ——, 186–.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, we are told that the present session of Congress will soon end. Before the short session shall convene the American people will be called upon to decide whether the party in power has been true to its pledges and whether it shall be continued in power. In the last Presidential election the Republican party was successful. It went before the people of the country upon a platform which was approved at the polls. It has occurred to me that it would not be improper to consider some of the pledges made in that platform and to ascertain, if possible, whether or not those pledges have been performed. Probably the simplest way to consider this question would be to eliminate the promises concerning which there has been an attempt to perform. Certainly the number is few and their importance insignificant.

There has been some extension in the rural free-delivery service, in which the minority heartily concurred. The independence of Cuba has been established in pursuance of a resolution introduced by a Democratic Senator, and a Department of Commerce and Labor has been constituted without protest from the minority. There was really no issue with respect to these matters. The Democratic party had declared for a Department of Labor and for the independence of Cuba, and the earliest and best friends of the rural free-delivery service were to be found upon the Democratic side of this Chamber. There were, however, in the Republican platform of 1900 certain pledges of not only national but of international importance, not one of which has been performed.

Upon the very threshold of the platform we find a declaration renewing the allegiance of the party to the principle of the gold standard, and declaring further that—

We recognize that interest rates are a potent factor in production and business activity, and for the purpose of further equalizing and of further lowering the rates of interest we favor such monetary legislation as will enable the varying needs of the season and of all sections to be promptly met, in order that trade may be evenly sustained, labor steadily employed, and commerce enlarged.

It will hardly be contended by any Republican statesman that there has been any performance of this promise. Republican journals all over the country for many months have been calling the attention of the country to the insufficiency of our monetary legislation. Your party declared its renewed allegiance to the principle of the gold standard, and yet Republican newspapers are constantly warning you that the gold standard is not safe; that the parity of the different kinds of money issued by the Government is not assured; that this parity could be destroyed by a Presidential order. You admitted in your platform that some legislation accomplishing this purpose was necessary, and yet you permitted the Fifty-seventh Congress to convene and adjourn without putting one line upon the statute books to carry out this pledge, and I predict that you will permit this session of the Fifty-eighth Congress to adjourn without performing that promise.

Time and again we have been told that the remedy had been discovered. Several bills have been introduced by eminent Republican statesmen. The distinguished gentleman from New Jersey, during the Fifty-seventh Congress, after much research, introduced a measure intended to carry out this pledge, but up to this time it seems that it has been absolutely impossible to effect an agreement on the majority side of this Chamber. Therefore without indorsing your proposed measures I call your attention to the fact that the Republican party will go before the country in the coming campaign compelled to face a broken pledge with respect to its platform on monetary legislation.

TRUSTS.

Again, you have not only failed to pass any measure curbing their power, but it has been actually demonstrated that your party is the friend of trusts and monopolies. I find these words in your platform:

We recognize the necessity and propriety of the honest cooperation of capital to meet new business conditions, and especially to extend our rapidly increasing foreign trade; but we condemn all conspiracies and combinations intended to restrict business, to create monopolies, to limit production, or to control prices, and favor such legislation as will effectively restrain and prevent all such abuses, protect and promote competition, and secure the rights of producers, laborers, and all who are engaged in industry and commerce.

Let us see what the Republican party has done with respect to the suppression or regulation of the trusts. Like the poor, it seems the trusts are to be with us always. Bear in mind the Republican party is in power. It has the Presidency and both Houses of Congress by large majorities. If it desires to deal with this great national evil, it has untrammeled power. There is absolutely nothing in the way. Aye, more than this, the minority stands ready to help you if you are really honest in your purpose.

When your party swept the country in 1900, few were those who supposed that any attempt would be made to rid the American people of the trust evil. It was charged—and, so far as I know, never denied—that the trusts had contributed immense sums to the Republican campaign fund. It was believed that your party drew life and strength from the trusts. Without their aid you never could have won that victory. Indeed, the victory of 1900 was regarded as a trust victory. It is true you had denounced them in your platform. It is true you had promised relief. It is true you had promised to execute the law, but few people believed you would do it. The creature can not control its creator; consequently your party, it was believed, could not control the trusts. On the contrary, thinking men reasoned that they would control you.

It is a humiliating fact that money is all-powerful in our elections. Very small majorities change results. Human nature is weak. Money is plentiful with the favored few, who stand ready to give it away to those who will serve them. Your party, Mr. Chairman, took their money. What you did with it I leave for the American people to decide. It was charged, and not denied, that your campaign fund amounted to millions. Those in charge of the fund know whether this is true or not. For one I do not believe any political party has legitimate need for even $1,000,000 in any one campaign. For one I believe the man who sells his vote should be punished, but I believe the man who buys that vote should receive the greater punishment. The penitentiary is the proper home for men who go over the country raising great sums of money to debauch the American voters.

But your party had used the money contributed by these criminals, and it would have been contrary to human nature for that party to legislate its most valuable friends out of existence. So that when the victory of 1900 was won, the trusts felt that for four years more, at least, they were safe. The rich would grow richer. The trusts had found employment for the laboring man, who was told that he must be content, thank God and the Republican party that something had been found for him to do. His dinner pail was full. For four years more he was to have plenty to eat—a full stomach. He must be satisfied with that. He must not dream of higher and better things. The trust had provided him with work and filled his stomach; therefore he must be satisfied and vote the Republican ticket. How beautifully everything was fixed! How satisfied was the trust. For four years not one wave of trouble was to sweep across its benevolent breast.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am not willing to be construed as reflecting upon the honor or integrity of any individual Republican statesman. I am ready to admit that you have in the ranks of your party statesmen who are just as sincere, just as honest, and just as patriotic as can be found in the ranks of the party to which I belong, but it is impossible for your party to conceal the fact that the trusts of the country felt that the victory of 1900 was their victory and that they had nothing to fear from those they had helped to elect. But when the strenuous Colonel Roosevelt was made President by the cruel hand of the assassin the trusts became uneasy. Men all over the country who honestly believed the trusts were oppressing the people, because they were fixing the price not only of what they sold, but of what they bought as well, said that at last a man was President who was bold enough to defy the trusts even if by so doing he was retired to private life.

Colonel Roosevelt had written much against the cruel and unjust practices of the trust. While governor of New York he had declared that—

> The man who by swindling or by wrongdoing acquires great wealth for himself at the expense of his fellow stands as low morally as any predatory mediæval nobleman and is a more dangerous member of society. Any law and any method of construing the law which will enable the community to punish him, either by taking away his wealth or by imprisonment, should be welcomed.

He had exhibited on various occasions a great desire to get at these lawbreakers. All over the country he had declared his undying hostility to all enemies of the people. From childhood he had led the strenuous life. He was a soldier—a man of iron. Every drop of his blood was tingling with patriotism. He was the Prince Rupert of the patriots.

He was, it was supposed, the very apotheosis of everything self-sacrificing, courageous, and American, and yet every day since he has been President the law has been violated. The criminals are known, too. His representative in Congress filed an exhibit actually giving the names of 800 trusts. He had learned much about their internal affairs, for this exhibit gave in detail the amount of preferred and common stock, together with the bonds they had issued. This exhibit, which can be found on page 1848 of the RECORD of the last Congress, declared that—

> The list as a whole, therefore, contains the grand total of nearly 800 trusts, with a total capitalization of nearly fourteen billions. These totals are fully 33 per cent larger than those of any other lists hitherto published.

Here we have a statement indorsed by the gentleman from Maine, understood to represent the views of the President, that at that time 800 trusts were doing business in the country, in spite of the Sherman law, with a capital more than half as great as all of the money in circulation in the United States.

Until the advent of Mr. Roosevelt it was supposed that the Sherman antitrust law was not sufficient to deal with these great lawbreakers, but Mr. Roosevelt's Attorney-General soon discovered the mistake. It was soon given out that whether Congress legislated or not the Sherman law was sufficient to accomplish the desired result. While all this was taking place, Mr. Chairman, I hazarded a prediction. It was this: That the efforts of the Republican party to suppress the trusts were a sham and a pretense; that the trusts cared but little about the suits threatened and instituted; that at heart the Republican party was in sympathy with the trusts, and that all the noise and clamor of the Administration would practically end in nothing.

You may prevent two certain railroad systems from carrying out a particular deal, but you have done nothing, absolutely nothing, to prevent these two roads from charging their own prices for the transportation of freight and passengers, nor have you prevented the trusts from selling to the people at trust prices and buying what the people sell to them also at trust prices. This is going on now without interruption and will continue just as long as you continue in power a party which uses trust money to carry elections and which chooses trust attorneys to represent the people of America in their efforts to free themselves from the clutches of their oppressors. The truth is, the people of this country are paying to-day more for the necessaries of life than ever before. While wages are being decreased, the cost of living is constantly increasing. The truth is that wages have only increased a trifle during all the flush times our Republican friends are boasting about, while the cost of living since 1896 has increased from 33⅓ to 50 per cent.

The New York Herald of Sunday, March 6, contains the following statement, which is well worthy of consideration:

> At a time when there is complaint of contraction in trade and industry and wages are being reduced it is uncomfortable to find that the cost of living is increasing.
> Every housewife will peruse with interest the article in this morning's Herald giving in detail the recent advance in all the necessaries of life. The course of prices in the last seven years is reflected in Dun's "index number" showing prices proportioned to consumption.
> In making up this index number the prices of all necessaries of life are taken, and in each case the price is multiplied by the country's per capita consumption. This precludes any one commodity having more than its proper weight in the aggregate, the price of a pound of coffee, for instance, being taken nine times and the price of a bushel of wheat five and one-half times. Extreme low prices were touched July 1, 1897. Comparison of the index number of that date with more recent ones is interesting:
> Per capita cost of living.
> | | |
> |---|---|
> | July 1, 1897 | $72.45 |
> | March 1, 1900 | 96.60 |
> | March 1, 1901 | 94.86 |
> | March 1, 1902 | 101.59 |
> | March 1, 1903 | 101.06 |
> | October 1, 1903 | 97.38 |
> | March 1, 1904 | 103.61 |
> These figures, of course, do not show the actual cost of living, because wholesale prices are used and no account is taken of rent or luxuries or extras of any sort.
> As showing the tendencies of the times nationally, however, allusion was made to the tabulated data contained in the bulletin of the Bureau of Labor of the Department of Commerce and Labor last November. One table shows that in 1896 the average cost of food per family was $256.76. Since then, taking the same relative retail prices of food, the average increase has been $5 a year.

When it is shown that there has been an enormous increase in the cost of living the Republican party, which is the servant of the trusts, at once proceeds to shower congratulations upon the farmers of the country on account of the increase of the price of farm products. But, Mr. Chairman, I will show before I conclude that neither the trusts nor the Republican party is entitled to any credit whatever for the high prices which, thank God, our farmers have been receiving. The truth is the trusts have been advancing the price of manufactured products even when the prices of farm products were declining.

The present high prices which our farmers enjoy came in spite of the trusts, and our sturdy sons of toil, upon whose shoulders rest all permanent prosperity, will hardly be deceived into giving their natural enemy, the trust, credit for the remunerative prices they are receiving. When the price of farm products is fixed by the trust the farmer is no longer a free man, but a slave. When the farmer puts the Republican party in power he puts the trust in power, and when he puts the trust in power he has surrendered up his liberty and is no longer a free man.

Mr. Chairman, there is absolutely nothing in American politics more criminal than the attitude of the Republican party with respect to the trusts and monopolies. You proceed upon the assumption that the American people are a nation of idiots. The man who draws a salary, the man who receives fixed wages, was never in a worse condition than he is to-day. You leave him absolutely at the mercy of the trusts. You say he is prosperous, but his salary and wages have not been increased and he is forced to pay more for the necessaries of life than ever before in the history of this country. The man who receives $1,000 per annum and is forced to spend $1,000 is not in as good condition as the man who receives $500 per annum and is only forced to spend $400. And the thousands of persons in our cities and towns who work for a fixed salary are awaking to the melancholy reality that the prosperity of which the Republican party is constantly boasting is a mockery and a sham; and this is especially true when these very persons see millions of dollars' worth of the necessaries of life, which they are forced to consume, shipped across the ocean and to South America and sold to aliens cheaper than the identical goods are sold to them.

I repeat that there is absolutely nothing in the whole history of American politics that is more criminal than this. You are punishing these people because they are Americans. They are forced to patronize the trusts or do without the articles the trusts sell. All competition is shut out from abroad and all competition at home is strangled to death. In the midst of the many and varied remedies which are offered to meet these conditions the Democratic party, which you abuse as incompetent and unfit to rule, offers one which is so simple that a child can understand. We suggest what you yourselves invoked as your best and only remedy. It is this: Reduce the import duty upon the trust-made articles to that point which will force the manufacturer to sell as cheaply to Americans as he does to foreigners.

When the coal strike was on and thousands were almost freezing in the cities, when men faced each other in grim despair, when the horrid specter of revolution appeared here and there in our great commercial centers, what did you do to meet conditions which then surrounded us? Were you then willing to "stand pat?" No, Mr. Chairman, you were forced to do something, and do it quickly. In that black hour the world saw the Republican leaders in this House report a Democratic measure, a measure demanded by the Democratic platform, suspending import duty on coal, I believe, for one year. When you reported that measure you acknowledged your own impotence, as well as the justice of the Democratic contention.

It is not denied that to-day all sorts of manufactured articles which the people are forced to use are being sold cheaper abroad than at home. If the removal of the import duty upon coal had a tendency to relieve the situation during the coal strike, why will not a reduction of the import duty upon these articles have a tendency to relieve the situation now? Is there any reason why the trust can not sell its goods as cheap to the American as it does to the Austrian or the Russian? If the manufacturer can sell his goods 5,000 miles away from home at a certain price and make a profit, can he not sell the same goods at home for the same price and still make a profit? Your position upon this question is not only immoral, it is actually criminal. Why not rise to the necessity of the hour? Why not rise above party and report a measure which will provide some relief to millions of American toilers? Ah, Mr. Chairman, the question suggests its own answer. The Republican party is afraid of the trusts. It is afraid to offend the trusts. In a few months that party will be knocking at the door of the trusts begging for money. To do what? To buy up votes to elect Theodore Roosevelt President of the United States.

You know if you reduce the duty upon trust-made articles you will get little or no help. Without money to buy votes, without money to corrupt our elections, without money to distort and nullify the will of the people the Republican party is in a hopeless minority. Without a huge corruption fund you would certainly have been defeated in 1896; and without a huge corruption fund I believe it will be impossible to reelect Mr. Roosevelt. Mark the prediction, Mr. Chairman! You will pass no antitrust legislation at this session of Congress. Look out for the announcement. In a few short months the Republican party will be begging money from the very men whom Mr. Roosevelt, before he was President, denounced as "standing as low morally as any predatory mediaeval nobleman." Mark the prediction, Mr. Chairman! In a few short months you will see campaign managers of this strenuous moralist crawling about the country begging help from the very men he has time and again denounced.

But there is another plank in your platform which shall not escape notice. In that platform I find the following:

RESTRICTION OF IMMIGRATION, AND OTHER LABOR LEGISLATION.

In the further interest of American workmen we favor a more effective restriction of the immigration of cheap labor from foreign lands, the extension of opportunities of education for working children, the raising of the age limit for child labor, the protection of free labor as against contract convict labor, and an effective system of labor insurance.

Have you done anything to restrict immigration? If so, what? You made the promise. Did you mean to carry it out when you made it, or did you include it in your platform simply to catch votes? The responsibility is upon you, not upon us. But if you will propose any proper legislation restricting immigration, I think you will find no opposition upon this side of the Chamber.

Mr. Chairman, the section from which I come is the recipient of much advice. We are frequently told that we are too conservative; that we are behind the times; that we are not "up-to-date." I admit that we are conservative, and I thank God it is so. It is well, I think, that at least one great section of the Republic has protected itself against the poison that comes from the influx of indiscriminate foreign immigration, and for one I rejoice that the State from which I come has a smaller percentage of foreign population than any other State in the Union. The last census gives us less than one-tenth of 1 per cent of foreign population.

More than once in the history of this Republic the distorted form of revolution has appeared within our borders. Once in our history the people of the South attempted to leave the Union. They believed they were exercising a constitutional right. Perhaps this attempt was an error of judgment. God knows our punishment has been great. It seems the penalty has not yet been paid. But, Mr. Chairman, if the hour ever comes when the horrid specter of revolution shall rise up amongst us, I predict that our great commercial centers, weakened as they may be in their Americanism by poison from foreign lands, will turn their eyes first of all to the conservative old South for both moral and physical support; and I predict that, if such an hour ever comes, the first volunteers in the defense of law and order and government will be men of the South—posterity of the heroes who followed Stonewall Jackson and Robert E. Lee. [Applause.]

The day is not far distant when we will pay the penalty for our generous laws with respect to immigration. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, 448,572 alien immigrants arrived in the United States. Of these, 54,288 brought with them $30 and upward, while 271,821 brought with them less than $30. During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, I believe that somewhere near 800,000 foreign immigrants arrived in the United States. These figures are alarming in themselves. The census of 1890 shows that our foreign-born population, constituting one-seventh of our total population, furnished one-third of all insane persons of the country and one-half of all the paupers supported by public institutions.

In 1891 three-fourths of all prisoners in New York City prisons were foreign born and nine-tenths of the balance were of foreign parentage. In Massachusetts the report of the prison commissioners for the year ending September 30, 1894, shows that 85 per cent of all commitments for that year were persons of foreign parentage and that the foreign population of that State furnished ten times as many criminals as the same number of persons who were native born. The average number of criminals furnished by our native-born population is 2.7 per cent for every thousand. The average number of criminals furnished by foreign population is 5.4 per cent per thousand. Below I give a table showing the number of criminals furnished by each thousand of our foreign population:

	Per thousand.
Germany	3.6
Austria	10.4
England	7.2
Russia	7.9
Hungary	15.9
Poland	16
Italy	18.2

Most of this information is obtained from House Document No. 46.

There are at the present time about eleven and a half millions of foreign-born persons in the United States. In some communities they are actually in the majority, while in many communities they hold the balance of power. It is our solemn duty to see to it that the American laborer, the highest and best type of the man who toils, is protected from the competition of these half-fed, half-starved, weak-minded paupers and criminals from foreign lands. The Republican party, Mr. Chairman, promised to give this protection, and you have broken that promise. You may rest assured that the laboring people of America will hold you responsible.

SHIPPING LEGISLATION.

I am forced to call your attention, Mr. Chairman, to still another broken pledge. I find the following in the platform of your party:

Our present dependence upon foreign shipping for nine-tenths of our foreign carrying trade is a great loss to the industry of this country. It is also a serious danger to our trade, for its sudden withdrawal in the event of European war would seriously cripple our expanding foreign commerce. The national defense and naval efficiency of this country, moreover, supply a compelling reason for legislation which will enable us to recover our former place among the trade-carrying fleets of the world.

The disappearance of American commerce from the sea has been melancholy indeed. Our registered ocean fleet in 1810 was 108,000 tons larger than it is now. The testimony of Mr. Winthrop L. Marvin, of Boston, before the House Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries is well worthy of consideration.

Not since June, 1901—

Declared Mr. Marvin—

has a keel been laid in any American shipyard on either coast of the United States for one steel steamship designed and built for the purpose of foreign commerce. There has never been a time in our history—not even in the Revolution, not even in the war of 1812, not even in the war between the States—when ocean shipbuilding in the United States was in such a condition of absolutely arrested development. The ocean tonnage of United States registry for foreign commerce is smaller now by a few tons than it was in the year 1826. The proportion of American commerce carried in American ships has sunk from 12 per cent in 1883 to 9 per cent in 1903.

We are sending into foreign lands nearly $5,000,000 worth of American products and commodities every day, of which less than 9 per cent are carried upon American bottoms, and during the year 1903 the tribute paid to foreign ships for carrying merchandise to and from the United States amounted to more than $100,000,000.

I give below a table which shows how the tonnage of fleet registered for deep-sea commerce of the United States compares with that of other nations:

	Tons.
United States	873,000
Italy	1,180,000
France	1,480,000
Norway	1,650,000
Germany	2,960,000
British Empire	14,800,000

I believe that the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries has reported a bill providing for a commission to investigate the United States merchant marine. This is what might be called "do-nothing legislation." But for the arrogant demands of the trusts we might hope to see a law passed giving a rebate off the Dingley tariff rates on goods imported into this country on American bottoms. But the Republican party will not pass any such legislation. It would tend to injure the trusts, and the Republican party belongs, body and soul, to the trusts. So here is another, Mr. Chairman, which you must add to the list of broken pledges of your party.

RECIPROCITY LEGISLATION.

I find also in the platform of 1900 a plank headed "Reciprocity favored," in the following words:

We favor the associated policy of reciprocity so directed as to open our markets on favorable terms for what we do not ourselves produce in return for free foreign markets.

Will any gentleman rise upon this floor and say that this promise has been performed? I believe that some twelve or thirteen reciprocity treaties were negotiated during Mr. McKinley's Administration and sent by him to the Senate for ratification, which still sleep in the Senate archives. It is true that with our assistance you passed a reciprocity measure for the benefit of Cuba, but this, I believe, is all. The truth is, the Republican party is in a dilemma with respect to reciprocity legislation. When that party is in a dilemma there are three or four gentlemen upon the majority side of this Chamber who are always put forward to speak, either the distinguished gentleman from New York, the leader of the majority, or his lieutenants.

The distinguished gentlemen from Ohio and Pennsylvania are always put forward when the party is in a real dilemma, and we must all bear testimony of their artful success in extricating their party from its difficulties. Realizing that trouble was ahead of the party in the next campaign, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] the other day undertook to define the Republican position with respect to reciprocity. In a nutshell it amounted to this: That reciprocity was only desirable with respect to noncompeting articles. When this doctrine was announced amazement as well as amusement was apparent on both sides of the Chamber. What sort of reciprocity would you have, Mr. Chairman, between noncompeting articles? To what extent do you suppose we would reciprocate?

Reciprocity, as I understand it, is the equity of protection. It was intended by Mr. Blaine to relieve protection of its harshness. It was intended to level down the injustice of protection. There is no need for reciprocity unless we impose import duties, and there is no need for the protection afforded by import duties unless there is competition between articles brought into this country and those manufactured at home. What sense is there, Mr. Chairman, in imposing a duty for the purpose of protection upon articles from abroad with respect to which there is no competition at home? If there is no competition, then there is no need of protection, and if there is no protection there can be no need for reciprocity. The speech of the gentleman from Pennsylvania will hardly excuse the Republican party from the denunciation which awaits it for its failure to perform this promise.

There are other promises, Mr. Chairman, which the Republican party made of lesser importance, which have also been broken. The truth is, the record of that party during the Fifty-seventh and Fifty-eighth Congresses is one of broken pledges. During the short time allotted to me to-day it is impossible to discuss all of the broken promises of the party, for there are other matters which I desire to discuss briefly before concluding my remarks.

When the Republican party is arraigned for its failure to do these things, with seeming confidence it invariably answers, "Notwithstanding all this, the country is prosperous." It seems that no matter what takes place, if the country is prosperous we must all be content. No matter what injustice is being perpetrated, no matter how vicious, how criminal, the laws that are in force, you must not dare to change them because the country is prosperous. We must let well enough alone. We must "stand pat." Yes, Mr. Chairman; stand pat even though you are robbed while you are standing pat. The rich are getting richer. The poor have work and a full stomach. What more could anybody ask? They tell us tariff schedules must be amended by the friends of protection. Would it not be better if they could be amended by the friends of the American people? [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, the plain truth is, no political party can legislate a people into prosperity. All that any political party can do is to administer the Government as economically as possible, pass no law which discriminates against any class or section, stimulate as far as possible our trade with foreign nations so that our surplus products may find a market, and see to it that public servants are honest and faithful in the discharge of their duties. The man who tells the people that his political party is entitled to the credit of the high price of cotton or wheat is a demagogue.

I admit that a party can advance the price of any article people are forced to consume by enacting laws which strangle competition. I admit that the Republican party has brought prosperity to the trusts by tendering to them the American people as their legitimate prey. I admit you have brought prosperity to the manufacturer by giving him a monopoly. And this is the only prosperity for which the Republican party is justly entitled to credit. But on various occasions during the present session we have been entertained in this House by speeches from eminent Republican statesmen, claiming credit for whatever prosperity the country has enjoyed. We of the South are congratulated on our participation in this prosperity. It is gratifying to us to know that our progress arouses such enthusiasm amongst our brethren of other sections. We of the South congratulate our brethren of the North and West upon the prosperity they enjoy. We assure them that their interest in our welfare is fully reciprocated and that the people of the South contemplate with pride the progress of the American Republic everywhere. [Applause on Democratic side.]

Now, let us analyze this prosperity argument a little. The Republican party is in power. The country is prospering. Therefore the Republican party brought about this prosperity. The Republican party is in power. Wheat sells at a dollar per bushel. Therefore the Republican party is entitled to the credit of dollar wheat. Again, the Republican party is in power. Cotton sells for 15 cents per pound. Therefore this party is entitled to the credit of 15-cent cotton. Post hoc; propter hoc. Is there any human being so blind that he can not see the fallacy of this argument?

The Panama Canal treaty was ratified a few days ago. Shortly thereafter the price of cotton advanced 2 cents per pound. Therefore the ratification of this treaty caused the advance in the price of cotton. The man who employs logic of this kind can prove anything.

In 1898 the Democratic party regained control of the State from which I come. Since then the price of cotton has been almost constantly advancing. Therefore the Democratic victory in my State—not the Republican victory in the nation—caused the advance in the price of cotton. One argument is just as sound as the other. No man but a demagogue would employ either; and yet, Mr. Chairman, it is a dangerous argument. Let me submit some statistics which clinch this fallacy.

If it be true that the Republican party can advance the price of wheat or cotton it can maintain that advance; and if it fails to do so, then it should be condemned as unworthy of the support of the American people. I am not as familiar with the prosperity of other sections as I am with that of my own, but I assert, without the slightest fear of successful contradiction, that the prosperity which the South has enjoyed and is enjoying to-day has been accomplished by the pluck and energy of the people of that section under the smile of Providence, in spite of unjust sectional legislation. [Applause on Democratic side.]

God knows, Mr. Chairman, there has been room for progress in the South. Eighteen hundred and sixty-five found her prostrate and her wealth destroyed. A mighty conquering army had destroyed much, but there were some things which could not be destroyed—the pluck of her people and the natural advantages vouchsafed by Almighty God.

Yes, Mr. Chairman, the South is prospering. Emerson's analysis of the law of compensation is not more beautiful than it is true. The South suffered, but she learned. If you could stand upon some mountain peak and with one sweep of the eye take in our beloved land, you would see quite a different picture from what you would have seen had you stood on the same spot forty-four years ago. You would to-day behold fertile fields which produce everything needful to man; you would hear the morning ushered in by the din of many thousands of factory whistles; and as the day wore on you would hear the remotest ends of that favored land linked together in one unbroken chain by the ringing of our school bells.

But the Republican party puts in an appearance just here and says, "I did it all." And yet during all these years of our progress we have been paying a penalty. Being large consumers, we have been taxed to make the manufacturer rich. You force our farmers to buy in a protected market and to sell in an unprotected market. In my State there were in 1870 only 39,897 cotton spindles. In 1900 the number had increased to 1,133,432. You say we should thank the Republican party for this mighty increase. What! Thank the Republican party when that party has forced our manufacturers to pay a tax of 45 per cent upon every one of the million of spindles turning to-day, upon every spindle to be put hereafter in motion, and upon every piece of machinery used in our cotton mills? For what must we thank you—for taxing us?

I respectfully submit that no sufficient reason can be given why any man engaged in the business of manufacturing cotton should vote the Republican ticket. At the last session of Congress I had the honor to submit certain statistics showing that the price of cotton-mill machinery was cheaper in England than it was in this country, and that the difference was just about covered by the Dingley tariff rates upon machinery of that kind.

Everybody, Mr. Chairman, knows the reason why the present prices of wheat and cotton are high. The demand is far greater than the supply. For thirty years, every time the southern farmers have received high prices for their cotton these prices have been accompanied by a greater or less calamity to the crop. I believe the same may be said with respect to the wheat farmers of the West, but I know it is true with respect to the cotton farmers of the South.

Let us take the crop of 1893. The crop of that year was 7,549,817 bales. It brought to the southern people in money $292,937,899. The next year, 1894, there was an increase of over 2,000,000 bales in the crop, but the farmers did not receive as much money for that crop as they did for the crop of 1893. In 1894 they produced 9,911,251 bales, which brought $288,918,504. Thus we see that the southern people did not receive as much money for nearly 10,000,000 bales in 1894 as they did for seven and one-half million bales in 1893. The crop of 1898 was greater by nearly 100,000 bales than the crop of 1897, and yet the crop of 1897 yielded the southern farmers $56,000,000 more in money than did the crop of 1898. The crop of 1899 was nearly 2,000,000 bales less than the crop of 1898, but it brought the southern people about $81,000,000 more than did the record-breaking crop of 1898.

So that we see there is no relation between Republican rule and high prices for farm products. If there were, the question might be asked why the price of cotton touched the lowest point during Mr. Harrison's Administration it had ever touched up to that time since the civil war. Only a demagogue, Mr. Chairman, employs such argument. But in our country, unfortunately, sometimes demagogues must be answered.

The record of the Republican party is not only one of broken pledges, but one of great extravagance. Year after year our expenses increase. A few years ago the newspapers were full of the "Reed billion-dollar Congress."

Now, Mr. Chairman, we have none but billion-dollar Congresses. It is quite the practice during these latter days to treat with ridicule almost any man who dares to speak for economy. Some day, probably when a panic is upon us, it will be ascertained that the Republican party, intoxicated with power and continued success, is now engaging in a perfect carnival of extravagance. The fatal mistake was made when those in power were tempted away from the safe and conservative pathway marked out by the founders of the Republic. This used to be a republic, not an empire. At one time in our national life the idea of owning colonies several thousand miles across the sea, governed from Washington, was abhorrent to the average American citizen.

Over in Arlington, Mr. Chairman, are buried those who gave up their lives for the Republic. There are others buried over there also. A few gave up their lives in an effort to divide the Republic. Were it required of us we could assign a sufficient reason for the sacrifice of all of these brave men except one. Passing along the silent avenues of that doubly sacred spot you come to the grave of the man who lost his life in defense of the Union. Why was this man sacrificed? Let the poet answer:

> In the beauty of the lilies Christ was born across the sea;
> As he died to make men holy, so this man died to make men free.

Passing on to the grave of the dead Confederate, you ask the same question: Why was this man sacrificed? And the answer comes back: His home was invaded; he believed his constitutional rights were violated, and he died that his constitutional rights might not be taken away from him. His death is not without its compensation. Let him sleep; let him sleep. No victor's crown pressed down upon his pallid brow, but a brighter crown, woven from God's perennial flowers, awaits the awakening of him who died for the right. [Prolonged Applause.]

Ah, Mr. Chairman, here is another grave. The granite that marks it is not quite so dark, nor the sod that covers it quite so thick. It is the grave of the poor unfortunate who lost his life in our efforts to subjugate a people who for centuries had been struggling to be free. This man was just as brave as the Federal; just as brave as the Confederate. Can we morally justify his sacrifice? Let history answer. We never needed the Philippine Islands. We do not need them to-day. They will always be a source of expense and irritation. There is nothing American about them, nor can they ever be made American. But if it is our destiny to retain them, we of the South, Mr. Chairman, will willingly help bear the burden. If any nation dares to attack them, we will help defend them. As long as they are under the Stars and Stripes let it be understood that they are to be developed and protected. In every war the country has ever fought the South has done its part. It stands ready to-day to do its full duty if any inch of soil under the Stars and Stripes is imperiled.

But there is a better conception of a republic. It is a republic extending from ocean to ocean, from the Arctic pole to Panama Canal, with the outlying islands of the sea as sentinels to give warning in case of attack. Let its motto be, "Equal and exact justice to all men; equal opportunity for all citizens, States, and sections," for these are the symbols of permanent union and everlasting political life. This, Mr. Chairman, would be a genuine American republic, and then indeed we would fulfill the poet's description of the ornamental border of the buckler of Achilles—

> Thus the broad shield complete—the artist crown'd
> With his last hand, and pour'd the ocean 'round;
> In living silver seemed the waves to roll
> And beat the buckler's verge, and bound the whole.

[Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. DALZELL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 12684) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. STEWART, Mr. PLATT of Connecticut, and Mr. DUBOIS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 4990. An act granting a pension to Georgia R. Demarest;

H. R. 12434. An act granting an increase of pension to Rebecca McKinney;

H. R. 12436. An act granting a pension to Ida E. Nerber;

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. BENTON. Mr. Chairman, I now yield fifteen minutes' time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER].

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Chairman, I propose to-day to address myself to the consideration of the ship-subsidy commission bill.

If this bill were the most innocent bill that ever came into this House, yet the conditions which gave it birth and the antecedent circumstances which led up to the introduction of the original ship-subsidy bill in the Fifty-sixth Congress should have stamped that bill with an indelible stain of dishonor, which should have precluded the possibility of any man, not blindly partisan, supporting it. The history of the events which preceded the appearance here of this commission bill clearly prove that it is but one of the ever recurrent efforts to still further rivet the shackles of monopoly upon the people.

I am well aware that denial will be made that this is the repayment to an organized band of unscrupulous but wealthy plutocrats, who were appealed to during the campaign of 1898 to "save" the country and incidentally the Republican party from that annihilation in the then pending Congressional elections which the chairman of that committee foresaw and which he pictured in glowing language, if terror can be so pictured. Organized plutocrats at that time did not so completely understand as they do now how insincere was the advertised statement of the chairman of the Republican committee that he favored certain reductions in the tariff schedules, particularly those affecting steel and iron. Because of this they refused to contribute to the Republican campaign fund of that year, and therefore the "honor" of the country, which had been "saved" at such tremendous cost two years before, was in serious danger. The outlook was appalling. It really seemed then, to those in charge of the Republican campaign, that there was great danger of the people again coming into their own, at least of taking the first step forward in that direction by the election of a Democratic Congress.

Whether the "business interests" felt that they had been "touched" too heavily in the campaign of 1896 I do not know, but certain it is, and no one familiar with the facts upon the other side of the House will dare deny it, that those interests were not "coming to time" as the Republicans had a right to expect they would during the Congressional campaign of 1898. They were evidently deluded with the idea that there was at least some element of sincerity in the ostentatious demand of a certain gentleman for the revision of the steel and iron schedules, and therefore refused to put up the "stuff" through which alone the "honor" of the country could again be saved.

In this situation of dire distress, and with the imminent possibility of the appalling calamity that would happen if the Democrats should have a majority in the Fifty-sixth Congress and thereby prevent the consummation of some of the contracts entered into two years before and which had not been entirely carried out, there was but one thing to do, and that was to enlist the active efforts of the man who, in 1896, raised the most colossal corruption fund which a political party ever had. These "business" interests—the plutocrats—had entire confidence that any contract they might enter into with him would be lived up to to the letter; aye, that they would not merely be able to get their "pound of flesh" out of the American people, but a large part of their hide if they felt disposed to foreclose their mortgage to that extent.

The contract was duly entered into, $400,000, or was it $500,000, was turned over by the "right" people and placed in the right hands, but not, as I am informed, into those of the usual committee. However, that is a mere matter of detail, and it is not for those on this side of the House to worry as to who dispensed this corruption fund. It is sufficient for us to know that that fund was provided; that it came almost entirely from a few men, and that the contract provided that the legislation which these men demanded should not only be theirs, but that every word of the bill, the passage of which would constitute the execution of the contract, should be written by them. They were not content, as the protected manufacturers had been in the case of the McKinley bill, merely to write the particular schedule which had to do with their industry, but they insisted upon the right to write every word of the bill, dot every i, cross every t, and this right was accorded them.

In an article written while the ship-subsidy bill was before this House, Royal Meeker, secretary of the tariff-reform committee of the Reform Club of New York, speaking of the ante-election bargain of 1898, out of which that bill sprang, said:

> The history of the ship-subsidy bill, which recently passed the Senate and is now pending in the House, dates back to December of 1898, when Senator Hanna introduced the bill prepared by the notorious "committee" of experts, composed of the shipowners who would receive the bounty granted by their own little bill. It is usual for the beneficiaries of protection to prepare the measures by which they profit in the seclusion of the committee room, but never before did such a gang of raiders so openly and arrogantly demand public money. No attempt at concealment was made. It was well known that the steamship companies made a large donation (said to be $500,000) to the Republican campaign fund for that year on the stipulation that they were to write their own subsidy bill and that Senator Hanna would exert his power and influence to put through this gigantic raid on the National Treasury.

That Democrats were not the only ones who learned of the ante-election bargain, under which a large corruption fund was provided, in return for which the contributors were assured of the passage of a ship-subsidy bill, is seen in a statement prepared and extensively circulated at that time by a prominent Republican and a protectionist. I regret that time will not permit me to do anything more than quote a few of its more salient paragraphs. The document is headed:

SOME FACTS REGARDING THE HANNA-PAYNE SHIPPING BILL.

[By Samuel Adams Robinson, M. D.]

> To those who know me it is not necessary to explain the incentive of this appeal in order to prevent them from misunderstanding my position, but for those who do not I will say that as I own property in New York City, including deep-water front, which this bill would surely increase the value of, and have no property or other interest, except my interest in the general welfare of the country, that it could injure, its enactment into law would certainly benefit me pecuniarily.

> Knowing that a committee largely composed of representatives of the most powerful transportation lines in the United States and Europe had been for a number of years working to secure legislation in the interest of those great corporations, I could but infer that they were the authors of this bill, and thought it fair to conclude that it was intended to benefit the interests they represented, regardless of all else.

> During the six years in which I have devoted my time and income to economic work I have always been able to secure a fair presentation of my views in such newspapers as I selected, and although, owing to a desire to avoid notoriety, I rarely signed an article, and, indeed, seldom presented my views in my own words, thousands of newspapers all over the land have published what I sent them. Though an active advocate of the gold standard and currency reform, I have very seldom found a man or paper advocating free silver that would not give a fair hearing to my side of the case.

* * * * * * * *

It has remained for those who advocate this bill to teach me that a large part of the press of the United States can be so muzzled as to make it wellnigh impossible to get the truth before the public. Only inability to get what I have said and will say in this circular to the people in the usual way has induced me to publish it in this manner. I am by no means alone in this experience, as will be seen by the following, which is one of numerous instances that have come to my knowledge.

So that, according to Doctor Robinson, these gentlemen have added the crime of suppressing free speech to that of corrupting the suffrage.

This is what the Doctor has to say on that subject:

One of the most prominent, able, and honorable officers of labor organizations, members of which are engaged in the shipbuilding trades as well as in other industries, informs me that in his long experience he has always found newspapers ready to print any information which he gave them and anxious to interview him upon subjects in which the organizations he represents were interested, but that he has seen the editors of many papers that had heretofore been anxious to publish his contributions, and has been unable to induce one of them to print a line against the Hanna-Payne bill, though he knew that some of them were personally opposed to it.

I know instances in which newspapers have been compelled by those advocating the bill to stop the publication of anything calculated to teach the people its true character. Men in very high positions have amazed me by their efforts to muzzle the press with regard to this bill.

Mark, "Men in very high positions" have been "muzzling the press" so that the public should not know the real facts concerning this bill. We hear a great deal about terrorism nowadays. Can there be any worse terrorism than that which can prevent the great organs of public opinion from expressing their views on proposed legislation?

What can possibly be the relation between the plutocratic subsidy hunters and newspapers which they can "compel" to stop publishing matter tending to enlighten the public mind on this subject? Nothing that has been said on this side of the House in denunciation of this bill can compare in severity with this assertion of Doctor Robinson. It, however, but "lifts the lid" and discloses how unscrupulous are the methods employed by these financial "magnates" when they are interested in legislation. Bill Tweed's methods were crude and uncouth compared with theirs.

Doctor Robinson continues:

Never before in a long and busy life, during which I have always kept in reasonably close touch with the press of my country, have I had reason to suspect that the brutal power of capital and corporations could so suppress the truth, and I warn them that our free schools have taught our people the importance of a free press.

Doctor Robinson evidently foresaw the attempt to form a shipping trust which would gain strength from this policy of ship subsidies, as he says:

The vast sum which this bill would take from the taxpayers of the United States for subsidies is not its most dangerous feature. The gigantic monopoly which it would create is much more to be feared.

That the International Mercantile Marine Company has been less of a financial success than its sponsors expected is probably largely due to the fact that they overcapitalized the bounty which the Griscom Company—the International Navigation Company, a large constituent element of the International Mercantile Marine Company—now receives from the United States Treasury. The extent of this bounty is indicated in the fact that it received in 1902 for carrying the United States mail two and one-half times as much as the Cunard Line was paid by our Government, although it carried only half as much first-class mail (letters) and only three-quarters as much printed matter. Great is "patriotism," especially when it is capitalized at cent per cent!

Doctor Robinson also says:

Mr. Edmunds probably feels that he has a perfect right to advocate this bill notwithstanding the fact that he voted in the Senate against the bill under which the Griscom, which is our only subsidized line, now runs; he was then a Senator from Vermont, and being now a Philadelphia lawyer his position is of course entirely different; indeed, I am told by one of the men on the inside of shipping circles that he now receives only $1,000 for each time he goes to Washington to promote the passage of the bill.

And concludes with this very truthful characterization:

The genesis of this bill is greed, its mask enterprise and patriotism, and its purpose monopoly.

SAMUEL ADAMS ROBINSON.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February, 1899.

The present Speaker of this House hit the mark when he said a few years ago:

To give a bonus to assist certain persons to make a sale of steamships at a price greater than their value would encourage individuals to knock at the doors of Congress for profit at the general expense.

As a resident of the rural West he is apparently unfamiliar with the ways of "Wall street." The gentlemen there don't sell ships; they have found it much easier to sell stocks, trebly inflated.

SAME OLD CROWD! SAME OLD STORY!

A very noteworthy fact in connection with the whole procedure at this session in relation to the ship-subsidy question is this:

The men who were back of the original plan to profit at the expense of their fellows in the Hanna-Payne ship-subsidy bill are the same men, or at least represent the same interests, that clamored for subsidies in the earlier years. They are the same men who have been clamoring for subsidies ever since this proposed malodorous legislation was initiated. They are the same men who appeared before committees of Congress at all subsidy hearings of late years. They are the same men, or certainly representative of identical interests, who appeared at the hearing in advocacy of the pending bill to provide a ship-subsidy commission. They are the same men who have appeared before House and Senate committees in advocacy of the bill to extend the coastwise laws to the Philippine Islands, and thereby give a monopoly of this business to the ships that some of them control; the same men who have advocated the bill to force the carriage of all governmental supplies in American vessels regardless of cost.

These two Philippine shipping bills would affect comparatively few ships and very few lines. They are not worth to the shipping interests anything like the legislative value placed upon their passage. The cardinal point of the whole agitation is that the commission bill and both Philippine shipping bills are steps in the direction of a general ship subsidy, and therein lies their strength and their enthusiastic and united support among the beneficiaries of these particular measures and those who expect to benefit from the general subsidy measure which is designed to be passed at the next session of this Congress. All of the arguments that have been made at all of the hearings have been subsidy arguments. The same old crowd, the same old subsidy, the "same old story—nothing new."

RESULTS ABROAD.

The subsidy system has many earnest advocates in this country who never fail to point in a general way to results obtained in foreign countries through the fostering care of their governments, it being stated that wherever there has been an extensive development of the merchant marine this was due to the systematic appropriation of large sums from the state treasury for the special object of encouraging shipping. These assertions have been made so frequently by newspapers, on the platform, and in Congress that a great many people consider them a matter of record, and no longer question them. An examination will, however, show that they have no foundation in fact. Take the EXPERIENCE OF FRANCE.

France and Italy are conspicuous examples of the negative result of subsidies. The French ship-subsidy system dates from the year 1881, and was rearranged in 1893. The payments in the year 1896 (the latest date contained in the United States special consular reports) were:

	Francs.
For bounties to navigation	9,574,720
For bounties to construction	4,106,348
For postal subsidies	26,183,000
Total	39,864,068

Thus the yearly payment from the French treasury for the encouragement of shipping reached in 1896, an average year, the great sum of nearly 40,000,000 francs ($8,000,000).

Now, let us see the result. According to the report of the United States consul at Havre of September 6, 1889 (made to the State Department and published in the Special Consular Reports, Vol. XVIII), the total increase of French mercantile tonnage in the five years from 1893, the year of the enactment of the new law, until 1898 was 66,961 tons, "the increase being limited to vessels which receive no benefits from the bounty law of 1893, while the steam tonnage engaged in meeting foreign competition actually showed a decrease."

After eighteen years of bounty payments, a committee of the French Parliament in 1898 reported as follows:

We do not hesitate to say, without fear of contradiction, that our merchant marine is in such a state of decadence that there is reason to be uneasy about our naval fleet.

After quoting the above in his report of September 6, 1899, to the State Department, the United States consul at Havre, says:

Many other extracts might be quoted from the reports of various chambers of commerce, from speeches made in the two houses of Parliament, and from lectures delivered by experts in economics, all lamenting the depressed state of the merchant navy of France.

As appears from the figures given above, the French Government pays postal subsidies, premiums on the construction of French ships, and premiums on voyages made by French ships. The effect of this policy is thus described by the United States consul at Marseilles in his report to the State Department of July 20, 1899 (Special Consular Reports, Vol. XVIII, p. 36):

The shipowners, at first disposed to give orders to domestic builders, found the latter constantly increasing their prices, until the point was reached where the builders were accused of calculating the amount of premium which proposed constructions would command and adding that amount to their own cost price, thus absorbing the premium for navigation and the one for construction.

This consul concludes that—

The merchant marine of France is in an unsatisfactory condition—and expresses the opinion that—

The inferiority of the French merchant marine is attributable to the timidity or indifference of French capital.

FAR FROM SATISFACTORY.

The Italian Government pays navigation subsidies and construction bounties, but the United States consul-general at Rome, in his report to the State Department of July 25, 1899 (Special Consular Reports, Vol. XVIII, p. 72), makes the following comment:

In view of the efforts of the Government to encourage Italian shipping, the long seaboard, and the necessity of shipping to the economical life of the country, the results are certainly far from satisfactory; and it is particularly remarkable that the tonnage of Italian steamers remains generally so low, while in other countries the tendency has been toward the employment of larger ships as more economical in working. The bulk of the subsidies are paid to two or three companies, which by constant favor have established a sort of shipping monopoly and successfully use their influence to crush all possible rivals.

Here in this country, where we are told "there are no trusts," of course no shipping monopoly can ever be created.

GREAT BRITAIN'S MERCHANT MARINE.

Great Britain has, according to latest reports, a merchant marine consisting of 8,352 steamers, with a total of 13,652,455 tons. By far the greatest part of the world's ocean carrying trade is conveyed in British bottoms, and there is hardly a port in any part of the globe where British ships do not ply and the British flag is not a frequent visitor. But has this result been brought about by Government bounties? Let us see what United States consuls say on this point in their reports to the State Department in response to a Department circular instructing them to investigate the condition of the merchant marine in the countries where they are located and the policy adopted by the Government for its promotion. Presumably they were expected to find everything that would constitute an argument for ship subsidies; and yet the United States consul-general at London—a cousin of President McKinley—on September 12, 1899 (Special Consular Reports, Vol. XVIII, p. 107), reports as follows:

The Government of this country does not pursue any particular policy for the purpose of promoting its merchant marine. Subventions are paid for the use of certain vessels as armed cruisers in case of war, and payments are made for the carriage of mails.

And (p. 108):

The policies of the other nations toward their merchant shipping do not meet with much discussion or criticism in this country, nor are they copied.

He might have added that British shipbuilders are able to underbid French shipbuilders both as to cost and in time of construction, although the latter pay their workmen a much lower per diem wage than is paid in British shipyards.

The United States consul at Liverpool, on August 30, 1899 (Special Consular Reports, Vol. XVIII, pp. 111 and 112), makes the following statements:

The Government does nothing to promote the merchant marine in the way of subsidizing it or the builders who construct it. Payments, aggregating some $243,000 per annum, are made for the call of certain steamers (eleven) as armed cruisers in case of war. The mail subsidies (toward which the colonies pay a part) are put up to competition, and the cheapest bidder, having regard to efficiency, secures the contract.

And—

While much interest is taken in shipping circles in Liverpool regarding the policies of other nations toward their own merchant shipping, there is no perceptible sign that the British policy has been influenced, beyond stimulating British shipowners to greater efficiency and economy in the working of their fleets.

NO GOVERNMENT ENCOURAGEMENT.

Irrespective of the payments for postal service and the compensation to the eleven steamers that may be used for cruisers, no subsidy or bounty has been paid by Great Britain to steamship lines for their support or encouragement. For a country like Great Britain, with its vast system of colonies and military and naval posts, the maintenance of constant and efficient mail communication is of the utmost importance, which has been paid for since the day of the sailing vessel, when it surely never occurred to anyone to consider such payments as in the nature of subsidies for the encouragement of shipping. I quote the following from an editorial in the well-known English shipping journal Fairplay, of December 3, 1903:

No man living could be found to say that any English Government ever offered encouragement directly or indirectly to English shipping in any shape or form. Much misapprehension has arisen from the use of the word "subsidy," which implies a fixed payment for no specific work. As pointed out again and again, our Government is charged with the delivery of the mails, and also with the delivery of stores for different parts of the world. In each case the work is put up to tender, and, provided the contractors tendering are in a position to ensure the proper performance of the contract, the lowest bidder gets the work. Payment for the carriage of mails no more constitutes what is understood as a subsidy for the encouragement of shipping than payment for the carriage of stores, and the sort of encouragement shipowners get from our Government in the latter connection may be inferred from a study of the terms recently issued by the Government for the carriage of stores to the Cape.

But leaving aside the question to what extent, if any, the payments made by the British Government for postal service are in aid to the steamship lines that receive them, the indubitable fact remains that these lines represent only a small part of the great ocean tonnage of Great Britain's merchant marine, and that by far the greatest part of it receives no consideration whatever from the Government. It has grown up and prospered because of the enterprise of the British people and because the Government has given it a fair field and no favor without putting difficulties and obstructions in its way. If the British Government has deviated from its long-established policy, in granting a large subsidy to the Cunard Line for the construction of two very large and very fast vessels, it has no doubt done so because the situation created by Mr. Morgan's steamship merger seemed to require extraordinary measures in order to relieve public apprehension, which, as time has shown, was entirely unjustified. The action of the British Government in this respect is an exceptional one, and the two steamers to be built with Government aid do not affect the general policy of Great Britain under which, with its fleet of over 8,300 steamers of over 13,500,000 tons, it has reached its preeminence in the world's shipping traffic.

GERMANY'S EXPERIENCE.

The experience of Germany also proves that a country can obtain a large and steadily growing merchant marine without offering a reward for it. Up to the year 1885 Germany paid no subsidy whatever to any steamship line. In that year, however, following the French example, a system of subsidies for the carriage of foreign mails was adopted by the Government. In what light the payment of subsidies was considered by the German shipping trade is splendidly illustrated by the following protest, published at the time by the Hamburg Merchants' Society.

After a formal preliminary, it says:

Thus far German commerce and navigation have been able to compete with those of other nations, and their present strong position is chiefly due to their own exertions. Even if the French Government should extend larger monopolies and subsidies to their national trade and commerce, the Hamburg shipping merchants are not afraid that, if let alone, their own development would be injured or suffer under such adverse legislation. The growth and prosperity of national trade are, before all, created by the natural talent and disposition of a people.

Governmental measures, whether they consist in throwing artificial obstacles in the way of foreign competition or in direct support of the national flag, may here and there bring temporary advantages to individual enterprises, but they will never be able permanently to raise and elevate the shipping interest. On the contrary, as experience has shown in France, they paralyze individual energy and endanger the spirit of enterprise and effect the decline if not the ruin of trade. In the interest of German commerce and of the national flag, the Hamburg merchants most earnestly and respectfully pray that all governmental measures for their protection be definitely set aside.

The German law granting subsidies for a mail-steamship service to Asia and Australia was enacted on April 6, 1885, the beneficiary being the North German Lloyd, whose first steamer on this service left Bremerhaven on June 30, 1886. The contracts under the first subsidy enactment were made for fifteen years: the Hamburg-American Line did not submit offers for these contracts, but preferred to remain unfettered by Government regulations.

HOW THE HAMBURG-AMERICAN LINE FARED.

How did the Hamburg-American fare without the subsidy payments? At the beginning of the bounty period in 1886, that line had 26 ocean steamers of 66,000 tons. During these fifteen years when, according to the arguments of the subsidy hunters who are clamoring for this bill, it would not be possible for it to compete, the line steadily grew and expanded, until in 1901 it had 127 ocean steamers of 630,091 tons and maintained 35 different services to all parts of the world. Without any aid from any state or government whatsoever it grew to be the largest steamship enterprise in the world.

In 1900 the German subsidy contract was renewed, and the Hamburg-American Line, believing that the interests of Hamburg required a participation in the east Asiatic fast mail service, agreed to construct two steamers in accordance with Government regulations and place them in this service. These two steamers, the Hamburg and Kiautschou, ran for two years on this route in connection with the service maintained by the North German Lloyd.

The Lloyd placed altogether thirteen steamers in the Imperial mail service and received at first $1,047,560 and by the law of 1899, $1,330,420 per annum for this service. (Report of the United States consul-general in Berlin, of October 25, 1899, Special Cons. Rep., Vol. XVIII, p. 59.)

The two steamers built by the Hamburg-American Line, which joined the service in 1901, received a proportionate share of the subvention, but in the fall of last year the Hamburg-American Line voluntarily withdrew from the contract, preferring to maintain its own service to eastern Asia without Government restrictions.

They do things differently here. We never hear of men who have been given the power to draw a subsidy, or any other form of governmental assistance, surrendering such a privilege. Today the Hamburg-American Line, after an existence of nearly fifty-seven years, has a fleet of 125 ocean steamers of 619,916 tons and 155 other vessels of 31,235 tons, or a total of 280 vessels of 651,151 tons. These are employed in thirty-nine different services. During its whole life it has received no subsidy from any source with the single exception noted above, viz, that out of its whole fleet of 125 ocean steamers but 2 ships, and for only two years, participated in a subvention which the German Government gave for a fast service to the Far East.

Nothing can better illustrate the value of subsidies than the voluntary withdrawal of this line from participation in it. Evidently the company discovered that their business was not stimulated by the subsidy.

The New York Herald of November 21, 1903, contained a letter from Senator FRYE, written in reply to an interview with Mr. Ballin, director-general of the Hamburg-American Line, published in the Herald of November 17, 1903. Referring to the report of United States Consul-General Mason, at Berlin, published in Special Consular Reports XVIII, for the year 1900, the Senator says:

> Our consul-general goes on to show how subsidy and the accompanying requirements that the subsidized ships should be built in German yards so stimulated construction in the Empire that both the North German Lloyd and Hamburg-American companies were enabled to order home ships like the Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse, Friedrich der Grosse, Koenigin Luise, Auguste Victoria, Fürst Bismarck, Patricia, and Palatia.
> "That they did this at all," Consul-General Mason declares, "was mainly due to the fact that they were forced into it by an act of legislation."

Granting that this represents Consul-General Mason's meaning, then he is in error upon his own showing, for how can the Hamburg-American Line have been forced by legislative acts to patronize home builders, when, as the consul states in the same connection, the imperial statute enacted in 1884 (actually 1885) granted subsidies to the North German Lloyd only?

Second. The Hamburg-American liners mentioned above were constructed in the years 1889, 1890, 1899, and 1895, respectively, while the Hamburg-American Line "enjoyed the benefits" of a subsidy for two steamers (out of a fleet of 125), together with thirteen Lloyd steamers, from 1901 to 1903.

Third. Regarding the advantages of this subsidy, attention is called to the report of the United States Commissioner of Navigation for 1899, which shows on page 155 that the North German Lloyd "thus far has not only made no profit from its contract to carry the mails, but rather has lost 5,258,563 marks."

That the Hamburg-American Line was not "forced by legislative action to withdraw its patronage from British constructors" (Vice-Consul-General Mason's report) is amply proven by the fact that during all this period it has repeatedly ordered ships in British yards, notably the Pennsylvania, sister ship of the Patricia, mentioned above, in 1896, and has now contracted for its latest and largest vessel at the yards of Harland & Wolff, in Belfast.

I want to quote from the statement of a former Member of this House, Hon. John De Witt Warner, representing the tariff reform committee of the Reform Club, made to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries on January 30, 1900, and over which the gentleman from Ohio, General GROSVENOR, presided:

STATEMENT BY EX-CONGRESSMAN JOHN DE WITT WARNER.

Mr. WARNER. I represent my own opinions, of some years' standing, and the Reform Club. Our tariff-reform committee has taken decided action against the bill, and has asked me to come here and oppose it.

At "(f)," on page 10, the provision is that a vessel shall not take the subsidy when less than one-half of the whole length of her outward and homeward voyages shall have been on the seas between a port of the United States and a foreign port. In one sense every mile of a vessel, even though it went all around the world, would be between a port of the United States and a foreign port.

I take it, however, that what is meant is that it must have been on the sea between a port of the United States and the first foreign port on her outward voyage or the last foreign port on her homeward voyage. But, gentlemen, if you want the bill to mean that, you have got to say so. Otherwise that provision leaves a ship to wander around the world, to take a journey around the world, if you please, and do practically all its work in carrying foreign goods between different foreign ports and then collect the American subsidy from the United States, and the longer it stays away the more it collects.

I take it for granted that your committee will amend that. I do not suppose you mean anything like that, but it seems to me that is a very serious objection to the bill, unless you want to make it a great deal more preposterous than its enemies have ever suggested that anyone really meant to make it.

Now, there is a clause providing that the Secretary shall "contract." What does that mean? It either means that there is some discretion left to the Secretary of the Treasury as to the contract he shall make, or else it does not. If it does not mean that the Secretary is to have any discretion whatever——

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. GROSVENOR). It says in plain terms "any," and it mandatorily and specifically means any owner of any ship.

Mr. WARNER. I accept the Chairman's conclusion; and that is just exactly what I thought would be claimed by the friends of the bill. Now, if that be true and the Secretary of the Treasury has no discretion whatever, then the word "contract" here is a farce, and can only mean a bogus contract upon which a claim may be made that this bill and its provisions can not be repealed, thereby to get around the plain hint of the decision of the court in the case of the Louisiana sugar bounties. Take either horn of the dilemma, gentlemen. Either this word "contract" is a farce, put in there for this purpose, or else it gives the Secretary of the Treasury a power which no Congress will ever dare knowingly to give any administrative officer.

Mr. WACHTER. Can all American ships be manned by American sailors? Is the supply large enough?

Mr. WARNER. The supply of American sailors is as adequate to man all American ships, if an opportunity is to be given American labor, as the supply of American capital is to corral the whole American trade, if the aim is to foster the export trade in our produce and manufactures.

Mr. WACHTER. I do not want any "ifs." Is it?

Mr. WARNER. Yes, unquestionably, if you pay enough. If you will put in a subsidy in this bill providing for minimum wages to seamen and carrying, say, one-quarter or even one-tenth of the amount you propose to pay capital, you can have manned by American sailors every single ton of American ships entitled now to registry in the foreign trade.

The CHAIRMAN. You would provide a scale of wages in an act of Congress, then?

Mr. WARNER. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Why not?

Mr. WARNER. Because I do not believe in subsidizing or pauperizing either capital or labor.

The CHAIRMAN. But if you were going to pass this——

Mr. WARNER. Yes; if I were going to do that, I would make a fairer division than is here proposed.

The CHAIRMAN. You would regulate by the law the price of clothing, and so on?

Mr. WARNER. I certainly should take as good care of the American seaman as I did of the American millionaire.

The CHAIRMAN. That is another thing.

Mr. WARNER. And I would not give a dollar to one unless there was a dollar provided for the other, and at the same time pretend that I was looking out for the seaman and not the millionaire.

Mr. FORDNEY. You object to the bill from beginning to end. Have you anything to offer in its place?

Mr. WARNER. Yes; free trade in ships.

The CHAIRMAN. And free trade in goods also?

Mr. WARNER. Yes. This country has had free trade in men ever since the Republican Administration during our war time sent over and arranged for foreign laborers to come here and take the place of those in the field. You have a little bit of a contract-labor arrangement which, if it were proposed in regard to goods as an alternative for the tariff, there is not a protectionist in the country but what would go wild. We have free trade in labor. So long as we have that, let us have free trade in goods.

Mr. HOPKINS. That is not a fair statement.

Mr. WARNER. That is the truth.

The CHAIRMAN. I have heard you talk this way about free trade before, but I do not recollect of ever hearing you agitate the question of keeping that foreign labor out.

Mr. WARNER. No; I am in favor of keeping our ports open for labor and for goods, but I am not in favor of keeping goods out and letting labor in free.

Mr. WACHTER. * * * You do not mean to say you are the only friend of the workingman in this room?

Mr. WARNER. No; not in the slightest. I am free to say I do not imagine that even the authors of this bill got it up in order to swindle labor. I don't think they cared what it did to labor. * * * I have no doubt it is drawn to meet the precise views of the gentlemen who drafted it. I am not for one moment impugning their intelligence.

* * * * * * *

The CHAIRMAN. Is it customary to amend a bill by the adoption of the amendments proposed by its enemies?

Mr. WARNER. Do I understand that this committee proposes to report this bill in the shape the friends of the bill want it? If so, there is no use of this hearing.

The CHAIRMAN. I have no doubt that those who want to report the bill at all will take the advice of the friends of the bill rather than those who want to load the bill with dynamite to kill it.

Mr. WARNER. I have been trying to entertain a doubt of that. I have been trying to believe that this committee was not committed, but that it would listen as thoroughly to the enemies of the bill as it would to the friends of the bill.

* * * * * * *

Mr. WARNER. I want to call attention to the fact that although it is claimed by some of the promoters of the bill that the subsidy is not sufficient to tempt ships to run expressly for that purpose, yet there are two facts which the committee should keep in mind: First, that under any conditions, so far as they last for any great length of time, there is a great deal of running in ballast now by unsubsidized ships. If there is a great deal of running in ballast now by unsubsidized ships, then under a subsidy which pays a premium for running even in ballast, no argument is needed to show that the amount of running in ballast would be vastly increased.

* * * * * * *

Mr. WARNER. The second point I want to make is this: It will have the tendency to induce ships not engaged in legitimate commerce between two ports to abandon that regular trade and, under the provisions in this bill, allowing them to continue their voyage, to go tramping around the world. The cost of the actual voyage being small in comparison to the cost of starting and going back for call with demurrage, and so forth, the ship will find it profitable under this subsidy to keep on around the world half empty.

SHIPPING INDUSTRIES ALREADY PROSPEROUS.

President McKinley, in his speech at the Chicago Commercial Club banquet on October 10, 1899, said:

"Our shipbuilding has been greatly increased. For the first time in all our history the tonnage of our steam vessels exceeded on June 1 the tonnage of all our sailing vessels, barges, and other craft. We built in 1897 and 1898 more vessels of steel than of all other materials combined. Our tonnage increased during the year 100,000 tons, and is without a parallel in our recent history. More large ocean steamships are under construction in the United States than ever before. Our shipbuilding plants are being enlarged and new establishments projected."

* * * * * * *

SUBSIDY NOT PROPORTIONED TO CARGO.

Though prefaced by canting "whereases," professing great solicitude for the farmer, laborer, etc., and especially for the American seaman and the American Navy, it is so drawn as to give no benefit to those classes, but in their name to secure additional profits to capital already profitably invested. As a result it has been expressly repudiated and condemned by the greatest labor organization, the Federation of Labor; by the leading farmers' association, the National Grange, and favored by so few and comparatively petty interests as to make its "popular" support a farce.

The spirit in which this bill is drafted is indicated by the fact that while typical freighters, capable of carrying cargoes equaling in actual tons their registered tonnage and making 14 knots an hour, are subsidized at 2½ cents per registered ton per 100 miles for the first 1,500 miles and at 2 cents per registered ton per 100 miles for the remainder of the voyage, swift passenger steamers, so constructed as to carry of freight not more than one-fourth to one-sixth of their registered tonnage, but running 21 knots an hour, are subsidized at 3.8 and 3.3 cents, respectively, for registered ton per 100 miles; that is, in proportion to American exports carried the subsidy is from six to ten times as high on passenger steamers as it is on freighters.

COLOSSAL IMPUDENCE.

The impudence with which the proposed extortion is demanded is unique even in a history of scandals, including that of the sugar trust. If the claim had not been openly made that, provided the subsidy grabbers were agreed upon division of the spoil, Congress ought to be satisfied and objectors considered impertinent, it would be almost incredible that it should be pressed. This is, however, precisely what the subsidy beggars are doing. For example, at page 30 of the committee's printed hearings, 1900, Mr. Griscom admits that his company would receive, say, $1,500,000 in subsidy within a year after the passage of the bill. (Other calculations make it about $2,500,000.)

At page 33 of the same hearings, Mr. Clyde, also a proposed beneficiary, refers to the "committee," including Mr. Griscom and himself, "which prepared that" (subsidy) "bill," states that "the committee is satisfied with the amount that Mr. Griscom's company" (International Navigation Company) "is to receive," and adds:

If we are satisfied, we who expect to share the direct benefits of this bill, to begin with, if we are satisfied to see one single member of that committee receive that much money, in whose affairs we have no interest whatever, we think you can be sure that he is not getting more than the services he renders are fairly worth. If we can agree among ourselves as to how that money can be distributed (to themselves) so as to do the most good and build up the largest possible merchant marine, I do not think that you should give weight to the adverse criticisms of people who have had no practical experience in the ownership or operation of ships.

It is not that the claims of these gentlemen are more preposterous than have been those of some others, but that they, more than others, have not seen fit, in this one particular, to assume a virtue that they did not have.

SURRENDER TO TRUST BLACKMAILERS.

The worst feature of this subsidy scheme, as shown by the personnel of its backers and admissions and statements of hearings already had, is, however, this: It indicates a final and hopeless surrender on the part of a great industry, blackmailed by our most indefensible trusts into cooperation with them, and an acceptance of their aid to secure for itself equal plunder from the Government instead of demanding Government protection against their rapacity.

LABOR BOUNTY GOES TO CAPITAL.

Similar also is the contrast between the $2 yearly for full registered tonnage, no matter if employed for only three months in the year, that is assured deep-sea fishing vessels, with the requirement of only one-third American crew, and a bounty to each of $1 per ton "during his time necessarily employed" on the voyage.

This is more delightful when it is recalled that, since no minimum wage is specified and the employer gets his men in the open market, this $1 bounty to sailors is really an additional contribution to the vessel owner, since a sailor can, on even terms, otherwise ship with the subsidized owner at a dollar less a month.

* * * * * * *

A feature of Senator Edmund's argument is the stalwart character of the United States Constitution in sustaining the strain of anything subsidy grabbers want, and its fragility when faced with anything which would actually carry out what they profess they are after.

SUBSIDY COMBINE A NEW YORK CONCERN.

I take it that no one is expected to believe that Mr. Griscom's little romance of how a thoughtful statesman, dreaming of our export trade, inaugurated this movement by calling in a dozen interested investors, the very gentlemen whom the thoughtful statesman in question already knew from legislative experience were the most unscrupulous grabbers on earth.

The fact is that this subsidy is essentially a New York concern, the profits of whose schemes would inure most largely to New York and to interests centered there. The source of its energy is on the opposite side of Trinity churchyard upon which my office looks. The office of its figurehead and fugleman, Mr. Smith, is also at New York—naturally and for the convenience of the great New York interest—and will doubtless remain there under the new appointment he has just received as special agent of the census in charge of shipbuilding inquiry. Mr. Smith has thus been added to those whom Government position gives special opportunities to aid this shipbuilding combine and to make its arguments "official."

I sincerely disclaim any objection, in case the rest of the country is willing to be taxed to have its avails poured into the coffers of New York capitalists. Inasmuch as any distribution of such largesse could scarcely be on the basis of merit, I do not even complain that you have picked out the least needy and least deserving gentlemen among us. I do want to make it plain, however, that if the rest of the country is willing thus to sacrifice itself for some of our fellow-citizens, it is not by our request; and the rest of the country will not be thanked by us for it.

HAUTE FINANCE.

As an evidence of the kind of "haute finance" that is induced by legislation of this character may be cited that in an address before the Senate Committee on Commerce January 12, 1899 (page 29 of official report), Mr. Clement A. Griscom, president of the International Navigation Company (a large constituent element of the International Mercantile Marine Company), in speaking of what would have to be done under the provisions of the then pending bill, said his company would have to build 66,000 tons of ships, at a cost of $7,500,000, if the bill became a law. This was equivalent to saying that they would cost $125 a ton.

And yet we are told that the 1,000,000 tons of shipping taken over by the International Mercantile Marine Company—Morgan's shipping trust—is capitalized at $190 a ton, although most of the ships are said to be 10 years old and over. What the value of 20-year old ships is is indicated in the recent sale of the City of Rome (originally one of the finest liners traversing the Atlantic), which cost $1,500,000, for $85,000, to break up. It is claimed that more than half of the Morgan-Griscom fleet are over 12 years old.

It is no wonder that being capitalized at $190 a ton the bonds of the combine have within a few weeks sold down to 84¼. Nor is it surprising that the combine demands its pound of flesh in the form of a ship subsidy. The only thing that surprises is that these modern Shylocks should have consented to postpone its collection in view of the uncertainties of the pending Presidential election. It would be more natural for them to foreclose their mortgage now and insist upon this largesse to boost the bonds of the combine and to give a little life to its preferred stock. But perhaps they have not yet shaken out all of the innocents who bought that stock because of their sublime, if childlike, faith in the "high" character, "deserved" reputation, "great" ability, "commanding" influence, etc., of the eminent financiers who recommended the shipping water as a desirable investment—the water being ample to float the largest of the combine's ships.

In discussing this question of subsidies the Journal of Commerce, one of the great commercial papers of the country, said only a few days ago:

[Journal of Commerce and Commercial Bulletin, New York, Saturday, March 5, 1904.]

It has been maintained that in spite of the high standard of wages in this country the materials for shipbuilding can be produced at less cost than in any other country, and that even the labor in using these materials in construction does not cost substantially more.

In commenting on a magazine article by Mr. Cramp, the Philadelphia shipbuilder, an advocate of subsidies, it further says:

He put the stress entirely upon the cost of operating after the ship is built. But supposing it is true that building ships costs 25 to 30 per cent more and operating them costs 30 to 40 per cent more under the American flag, what is the logical argument so far as American commerce is concerned? It proves, of course, that it is much cheaper to have our exports and imports carried in foreign vessels. It enables us to get more for the exports, as less will have to be deducted for transportation, supposing that cost to come out of their value, and to pay less for the imports, as it will cost less to bring them to our ports; in other words, the real balance in the trade will be more in our favor. It pays us to have the carrying done rather than to do it ourselves.

In speaking of the mooted question of the comparative return to capital in the United States and in Europe, it says:

So far as return upon capital is concerned, it is doubtful whether there is any material difference now between the demands of this country and the most advanced countries of Europe.

I assume it refers to capital engaged in non-monopolistic enterprises, for there can be no question that capital invested in monopolies is receiving a very large return, the earnings of the United States Steel Corporation for the two years 1901 and 1902 being probably equal to the actual capital (not capitalization) invested in its plants, railroads, wharves, etc., while the "captains of industry" who manipulate such companies as the Brooklyn Union Gas Company, the Consolidated Gas Company, and the Metropolitan Traction Company, of New York, get back the sum of their original investment in from three to five years, while retaining their stock. It continues:

But if capital does not go into building and operating ships for the ocean carrying trade, it is because it can under present conditions do better in other employments. If our higher standard of wages is what makes it impracticable to build and operate ships for this trade in competition with others, it is solely because that standard can be maintained in other employments and not in that. Both capital and labor do that which will give them the best return, and from the proceeds they hire others to do what it will not pay them to do.

SOUND ECONOMIC POLICY.

This is the only sound, economic policy. It is equally as sound for aggregations of individuals (nations) as for individuals, and never would be departed from if shrewd men had not learned that the surest way to success, if they had "an axe to grind," was to talk "patriotism," as they could then rely upon prejudice taking the place of reason, and thus could more surely put into effect their plan of taxing others, of course, solely for the good of those they taxed.

The Journal of Commerce then goes on to puncture the claim that ship subsidies would place no added burden on commerce. It says:

It is said that under the subsidy policy Americans would be able to pay the high wages and build ships, and pay the high cost of operating and sail the ships, in competition with those of other countries and without increasing the cost of ocean transportation, and thereby the mercantile marine would be built up, labor and capital would have increased employment, and there would be no added burden upon our commerce. But the cost of transportation has to be paid, and it has to come out of the production of the country.

It well says:

If subsidies could have the promised effect, which they could not without an enormous annual cost—far beyond that calculated by the advocates of this policy—it would only be because the Government paid a large part of the cost of transportation directly to the shipowners.

Of course to the gentlemen on the other side of the House this will not appear as particularly objectionable, first, because campaign contracts must be lived up to—they are debts of "honor," which even the supporters of the "Iowa" idea must stomach as the price of the party's success in 1898; and second, because it is in no sense a change of principle (or lack of it) in the operation of "protection." Instead of conferring the power through a tariff schedule to levy an indirect tax upon consumers in the form of an enhanced price which the protected manufacturer is enabled to exact because of the duty upon the foreign competing article, the Government first collects the tax and then turns it over to the subsidy-hunting shipowner.

The Journal of Commerce continues:

If the Government paid it the people would have to furnish the funds, and the burden would be transferred from shippers to the general body of producers and would be largely increased in the process. Freight rates would not be visibly higher, but there would be an invisible charge upon the industries and trade of the country much larger than that which now goes to foreign shipping. We admit that this is a purely economic and commercial consideration, but it is intended to meet arguments which pretend that subsidies would be an economic and commercial benefit. These proceed upon fundamental fallacies.

It is more than a fundamental fallacy. It is more even than a selfish, cold-blooded proposition to "coddle" one industry at the expense of other industries. It is even more than the consummation of a shameful bargain to permit these ship-subsidy "beggars" to get direct from the United States Treasury a hundred dollars for every one they contributed to the Republican campaign chest to save the "honor" of the country in a Congressional election. It is an attempt upon the part of an insatiable band of monopolists to get the people to enter into contracts (?) to pay out millions of dollars annually, so that should the Democrats regain control of the Government the assistant Republicans as well as Republicans will plead the inviolability of this contract as an excuse for maintaining the "sacred" tariff.

The New York Commercial, in its issue of December 6, 1902, less than a month after the election of the Members of the present Congress, in a dispatch from this city dated the day before and headed has the following significant comment upon the relations which had been established with this band of greedy cormorants, the ship-subsidy "beggars:"

It is asserted, moreover, that the managers of the Republican Congressional committee have come back from their recent campaign feeling very friendly to the subsidy idea, and that this will be a new and potent influence, operative in States where the subsidy has hitherto been weak.

It would be interesting to know how much it cost the hunters for ship subsidies to secure this "very friendly" feeling.

Evidently the potency of this influence was overrated, or perhaps the contribution was not large enough to call forth the most strenuous efforts, for I find from an editorial in the New York Commercial Bulletin of February 25, 1903, some ten weeks later, that this "cause," this "holy and unselfish" cause of the ship-subsidy grabbers, has lost ground. It says:

IS THE BLOW TO SHIP SUBSIDIES FINAL?

The Frye ship-subsidy bill of the Fifty-seventh Congress has gone the way of the Hanna-Payne bill of the Fifty-sixth Congress, and it is plain that the "cause" has lost ground, notably so since the Frye bill passed the Senate on the 17th of last March.

I had always heretofore assumed—at least it has been repeatedly so preached to me—that the Republican party was the especial guardian of the "honor" of the country. This being so, have we not a right to expect that "honor" should be kept with them; that they should get the "goods" and get 'em quick. Why this failure on the part of the Republican party as represented in this House in the Fifty-seventh Congress to live up to the terms of the contract entered into in its behalf by those who had the management of its campaign and solicited the funds which enabled the party to retain its control of this House? The Republican Members were the beneficiaries of that corruption fund and should have honored the contract that their agent entered into with the ship-subsidy hunters on their behalf, or else they should have publicly repudiated the acts of their agent in this matter and deposed from positions of power in the party those who had entered into the contract.

Was this done? Not at all. On the contrary, the agent, the go-between, the solicitor of the corruption fund which gave the party control of the Fifty-seventh Congress was canonized, while the providers of the "stuff" got nothing for their pains, their efforts, and their "influoence." Well may they exclaim, "How ungrateful are republics," or, rather, the Republican party, which is the same thing here.

The Commercial Bulletin, in commenting upon the refusal of the House committee "by a vote of 10 to 6 to give the bill a favorable report," says:

This is the death blow of this particular measure, due to a recognition by a majority of the committee that it had no vital support in public sentiment. It sprang from no demand of the people, but was an attempt to forestall matured judgment; to get something for the benefit of certain aggressive interests before the people of the country fully realized what it meant, what it would cost, and what benefit or injury it would bring them.

Of course "it had no vital support in public sentiment." Of course "it sprang from no demand of the people." Of course it was an attempt "to get something for the benefit of certain 'aggressive' interests." But is that any reason why the ship-subsidy hunters shouldn't get what was promised them? Haven't they done their part? Why should they be treated different to the manufacturers of "blowhole" armor? Why are they not as much entitled to their pound of flesh as were the protected manufacturers who wrote their own schedules and had them inserted in the McKinley bill? Why should ship-subsidy campaign contributors be treated differently from the Pittsburg nabobs, who are permitted to keep a tariff of $7.84 a ton on steel rails while they are underselling foreign competitors, laying their products down at the very gates of English steel mills at a lower price than the English manufacturer can produce them? Wasn't the schedules of the Dingley bill so fixed at the behest of the wire-nail people that they could charge twice the price for their goods that they sold them abroad for? Hasn't the sugar trust been permitted to squeeze some $30,000,000 a year out of the American people as its part of the "swag?"

WHAT MR. E. M. BREWER SAYS.

I also want to read to the House some excerpts from a pamphlet printed and circulated by Mr. E. M. Brewer, of Boston, but written by Mr. Edward Kemble, a former president of the Boston Chamber of Commerce.

In an introductory note Mr. Brewer says, among other things:

As a citizen of Massachusetts and a shipowner, engaged in the foreign trade for many years, I take pleasure in availing of the opportunity which has been kindly allowed me of publishing and circulating the accompanying article on subsidies for ships, which was prepared by Edward Kemble, esq., an ex-president of the Chamber of Commerce of Boston.

I am also of the opinion that it is not good policy for the individual at this late day to establish himself in any line of business or to make any investment which can not flourish without Government support in the shape of subsidies or bounties.

I am also opposed to the principle of shipping subsidies as a matter of sentiment. The sight of a stately vessel bearing the flag of one's country would of course be pleasant and gratifying when it is known that she has been built and maintained by individual capital alone. To know that she has been built or operated in part by Government subsidy must "take the shine off." In short, the larger the subsidy or bounty the less the glory.

What old-fashioned ideas to express in these "get-there" days! How obsolete and out of date they must appear to the gentlemen who want to raid the Treasury through ship-subsidy legislation.

He concludes thus:

I have read nothing in opposition to shipping subsidies which has appealed to me so forcibly as Mr. Kemble's article, and I do not see how I can better help the good cause than in an effort to give it circulation in pamphlet form and in a different field.

E. M. BREWER.

27 KILBY STREET, BOSTON, March 20, 1902.

THE SHIP-SUBSIDY PROPOSAL—COGENT REASONING OF A BOSTON MERCHANT—HE SCOUTS THE SUGGESTION OF SENATOR FRYE'S BILL THAT A SUBSIDY IS NEEDED—THE AMERICAN AND THE FRENCH ARE THE ONLY TRANSATLANTIC LINES WHICH ARE SUBSIDIZED.

[By Edward Kemble, former president of the Boston Chamber of Commerce.]

The new subsidy bill which has been submitted to the Senate by Senator FRYE seems to have for its chief object the making of a gift of public money to several existing lines of prosperous American steamships. At all events, this will be the result should it become law.

The International Navigation Company is already receiving from the United States a subsidy of $750,000 per year. This bill will increase this amount and increase the number of years during which a subsidy shall be paid to it. This line is prosperous, or if it is not it ought to be so. No one can travel by it or read its freight and passenger lists who knows anything about the shipping business and come to any other conclusion.

Next is the old Pacific Mail Company. We are reminded that this company once received from this Government, years ago, a subsidy of $500,000 per year. Not satisfied with this, it proceeded to lobby in Washington for more. Its methods excited so much scandal an investigation was ordered, and it was found that the greater part of this munificent sum had been expended in lobbying for a greater sum; and so it was cut off from any subsidy at all.

We do things differently now. These are the days of "economies" in business. It is easier, more direct, and usually more effective to deal with campaign managers rather than with mere Congressmen. There is no risk of "squealing," and therefore no danger of scandal. The Collis P. Huntington methods are out of date.

Mr. Kemble then says:

During our civil war, when our Government could not protect our great fleet engaged in foreign trade, our citizens were compelled to sell; the subjects of Great Britain and other countries, availing themselves of their privilege to buy ships anywhere, bought ours and took the business with them. We have never been allowed to buy them back, or any others to replace them; or, if we did buy any, we have been obliged to sail them under a foreign flag, with two exceptions!

Would Senator FRYE have us believe that our American line, when it takes men at Southampton, as it does sometimes, and they come on board at the market price, perhaps $30 per month, says to them: "This is an American ship, and we shall pay you $50 per month?"

* * * * * * *

Mr. FRYE says, and it is often said: "Other nations pay subsidies, and the United States must do as other nations do." But it can not with truth be said that other nations do this. It is the exception wherever and whenever it has been done. There is not a nation on the face of the earth which pays subsidies as Mr. FRYE proposes to pay them—France alone possibly excepted. What all other nations do, however—and I don't know of one exception—is to permit their people to buy ships anywhere and put them under the home flag.

* * * * * * *

TWO LINES ONLY SUBSIDIZED.

There are ploughing the Atlantic ocean, between Europe and the United States, possibly fifty lines of steamships, and most of them never received one penny of government money, even for mail carriage! Only two of them receive a subsidy; one is our own "American line," the other the "French line." No others in this service receive one dollar of subsidy. The Cunard Line none, the White Star Line none, the two great German express lines none. These four lines last named are the fast lines of the world. They own some twenty-five or more of the fleetest ships in the world, besides many others. Not one of these fast ships receives any subsidy from any government. These lines, however, are paid for the amount of mail they carry, both by the United States and Great Britain, at so much per pound. Bids are received by the Government of Great Britain for mail carriage, and the market price is paid for it.

* * * * * * *

* * * The United States pays yearly to the Cunard and White Star lines and to the German lines, and others, the market price for the amount of United States mail they may carry at so much per pound; but these amounts are not subsidies. It pays to its own American line $750,000 per year, whether it carries any mail or not. This is a subsidy.

Listen to this!

These subsidy gentlemen are never tired of telling us all other nations pay subsidies, which is not true; but they never allude to the fact that all other nations permit their subjects to buy or build ships anywhere, and put them under the home flag, which is true.

Surely these ardent patriots, these subsidy hunters, would not be guilty of fibbing, or even of permitting their sleek and well-fed agents to do so.

Mr. Kemble says that the argument that we pay out $200,000,000 annually for foreign freight which Americans may get by a policy of ship subsidies is misleading. He very properly asks whether these ship-subsidy hunters believe that should America put a hundred ships in the foreign trade in one year then "foreign shipping lines would retire from the field!" As he says, of course nothing of the kind would happen. This new competition would be met by a reduction of rates, with the probable result that where $200,000,000 is now claimed to be paid on the foreign commerce of the United States there would be but $100,000,000 paid.

MORGAN'S "COMMUNITY OF INTERESTS."

The advocates of this subsidy scheme also ignore the fact that, despite the existence of the International Mercantile Marine Company, competition yet exists in the matter of ocean freights. Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan has organized a "community of interests" among the great railroads of the country, but the Atlantic Ocean is still comparatively free, and foreign purchasers of American merchandise can yet say by what line it shall be transported. If the rates are the same and an American and British ship are competing for the business, he will probably select the British vessel.

He further calls attention to the fact that there are probably a hundred foreign-built ships sailing under foreign flags which are owned by Americans; that a portion of these belong to three great lines plying between the United States and Europe which earn a large portion of this money paid for foreign freight, which thus already falls into American pockets; that this sum is overstated; that a further portion is already secured by foreign ships, American owned, but sailing under a foreign flag; that it will be further reduced if American ships are subsidized to go into the business; that a large portion will inevitably be retained by foreigners in any event; and then very cogently asks, What becomes of the argument that "we pay this great sum to foreigners, and that it may be gathered back to us by means of subsidized ships?"

In discussing the matter of American-owned foreign ships to become registered here, and for Americans also to be permitted to buy other foreign-built ships and sail them under our flag and thus get not only the ships, but the business, Mr. Kemble says:

How much easier and how much more businesslike it will be if we not only permit these foreign ships now owned by Americans to be registered under our flag, but invite our countrymen to buy other lines to be put under our flag also (but for foreign trade only), and so get not only ships, but the business with them. This will build up our merchant marine and send our flag over the seas—a matter which some public men talk much about.

I will not take the time to read any further, but will insert the balance of this excellent article, which has a good deal of the ring of that true Americanism which simply asks a fair field but no favor.

It continues thus:

But Mr. FRYE says this will not protect our shipyards; that if foreign-built ships are admitted to American registry, even for foreign trade only, "our shipyards will not increase; they will build only for coastwise, lake, and river trade," and cries out, "What shall we do for the dying industry?" But these shipyards have not built ships to any great extent for foreign trade for forty years or more. They say they have not been able to do so, at least not for the European trade; and yet, behold their enormous growth within that period! There is no more successful or flourishing line of business in this country than this "dying industry," as he calls it. Our shipbuilding plants are growing in size, have doubled in number within a short time, are equal to any in the world, are turning out some of the finest ships in the world, and are full of business.

What more does he want? The American Shipbuilding Company stands third on the world's list of shipbuilding plants in amount of tonnage turned out last year! But they can not or will not turn out ships at prices which will enable us to go into competition for the European trade. We have, in late years, exported iron and steel plates to be built into ships abroad. It would seem, therefore, that we can buy a ship made of American iron in England cheaper than we can buy one of American iron in the United States!

Mr. Kemble might have added that that "American iron" is sold abroad at free-trade prices, while, because of the tariff, the Steel Trust squeezes American shipbuilders by compelling them to pay protected—trust—prices for the steel plates they use.

$750,000 A YEAR, BUT WANT MORE.

One of Mr. FRYE's arguments for a new subsidy bill is this: He says that "the four ships of the American Line, although receiving a subsidy of $750,000 per year, have never realized any profit, but have been supported by the company's ships (called the Red Star Line) which sail under the Belgian flag." This is a most extraordinary statement, and by it he condemns the whole subsidy system by words out of his own mouth. If this were true, it would be a conclusive argument against any subsidies whatever. Here is a line of first-class ships running between New York and Southampton and receiving from the United States a subsidy of $750,000 per year, which, according to Mr. FRYE, not only makes no money, but is maintained by another line running between New York and Antwerp, which receives no subsidy at all. Both lines have weekly sailings and are owned by the International Navigation Company. The only logical inference is that subsidies are an obstacle to success and that steamship lines are more prosperous without them.

Furthermore, he declares that these "American Line steamers each carried, according to sworn statements, last year $4,200,000 worth of farm products, while the same tonnage slow steamer could not have carried more than $2,250,000 worth of wheat." Since the steamers of the Antwerp, or Red Star Line, are not only slower but smaller than those of the American Line, I presume they are covered by this statement. So it transpires that, although slower and smaller and without any subsidy, and, I may add, with passenger lists insignificant when compared with those of the American Line, they not only supported themselves, but helped support the others!

Mr. FRYE says subsidies will put more ships afloat and so make rates lower. How low would he have them? It has been possible lately to contract for grain to Europe at 1d. per bushel, which is less than $1 per ton! Hundreds of thousands of tons have been carried during the past five years at 2d. and 3d. per bushel, or less than about $1.50 to $2.50 per ton! And provisions and cotton on the same low basis. Cotton to-day can be contracted to Europe at about 12 cents per 100 pounds.

There is a feeling of pride in the desire that our flag may wave in foreign seas, but what satisfaction or what honor is there when it flies from the masthead of a subsidized ship? Sentiment is robbed of all nobility when it is supported by the force of money.

Commerce is in the line of individual enterprise, not of governmental favor, and while it should be fostered and encouraged and protected by Government in all legitimate ways, it is of no credit or importance when supported by Government money. Our flag at the masthead of a man-of-war signifies power, on a subsidized merchant ship the vulgarity of riches.

"FLABBY" ECONOMICS.

A few weeks ago, in a previous speech, I took occasion to commend the lucidity of expression of the editor of one of the leading Chicago weeklies—the Public. In Mr. Post's article on this subject, from which I now quote, the House will observe that he has fully maintained his deservedly high reputation as an expounder of economics, of economics that mean something, not those of the usual flabby professorial style that commence nowhere, lead nowhere, and end nowhere, but usually whose most marked characteristic is a demand for the preservation of the sanctity of "vested rights." The article has but recently been called to my attention, and is entitled:

SUBSIDIES THE CLIMAX OF THE PROTECTIVE SUPERSTITION.

[By Louis F. Post, editor of the Public.]

At the risk of being suspected as a Greek bearing gifts, I should like to ask protectionists—those who believe in protectionism upon principle, of course, and not the trusts that seek protection merely for their own interests and whose members greedily appropriate its benefits to their own private use—to consider very thoughtfully the probable effect of ship subsidies upon the popularity of their cherished doctrine.

Subsidies are unquestionably in line with the protective idea, for they are one of the modes of "encouraging domestic industry" by means of taxation. But they are altogether too candidly direct in method and too recklessly transparent in purpose. The masses of the people may feel their burdens, even under our indirect system of taxation, and are certain to recognize their plundering character. Is it wise, then, for sincerely philanthropic and patriotic protectionists to risk the possibilities of exposure of the essential nature of protection to which this all too candid mode of application will subject it?

I am glad to observe that one of the leading Republicans, one of the few who have shown occasional hesitancy in responding to the party whip—the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. WILLIAM ALDEN SMITH—has just come over to this side of the House to hear what I have to say as to the absurdities of the protective policy. I submit to him how difficult it must be for any sincere believer in that principle to reconcile these inconsistencies.

When we remember some of the "recklessly transparent" statements that were for years unblushingly made by protectionist orators and newspapers, such as, for instance, "the foreigner pays the tax;" "protection raises wages," while also "inducing competition, and consequently reducing prices;" and "there are no trusts," etc., I fear Mr. Post is a little too confident when he asserts that the masses "are certain to recognize their (subsidies) plundering character."

He continues:

For my part, I am quite willing to concede the superiority, for the purpose of protection to home industry, of subsidies paid directly out of the public Treasury over subsidies paid by consumers of domestic goods indirectly to the beneficiaries under compulsion of protective tariffs. The direct subsidy is better for many reasons.

In the first place, it is open and above board. Everybody can know who gets it and how much he gets.

In this I fear he also exhibits an unwarranted confidence. The astute gentlemen who are responsible for this commission bill are taking good care that the people shall not know, if they can help it, how deep they are going to put their hands into the public Treasury under the plea of building up the American merchant marine.

He proceeds:

Everybody can know also whether those who do get it divide up fairly with their workingmen, according to the true intent of the law. Of the indirect or protective tariff subsidies that is not true. The beneficiaries can, and in practice actually do, conceal their plunder. It comes from so many individual sources, and in ways so various and complicated, that no one can keep track of it except the beneficiaries themselves. In consequence their workingmen are systematically robbed of the share which protective laws design that they should receive.

The only resource of workingmen is to strike when they suspect an unfair division, and that is very unsatisfactory all around. In this respect alone the direct subsidy has marked advantages over the protective-tariff subsidy

Another of relative advantages is its effect upon the public at large.

The object of both methods is to encourage domestic production. In this respect the tariff method operates with great and harassing awkwardness. In order to encourage the production of woolen goods, for instance, obstructions are put in the way of the importation of foreign woolens. Those that are imported commercially are subjected to import taxes, which increase the price not only to the amount of the tax, but also to the amount of several commercial profits upon the tax, while those that are imported by travelers cause their owners no end of annoyance, to say nothing of the expense, when they land at a home port.

I have never been able to understand how a sincere protectionist—one who really believes that it works out as its advocates claim—could square his belief in protection with his action in returning from abroad loaded with foreign goods; and so far from travelers who do this (and all protectionists who have money do, James G. Blaine "by courtesy" bringing in some thirty-five trunks) having any cause for complaint that they can not bring their foreign-bought personal belongings in without paying a heavy duty, it has always seemed to me that they were nothing less than traitors to the cause of "protection," which they espoused only so long as it trod on other toes than their own. But that is merely a side remark. The article continues:

All this extra cost and annoyance must be submitted to until the domestic product has been brought up to the standard of the competing foreign article. Nor does the burden fall off then. For when the domestic product reaches the foreign standard of quality and price, its protected manufacturers insist upon having the protective tariff continued, to enable them to "invade" foreign markets in the name of American enterprise, this invasion consisting in selling their goods at free-trade prices abroad while maintaining protection prices at home.

So that, instead of the theory of protection working out as its devotees insist it does, viz, for the benefit of the whole people, in their receiving the advantages of that competition which we are told it promotes, the foreigner, the despised and hated foreigner, gets his goods from the American manufacturer at free-trade prices, while the same manufacturer sells the same goods here in the United States to the gullible worshipers of the "protection" idol at protected or "trust" prices. But let Mr. Post speak for himself:

And that is not all. Sheep raisers clamor for protective tariffs on wool to enable them to force their product upon the domestic woolen manufacturers, who force their product upon tailors. And tailors clamor for protective tariffs upon clothing to enable them to recoup the extra price they have to pay for cloth.

Protective tariffs are thus piled up all along the line, from the item of the growers of the raw materials to that of the last touch upon the finished product. For what? Simply to build up an infant industry, and to enable it to invade foreign markets after it has been built up. Is a more wasteful method conceivable? Compare that expensive and harassing process of indirect subsidies with the direct subsidy and note how indescribably superior the latter is.

Under the direct subsidy nobody would be annoyed by custom-house officers while the infant industry was growing to maturity. The disadvantages under which the American producer labored being overcome by subsidies paid out of the public Treasury, his goods would enter the domestic market at lower prices than the foreign goods.

The "Public" forgets that cheapness is a curse and not a blessing. Did not President Harrison say, "A cheap coat makes a cheap man?"

Consequently foreign goods would stay out, except to the extent that the domestic producer was unable fully to meet the home demand, which would be only in the infantile years of his industry. During that period he would be encouraged by having as much of the home market secured to him as he could supply, while home consumers would not be pestered with custom-house regulations in order to procure from abroad what he could not supply, nor burdened with excessive prices for either the foreign or the domestic article. And, although the American people would have to pay the direct subsidy, they would not also have to pay interest upon it every time the subsidized goods changed hands in trade, as they must under a protective tariff.

This is one of the advantages that bounties have over the protective (?) system, as the interest upon the tax and the profits upon it add about 50 per cent to the duty, so that a tariff tax of 60 per cent really becomes a 90 per cent tax by the time the consumer purchases the imported article.

The same advantageous difference would continue after the domestic goods had been brought to the level of the foreign standard and the home market could be fully supplied. They could then be sold at home at a price low enough to keep out the foreign article, and, thanks to the subsidy, would also be sent abroad to undersell foreign goods in their own market.

Other reasons might be urged were space abundant. But enough has been said to show the superiority of the direct-subsidy system. Whether for the purpose of building up an infant industry at home or of enabling it to invade foreign markets after it is built up, indirect subsidies through protective tariffs are vastly inferior to direct subsidies paid out of the public treasury.

But the direct subsidy has also great disadvantages. It is simple. It is easily understood. It is manifestly for the benefit of special interests, and not for the general good. And, withal, it is certain, if overdone—a fate which attends upon all protective methods—to end speedily in an outburst of indignant ridicule.

For myself I sometimes doubt whether protection can be "overdone." The American people are so gullible and throw all reason to the winds the moment some one gets up and declares he has a scheme to "tax the people so as to make them rich!"

These do not sound like disadvantages, and, so far as the public is concerned, they are not. But they are serious disadvantages from the protection point of view. Such a method of encouraging domestic industry might, if once it were adopted, everlastingly discredit the whole protection theory. That is reason enough for the shyness which shrewd protectionists have heretofore exhibited toward direct subsidies for industrial encouragement.

Lately, however, the fat and greedy beneficiaries of protective tariffs, finding no longer any profit for themselves in that method of taxing Peter to enrich Paul, have been turning with favor toward the direct subsidy system. The first step, the sugar bounty, was not encouraging. It was a mistake to begin with a product like sugar. The purely private nature of this bounty was too obvious. For a beginning shipping bounties are better. The people know but little about the modern shipping business, and they are ambitious to boast of a great mercantile navy.

Mr. Post hits it there.

This is but an illustration of how the passions of the people, here as elsewhere, are played on for their own undoing. This fever for "bigness" in a navy is being sedulously cultivated by the magnates of the trusts, as they well know that almost any kind of a steal can be put through if they can but throw the glamour of "patriotism" around it.

Subsidies for ships, therefore, do not seem so much as bounties on sugar like private gifts, even if the chief beneficiaries of the subsidies be great trust magnates of the country.

But if the system of subsidies once takes root in shipping bounties, is anyone so fatuous as to believe that it will end there? Let the protective tariff system answer. Its multitudinous ramifications and the horde of beggars in all kinds of industrial exploitation clamoring for its favors abundantly testify that there is no limit to public gifts for private benefit short of the will and ability of the giver.

A "horde of beggars" forsooth! On what meat has this mere editor of a Chicago weekly newspaper fed that he dares to stigmatize the financial magnates who are perspiring with patriotic fervor in their efforts to convince the American people that the safety, glory, and honor of the nation are at stake if they do not indorse ship subsidies.

If this irreverent editor does not look out he may find that these "captains of industry" will be foreclosing their mortgage on the Republican party and demand that a "Pennypacker" law, a "lèse majesté" law, a press-throttling law be passed by this House, so as to protect the men who contributed so liberally to save the country in 1898, and who merely ask to be paid back a hundred for one through a ship-subsidy bill.

Let shipowners be subsidized out of the public Treasury, and a cry for similar direct subsidies will go up from every industry that can not make the direct subsidies of the protective tariff serve it. If ships, why not exports? European nations, now cited as examples of ship subsidizers, do subsidize some exports with a view to the commercial invasion of other countries.

Shall we shrink from equipping our exporters for that kind of warfare? It has been seen how one tariff breeds another. Why shall not one subsidy breed another? There is no reason for confining subsidies to the encouragement of international trade. If it is good public policy to subsidize ships for foreign commerce, it must be good public policy to subsidize ships and railroads for domestic commerce.

If it is good public policy to subsidize commodities for export, it must be good public policy to subsidize commodities for home consumption. Does anyone doubt, at any rate, that these extensions of subsidies can be urged as plausibly as the ship subsidy on grounds of public policy? If, for example, a protective tariff on wool for the protection of American sheep could be made an issue in national politics, why not a subsidy on wool, now that the protective tariff fails to protect it?

It is entirely true, as Mr. Post says, that there is just as much reason (and as little) for subsidizing goods for domestic consumption as for export, and can be urged just as plausibly. A subsidy to a woolgrower is as justifiable as a "duty" to a wool manufacturer.

Protectionists who believe that protection is a legitimate public policy should make no mistake about the ship-subsidy question. With ship subsidies for a starting point and precedent, there will be no end to the objects vociferously seeking subsidies and no conceivable end to those getting them. But long before the possible end is reached the whole thing will strike the American sense of humor as unspeakably ridiculous, and the subsidy system, with the protective system, of which it is part, will collapse.

Of course the cry for ship subsidies is no more ridiculous than one which was put to such good use a few campaigns back—"the foreigner pays the tax." For myself, I wish I could discern some evidence that the American people turn their "sense of humor" on to these questions of taxation. For while the ridiculous talk about the tariff not being a tax because "it is paid by the foreigner" is no longer put forth, yet those who formerly advanced it are not "laughed out of court" when they advance other protectionist superstitions, some of which yet do service.

Since that is a consummation which free traders devoutly wish for, they might be quizzically asked why they object to this protection-destroying system of subsidies. It might be urged that the ship subsidy should be welcomed by them as an ally. But free traders are not playing in a game. They are not opposing protection for sport. They oppose it because, whatever may be the mode of application, it is in practice destructive to wholesome industry and in principle economically false and morally pernicious.

The subsidy movement is the normal culmination of a long era of protection by tariffs. In that era a few gigantic trusts, promoted and buttressed, if not caused by, protection, have developed. They hold the fate of legitimate industry almost at their mercy, and threaten even the political integrity of the Republic. They have perverted the intellectual standard of schools and colleges. They have polluted the moral atmosphere of churches. They have insinuated their influence into newspaper sanctums.

"Insinuated" does not describe the situation. If he had said they have acquired many of the leading newspapers of the country and were directing their policy, he would but have stated the facts.

The article concludes as follows:

They have dictated policies in legislative assemblies, seated their own professional servants upon the judicial bench, corrupted nominating conventions, and by trick and device diverted the course of public opinion itself. And now, glutted with pelf and drunken with power, they cynically propose to rob the public boldly, directly from the public Treasury, as for a generation they have been robbing it stealthily by means of protective tariffs.

That in doing this they will cause the whole protection edifice to crumble is reasonably to be expected. But that much-desired ending of the most absurd and demoralizing superstition of economic history is not a reason for advocating subsidies as the destructive means. This would, indeed, be doing evil that good might come. Much more to the honor of American intelligence and American sensitiveness to right and justice would be for American citizenship to condemn the protective scheme with deliberation than to leave it to the fates.

Rather than to approve the shipping subsidy, though in the reasonable hope that its development would expose the absurd iniquity of protection and loosen the grasp of that superstition, conscientious and intelligent citizens will demand that the shipping subsidy be condemned, because it is one of the forms of that superstition. Free traders would rather kill protection with the club of common sense or the sword of common justice than help to poison with an overdose of subsidies, however reconciled they might be to seeing it so poisoned by its friends.

I have recently come across another article on this subject, which, although treating it from a different standpoint from that of the Public, yet is equally interesting and instructive. This article appeared in "the" Democratic paper of Pennsylvania some months ago, but has only now been called to my attention. Incidentally I would say if the papers which are published in Philadelphia and Pittsburg which call themselves Democratic were as fearless and unfaltering in their devotion to and advocacy of the fundamental Democratic principle "equal rights to all, special privileges to none," as is the Johnstown Democrat; if they applied that principle in its fullness when discussing public questions as that paper does; if they denied the right of any man to a position of power or influence in the party who has not consistently and unequivocally championed that principle, even the protection-soaked State of Pennsylvania would soon become Democratic.

I regret that the limited time allotted me prevents my reading the entire article, and that I must therefore content myself with merely summarizing its contents. The article is headed:

SHIP SUBSIDIES IN NEW GUISE.

After quoting a circular which was being sent out by the Home Market Club, of Boston, asking certain questions of "governors, presidents of railroads, banks, etc.," it says: "The club's own preference is not left in doubt." Subsidies, it says, are "not warranted by the Constitution."

After referring to the fact that "three such bills have failed since 1897," though promised by the great party leaders in return for heavy campaign contributions, and that certain influential leaders "did their best to deliver the goods," it says:

Some of the leading trusts, by a great display of timidity and good sense, advised their Republican Congressmen to go slow in voting for a subsidy bill.

It says:

They feared such a bold appropriation of the people's money would spoil the tariff "graft" which gave the trusts such unparalleled prosperity.

It says:

They virtually said to the shipping people:

"Of course we should like to let you in on a good, fat graft, but we don't want you to spoil our graft, and in the end yours too. We must manage to keep the Republican party in power somehow or all will be lost.

"The people are easy if you approach them in the right way and on the right side; but, like a young cow, they will kick and refuse to be milked when approached from the wrong side. Don't jeopardize both our interests by attempting something rash. We know the people will stand for indirect taxes, because they do not see them, or because they vainly imagine that somebody else may be paying them, or that, in some absurd way, they are benefited by such taxes; but they might rebel and kick our whole graft over if we should show our hand. We shall gladly help you if you can devise some new scheme that will fit on the present indirect tariff-tax system. See what you can do."

There is just one other paragraph in this article which I will call attention to. After alluding to a contract which the International Mercantile Marine Company has made with England, which, it says, "may prevent that patriotic trust from participating so largely in these tariff profits," continues:

Just why this shipping trust should make such an unfavorable contract with the British Government is not apparent, unless we conclude that the trust is open to legal attack, both in Great Britain and this country. In this case it is prudent to get some kind of a legal status and to avoid trouble with British courts. It would be very uncomfortable if this trust was outlawed in both countries and could not land its ships at either end, except under a pirate flag or the flag of some small foreign country.

"OUTLAW" AND "PIRATE," INDEED!

Mr. Chairman, on behalf of the distinguished patriots who organized the International Mercantile Marine Company, who so generously let the American investor "in" on this "good thing," but who find themselves still carrying a part of the immense body of water upon which its shares are based, being capitalized at $200 a ton, when new ships cost but $120 a ton, on their behalf I protest against the use of such language. "Outlaw" and "pirate," indeed! Is there no sanctity where millionaire promoters are concerned? Would it not be in order for this House to communicate with the attorney-general of Pennsylvania, suggesting that the Pennypacker "press-muzzling" law be invoked to protect these "princes of finance" from such attacks?

If such language as this is permitted to be used about these gentlemen, the next thing we shall hear will be that this audacious paper has used equally reprehensible language concerning the dominating factor of the anthracite coal trust, for it will be remembered that it was the same gentleman who organized and controls the coal trust that offered the shares of the Mercantile Marine Company to a confiding public.

Mr. Chairman, the foundations of American liberty are being undermined when the country permits such language to be used when speaking of the men who so patriotically saved the "honor" of the country.

The extreme position that the advocates of ship subsidies are sometimes driven to in order to maintain their claim for this form of special privilege is evidenced in an oratorical outburst of Senator FRYE, who said:

Trade can not precede the mail! The mail must precede the trade!

Can one conceive of a more absurd misstatement than this?

In order to prove his wild observation the Senator would have to show that the chief delight of the primitive savage is to produce and consume literature. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SIBLEY] three days ago, on my disclaiming any sympathy with paternalism, insisting that I was an individualist, said that he felt sure that the House would be glad to have me some time or other explain what I meant by "individualism." While that is, of course, too large a subject to take up to-day, let me say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that individualism is the direct antithesis of the principle, or lack of it, upon which this ship-subsidy commission bill is based. This bill is paternalism run mad. It is the worst form of paternalism, because it is paternalism for the exclusive benefit of a few millionaire shipowners and trust exploiters.

PROTECTIONISTS THE ONLY BOUNTY HUNTERS.

Isn't it rather singular that the only people who advocate subsidies are the protectionists? You never hear of a free-trader advocating ship subsidies or other forms of bounty. It is only those whose theory, if carried to its logical conclusion, would prevent all trade, destroy all commerce with foreigners, who contend that the people should be taxed and the proceeds turned over to subsidy beggars and bounty hunters in order to "foster" trade. True, not all protectionists are for subsidies. Perhaps that is due to their having a somewhat more logical mind than the others, and they see that if trade is so bad a thing that we must erect artificial barriers to prevent those who have a desire to trade from doing so, it is illogical to subsidize people to do that very thing.

I confess that the workings of the protectionist mind are incomprehensible to me. First we are told that trade is a bad thing; that we must produce the things for ourselves, thus giving employment to American labor and profits to American capital. To insure this being done we are told that it is necessary to prohibit those who have a desire to trade with foreigners by erecting an artificial wall in the shape of a tariff tax upon goods brought to this country. So far the position of the protectionist is intelligible, if not commendable. But when they proceed to the next position and say we have a surplus which must be disposed of abroad and that we must create a market for this surplus, then the mind gets confused. For I assume that even protectionists will give the inhabitants of other countries credit for possessing equal intelligence with ourselves. If that is so, then if the protective theory is correct for the people of this country it must be equally correct for the people of other countries.

Even if foreigners are not naturally endowed with equal intelligence, they have American protectionist literature to educate them, for there is no export duty on it, and from it they can learn the beauties of that system. This being so, the hated foreigner will naturally say, "If foreign trade is a bad thing, as the American protectionist contends, then we must erect an impassible barrier over which the American manufacturer can not 'push' his goods." Should they carry this policy to its logical conclusion and make the barrier really impassible, then obviously these "surplus" products of ours would be returned to us, and would, I assume, if the the protectionist theory is correct, rot on our hands. I shall not digress to ask how there can be a "surplus" of any product in any country, if there is (as there certainly is in this country) in that country those who are in need of some of that very product and who are willing, aye, begging for the opportunity to exert their labor in the production of almost anything to exchange for that product. To do so would be to stir up another phase of this question of monopoly.

We then come to the next step in mental protection, viz, that we should send out of the country more goods than are brought in, because in doing so we enrich ourselves, and of course ship-subsidies are a means to that end. It must be obvious that if we only make the bounty large enough—say sufficient to pay for the building of the ships and all the cost of manning and operating them—we can not only send our "surplus" abroad, but also our entire products. If this is the correct thing to do—and certainly subsidies could then be justified—then we only need to amend the ship-subsidy plan in one particular, and that is to pay a bounty on all products of every kind and nature shipped abroad, but only on condition that the subsidized ships shall return here empty. We could thus very rapidly increase our "balance of trade" enormously.

Because this "favorable" balance-of-trade theory is interwoven with and is the corollary of "fighting" for a market for our surplus goods which gives strength to this cry for ship subsidies, I will append to my remarks, although I will not read it to the House, an article which I contributed to the Johnstown Democrat recently on that very subject. While the leader of the minority has honored me by incorporating it in one of his recent speeches, yet, as it is apropos to this subject, I will print it now, including, however, the concluding paragraphs, which he omitted.

THE BALANCE-OF-TRADE FALLACY.

[By Congressman ROBERT BAKER. From the Daily Democrat, Johnstown, Pa., Sunday, February 14, 1904.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 13, 1904.

When we consider how widespread is the belief, or rather acceptance of the statement, that not only does protection "enable" the protected manufacturers to pay high wages, but that in some occult way, which even its advocates do not explain, it "compels" their payment by protected manufacturers, it ought not, I assume, to be an occasion for surprise to find how prevalent is the idea that that country whose exports exceed its imports is thereby made prosperous.

Certainly no fallacy is so widely accepted, has so many devotees, is so infrequently challenged. And yet, even the most cursory thought, the most simple examination of the subject should be sufficient to expose its fallaciousness. That it is widespread, that it is generally accepted, is due largely, I think, to the fact that among the rarest of mental gifts seems to be the ability to think in simple terms and simple language, to reason from a fundamental premise. The civilization of to-day is apparently so complex, its ramifications so varied and extensive to so lace and interlace through every artery of commerce, it seems to be to so large an extent involved in the "destiny" of nations and the "world-power" idea, that practically all who give the matter any consideration "throw up the sponge" so soon as they commence to think upon the subject.

The policies of nations, the fates of empires, aye, the very existence of civilization itself, seems to most people to be involved in the contest for commercial supremacy which the great nations of the world are engaged in. So common and so prevalent is the idea of "war" associated with commerce, that it has come to be the usual term of expression that this or that nation must "fight" for commercial supremacy, and the reason advanced by people to-day why nations must fight is not, as in the past, ostensibly for territorial aggrandizement for the extension of the geographical boundaries of nations, but that they must "fight for markets," fight for the right to push the sale of their products among the people of other nations. Of course it is true that this talk of fighting for the "open door," this talk of the necessity of war and warlike methods, these bases from which "attacks" shall be made upon the semicivilized countries of the Orient, is confined to countries like China, but the underlying thought is equally applicable to the more civilized nations.

We are told that it is essential to the continued prosperity of the United States that it shall "open up" a market in Asia for its "superfluous" products. We are told that within a certain limited number of years our trade with the Orient has increased 20 to 50 or maybe 100 per cent, and that it now amounts to two or three hundred million dollars. Yet, almost in the same breath, those who advocate strenuosity as a basis for our dealings with other nations who are likewise attempting to force China to purchase their goods, tell us that the internal trade of the United States amounts to eighteen or twenty billion dollars.

Is it not singular that these devotees of war and warlike methods, these people who advocate the necessity of a big navy in order to secure the "open door," who would force our goods upon the heathen Chinese, should not as yet have advocated the creation and establishment of a gigantic State militia in order that the goods produced in New York may be forced upon the people of Ohio and Pennsylvania; that the manufacturers in Illinois require a large standing army in that State to force the sale of their goods upon Wisconsin, Iowa, and Indiana? And yet to those who are not inoculated with this virus for immense armies or big navies it should appear no more fantastic and unreasonable for the people of these and other States to insist that the goods created within their territories shall be forced upon the people of adjoining States than that we should, as a nation, force our goods upon the Chinaman, the Jap, the Russian, or the Hindoo.

As I have said, the prevalence of this idea that markets must be fought for is largely responsible indirectly, if not directly, for the thought that those nations which export the most and import the least are thereby made the most prosperous. And yet if one will but think on this subject in a simple way, will apply the same powers of logical analysis which he gives to his own affairs, will ask himself the question why the doing of something by a large number of people in their collective capacity has a different effect upon them, as a whole, than what would follow the same act of a individual, he must at once see the utter absurdity and falsity of the contention that an excess of exports proves that the nation is thereby becoming rich. Nations are great aggregations of individuals. It is just as true that a hundred thousand individuals can not send out a million dollars' worth of wealth, receiving back $900,000, and thereby become rich, as if it were the transaction of one individual.

Perhaps the most surprising thing in connection with this delusion is the fact, admitted even by the most ardent advocates of the "profitableness" of excess exports, that Great Britain, admittedly next to the United States the most prosperous nation in the world, has for a long period of years been importing hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of wealth in excess of her exports. For the year ending June 30, 1903, her excess of imports over exports amounted to the enormous sum of $800,000,000. During the same year the excess exports over imports of the United States amounted to $400,000,000.

If the contention that that nation is most prosperous which has an excess of exports is sound, then it follows that England by this time must have been almost entirely denuded of all wealth, for her excess of imports has been going on for decades and must now aggregate many billions of dollars. If this contention is the correct one, then the year ending June 30, 1903, made England relatively thirteen hundred millions of dollars poorer than the United States, four hundred millions of this being the United States excess of exports and nine hundred millions Great Britain's excess of imports.

The explanation usually given this so-called "favorable" balance of trade is that, to quote President McKinley, we get it back in "pure gold." This in face of the fact that our total excess exports of gold and silver during the last hundred years amounts to over a billion dollars. It would be interesting to know how these "balance of trade" theorists account for England having an enormous stock of gold and silver. She has, however, accumulations running into the hundreds of millions of these precious metals, while the United States is one of the largest producers of gold and silver. So that we have the anomaly, if this balance of trade theory is correct, of the nation whose imports (income) habitually exceed her exports (outgo) by several hundred millions annually and produces none of the metals—therefore must import them—accumulating large amounts, while the United States, a large producer of gold and silver, exports several hundred millions in excess of her imports and yet does not accumulate gold and silver to the extent that Great Britain does.

Two elements that go to make up this so-called "favorable" balance are usually ignored, viz, undervaluation of our $500,000,000 of imports (for the purpose of partly escaping the tariff tax) amounting probably to fifty millions annually, while it is admitted that the number of American tourists visiting Europe is several times as large as the Europeans who visit America. Probably not less than $35,000,000 represents the excess of exports spent by Americans abroad as compared with imports spent by foreigners in America. In addition some ninety millions of our apparent excess exports is freight charges paid to ships owned abroad, principally British.

There is another element also generally overlooked. That is the tribute paid every year to those who own American soil but who live abroad. How large this tribute is there is no means of knowing, but that it amounts to scores if not hundreds of millions of dollars a year there can be no doubt. William Waldorf Astor alone is reputed to receive such tribute to the amount of $9,000,000 a year. When we consider the scores of English and European titles which have been married to American heiresses solely because of the large rent rolls that went with these girls, some of whom receive incomes of millions a year, we get a glimpse of the aggregate of the tribute thus paid to foreigners—to increase our "favorable" trade balance.

When Mrs. Schenley, the owner of $50,000,000 of Pittsburg property, died recently in London, where she had continuously resided for fifty years, drawing tribute from some 25,000 Pittsburg tenants to the tune of millions a year, Andrew Carnegie (himself spending millions in Great Britain) cabled to America that Pittsburg's "queenly benefactress" had passed away and that she was a "true and loyal" Pittsburger to the end.

If one who lays a city or nation under tribute and draws from that country millions of dollars of wealth for which he gives no return, thereby increasing the "balance of trade"—excessive exports—of the country so laid under tribute is a "benefactor," then Mrs. Schenley, William Waldorf Astor, Consuelo Vanderbilt, and the daughters of the Bradley-Martins, the Leiters, the Zimmermans, et al., are indeed benefactors, as the ground rents and interest on stocks they draw to England unquestionably swell American exports and consequently increase its "favorable" trade balance.

Of course we can not expect those occupying the dilapidated shanties on the Schenley estate nor those crowded into Astor double-decker tenements in New York to appreciate how good it is for them and the country that they should contribute the millions that are spent for London mansions and Scotch castles. They have not been educated in the school of "high finance" and are therefore incapable of recognizing the advantage of an outgo in excess of income. Being untutored in the mysteries of the "balance of trade" doctrine, they would probably exclaim:

"Hang your 'balance-of-trade' theory! You leave us what we have heretofore paid as rent, and we'll manage to get along with our undepleted income and won't worry that our balance of trade is 'unfavorable.'"

ROBERT BAKER.

"STACKING" THE CARDS.

In a speech delivered at Concord, N. H., August 23, 1902, the President said:

> About all we have a right to expect from the Government is that it will see that the cards are not stacked.

That sentiment I heartily applaud. It may not be the most refined manner of expressing the idea, but that's of no moment. The important thing is that it correctly defines the most essential function of government—to insure to all "equality of opportunity."

The difference, however, between Mr. Roosevelt and myself is that I believe in that principle in its fullness and would apply it in its entirety, while he has done nothing to show that he really believes in it, let alone apply it as a principle of government. On the contrary, the policies for which he stands and which he applies nullify it.

This bill does not merely provide that the cards shall be "stacked" against the common people and in favor of the ship-subsidy beggars, but if its real purpose is carried out it will compel the people to pay for the "chips" which those gamblers use.

The greatest evil of the times, the one which must be uprooted before there can be any marked improvement in our governmental affairs, is the purchase of legislation by corporations, especially by such as seek to obtain special privileges. The money which they contribute to party campaign funds, municipal, State, and national, is producing a cancer which is destroying the very life of the Republic. As I intimated in the beginning, if this bill were the most innocent bill which ever came before this House the circumstances which led up to its introduction should forever condemn it.

ENGLISH BY-ELECTIONS.

A few months ago our Republican friends were pointing to Great Britain as evidence of the growth of the protectionist delusion. One of the Ohio Members, who has since become a member of the other House, even went to the extent of inserting in the RECORD some forty pages of speeches of that great reactionary, Joseph Chamberlain, with the undoubted object of making them available for distribution through the mails free of cost by the Republican Congressional committee. It is true that for some weeks now we have heard no more about the great change of sentiment in England on the tariff question. Even the gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber have apparently heard something of the results of recent by-elections in Great Britain, so that they are not now so sure that her fiscal system is to be overthrown and that she is to return to "protection."

In order that my Republican friends may have the facts before them, and as those facts have been kept from them by their leaders, I will insert, as an appendix to my remarks, a table showing the results of recent by-elections in the United Kingdom, which show that Chamberlain's appeal to the ignorance, bigotry, and passions of the people there has been in vain. That this arch traitor to the principle of free trade will adopt some other expedient to resuscitate himself politically, now that he can no longer use his "Little-Englander" and "pro-Boer" slurs to arouse the passions of the people, there can be no doubt; but that will be small comfort to protectionists here, as he can be of no further use to them now that his protection policy has been shown to be unpopular.

I sincerely trust that they have not wasted their campaign funds by ordering several million copies of Chamberlain's speeches, because, if they have done so, then they will have to make another call upon their friends—the beef trust, the steel trust, the oil trust, the sugar trust, and the anthracite-coal trust—for more campaign contributions, with the result that we who live in New York will find the Morgan-Baer combination recouping themselves ten times over by squeezing up the price of our coal, while in common with the inhabitants of the rest of the country we shall find the other necessities of life also "boosted" up.

As the Republican leaders have recently found so much to admire in Mr. Chamberlain, it is entirely appropriate and quite pertinent to ask them what they think of the latest outcome of his war to annihilate the two South African Republics—the Transvaal and the Orange Free State. This war, conducted and instigated by the South African mining millionaires in conjunction with Joseph Chamberlain, was, the British people were told, to extend the "benefits of British civilization" to the people of those countries.

Having destroyed the freedom of the Transvaal, the South African mining multimillionaires—the Biets, Robinsons, Neumanns, Barnattos, Joels, et al.—have now gone a step farther and compelled the Tory Government to introduce slavery there in the form of Chinese labor under contract. Although opposed by the Liberals, Mr. Balfour's Government has been able to force a ratification and approval by the House of Commons of this new form of slavery.

SOMETHING WORTH EMULATING.

If my Republican friends desire to emulate Great Britain (a country, by the way, that a few years ago they could say nothing bad enough about), why don't they emulate her in some of the good things she is doing? As I have said, the cost of ship subsidies, as of all other forms of governmental favors, must be borne by the great mass of the people so long as indirect systems of taxation are used. Recognizing this, the progressive men in Great Britain have for some years now been attempting to put a part of the burdens of government upon those who obtain nearly all its benefits—the landlords.

How much greater progress they have made than has been made here (although the average American boasts of our greater progressiveness) is shown in the vote of the House of Commons on Mr. Trevelyan's bill for the taxation of land values. Two years ago Mr. Trevelyan was only able to muster 156 votes in favor of a similar bill and was defeated by 71 votes. Last year the same bill was beaten by 17 votes. On March 12, this year, the vote was 223 in favor to 156 against, a majority of 67. How significant this action was is shown in the fact that not only did Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman (the Liberal leader) speak for it, but it received the support of every prominent Liberal who was present, and not a Liberal vote was cast against it.

On the other hand, not only did Chamberlain's son, Austen Chamberlain, the chancellor of the exchequer, vote against it, but several other leaders of the Tory and reactionary forces did likewise. In commenting on the matter the London Standard, the Tory organ, intimates that more of the present overwhelming majority in Parliament would have voted against it were it not that a general election is anticipated. Surely its enemies could offer no stronger testimony to the increasing growth among the people of the demand that land values shall bear a large part of the burden of government than the Standard's comment.

LET US TRY FREEDOM.

Mr. Chairman, instead of this bill for a ship-subsidy commission, let the committee which reported this bill bring in here measures providing far "free ships." We have had forty years of "protection;" let us now try freedom! It may be that like the elephant which has been chained to the floor for years, that the shipping merchants and shipowners may not at once realize that they are free, they may for a short time stay in the same place, being under the delusion that they are yet chained and tethered. But we need not fear, they will soon understand the advantages of freedom, they will quickly utilize them; they will as soon as they are permitted show that American enterprise, American ingenuity, American go-aheadativeness, when backed by the requisite capital, can hold its own against the world. Let us adopt the President's statement that the "cards are not to be stacked." Let us adopt it in good faith, let us set our faces toward the light and declare a "free field and no favor" for all.

Mr. Chairman, what a relief to turn from the sordid commercialism, the hard, cruel, domineering spirit of those who through such instrumentalities as this bill would lay a nation under tribute, would pry open the doors of the National Treasury, so that its sponsors may revel in unearned wealth—wealth wrung by an insidious system of taxation from the necessities of the poor—what a relief and what a change to turn from the contemplation of such cold-blooded, grasping selfishness and insatiable greed and note the noble, humanity-loving spirit which the editor of the Arena has breathed into the pages of a recent number of that magazine. I have but a moment left within which to call attention to one or two striking passages from his article in the October Arena on "Material prosperity and permanent greatness:"

To serious-minded students of history one of the most disquieting signs of our day is the all but universal tendency to elevate material prosperity to a supreme place in the consideration of the people.

History should teach us how pitifully shallow and shortsighted is a statesmanship or a national consciousness that permits commercialism or expediency to override the demands of the eternal ethical verities. Out of the wrecks of the past comes no clearer voice than that which proclaims the doom of all nations that have exalted trade or material prosperity over the empire of moral or intellectual rectitude. The austere religion of Israel, the philosophy and noble art of Greece, the justice or law of Rome, gave to those ancient civilizations their immortality; and the power and greatness of their peoples passed not from them until after they permitted the dominating moral ideals to become subordinate to sensuous and materialistic ideals. Egoism, the passion for wealth, ease, and luxury, and cruel and unjust subjugation of others finally wrought their downfall and death.

HUMAN ACHIEVEMENT AND SORDID GAIN.

Among the many examples of sophistry, as shallow as it is pernicious, which wealth and privilege are industriously disseminating is the claim that the incentive of money or material personal gain is the chief inspirer of genius, invention, and discovery.

Genius is nothing if not restless and active. Her children may be and often are erratic. They are seldom slothful. Run over the list of those who have been chief among the prophets, poets, painters, sculptors, scientists, discoverers, and inventors, and it will be seen that while few were driven by hunger or lured by avarice, many were terribly hampered by poverty and paralyzed by the ever-present fear of the starvation and suffering of those dependent upon them. It will be seen that the greatest benefactors of humanity were either among the poor, who sought not personal wealth, but rather the benefit of humanity, or were in comfortable circumstances, such as would be within the reach of all men and women under just social conditions in which equal opportunities and rights should be guaranteed to all and special privileges granted to none.

The elevation of material considerations above the requirements of the basic moral verities and the underlying principles of pure Democracy is deadly to free government. The broader vision of justice and the proud consciousness that the new freedom which fosters joy and growth would be no longer the prize of the few, but the splendid heritage of the millions, would give a deeper, richer, diviner meaning to life than was possible in any age in which egotism was the dominant note, and where war and competition fostered the savage in the soul of man.

Mr. Chairman, instead of buttressing the narrow, stupid, selfish, bigoted "protection" policy by instituting a policy of bounties, let us declare that the trusts must throw off their infant's garb, their swaddling clothes, behind which they have been hiding themselves while robbing the people, and that they must now do what the American farmer has been doing all along—sell their products in a free-trade market at home as well as abroad. Let us say, as far as we can by our action on this bill, that the American people are tired of this cry of the Goliahs of the trusts that they dare not battle with the pigmy Davids of the commercial world.

If we will but do that we will have taken a great step forward; we shall have inaugurated a policy that will result in the ultimate overthrow of every form of special privilege, a policy which if applied in its fullness will drive every harpie and every corruptionist out of the Halls of Congress, and thus purify American politics. Do this, and this Republic will become what in inception and purpose it was designed to be—a beacon light for liberty, for freedom throughout the world. [Applause.]

APPENDIX.

[From the Westminster Gazette, Saturday, March 19, 1904.]

THE WEEK—THE DEFEAT OF THE GOVERNMENT.

The political situation develops more slowly than some impatient people desire, but still develops continuously in the same direction. The Government grows weaker, undermined by the by-elections in the country and by apathy or confusion in the House of Commons. On Tuesday they were actually defeated on an Irish vote in committee of supply, and though Mr. Balfour naturally makes light of the incident its seriousness is quite well understood by members of the Unionist party. The division was expected. A most ur gent whip had been sent out to supporters of the party, and yet they did not exert themselves to put in an appearance.

The recriminations which have followed in the correspondence columns of the Times and elsewhere merely bring this fact into greater relief. The Government has still an enormous nominal majority which should leave an ample margin for all accidents and sudden emergencies. That it can not be brought up by a three-line whip is a morbid symptom which speaks for itself. The incident is not solitary, for on other recent occasions ministers have only escaped defeat by 14 or 20. No one seriously expected that Mr. Balfour, after resisting all the provocations to resign which the last nine months have offered, would quit his post because an Irish vote had been reduced by £100. But it is an unwritten law of Parliament that a government can not be more than once beaten on an estimate, however trivial. For a ministry which can not rely on a majority for its money business is properly assumed to be without the power of conducting the daily administration of the country.

EAST DORSET.

The result of the East Dorset election announced on Thursday proved that constituency to be in line with all others that have recently been tested. The majority of 820 by which the seat was wrested from the Tories exceeded the anticipations on the Liberal side and beat all previous records in the constituency. Mr. Lyell, the new member, was an excellent candidate, but he had to fight a wealthy and popular opponent, who resided in the constituency and had even been mayor of its chief borough. This gentleman sought salvation as an opponent of Mr. Chamberlain's policy, but the constituency rightly judged that the only method of opposing a protectionist government was to defeat its candidate, whatever private opinions he might hold upon the fiscal question. East Dorset concludes a series of by-elections which has been without parallel in the memory of most living politicians. In all parts of the country, and in rural and urban constituencies alike, the Government have suffered continuous reverses, and latterly without any break whatever in their misfortunes.

One fact alone is sufficiently impressive. Since the beginning of the year ten seats, formerly held by six Unionists and four Liberals, have been vacated, and as the result of the by-elections these are now held by eight Liberals and two Unionists. No Unionist has been able to secure reelection except in the impregnable strongholds of South Birmingham and the city of London. This is the record for less than three months, and it shows how entirely the Government has lost the confidence of the country. The cartoon published elsewhere, which "F. C. G." has given us for this week, exactly sums up the present situation. Like the cat in the picture, the Government holds on by digging its claws deeper into the tree, which is rudely shaken by these events. Let us add, while speaking of by-elections, that the unopposed return of Mr. L. V. Harcourt, which also has taken place this week, is by no means without significance. If he was permitted a walk-over it was not from any benevolence on the part of his opponents. They did their best to find a candidate, but without success.

That the tide is still running strong against the Tories and against Chamberlain's policies of protection in Great Britain and Chinese slavery in South Africa is shown in the last English by-election, i. e., that of East Dorset, where a Tory who was elected in 1900 by a majority of 96 has been succeeded by a Liberal with a majority of 820.

[From the Daily News (London), Thursday, March 3, 1904.]

THE NORMANTON TRIUMPH—WHAT THE RESULT MEANS—MR. PARROTT INTERVIEWED.

The great victory achieved by Mr. W. Parrott in the Normanton division for Liberalism, labor, and free trade was one of the main topics of conversation in political circles yesterday. We showed in our last issue how complete this triumph was, Mr. Parrott having beaten his protectionist opponent, Mr. Dorman, by a majority of 3,946, a figure which compared with a Liberal majority of 1,419 at the general election.

If the united Liberal and Labor vote at Norwich be excluded, to Mr. Parrott belongs the distinction of having secured the greatest majority yet recorded at an election since Mr. Chamberlain announced his protection policy. How that policy has affected majorities and seats may be gathered from the following list of constituencies contested since May last, when Mr. Chamberlain made his first pronouncement on "tariff reform:"

	Previous majority.	By-election majority.
Barnard Castle	a1,491	a2,856
Argyllshire	b600	a1,586
St. Andrews Burghs	b54	a36
Rochester	b479	b521
Leamington	b831	b190
Chorley	b3,059	b1,428
Dulwich	b3,082	b1,437
Lewisham	b2,414	b2,012
Ludlow	b3,819	b970
Mid Devon	a771	a1,476
Norwich	b837	a4,264
Gateshead	a946	a1,205
Ayr Burghs	b590	a44
Mid Herts	b2,424	a132
South Birmingham	c3,573	c3,076
Normanton	a1,419	a3,946

a Liberal. b Conservative. c Union.

In these sixteen constituencies the aggregate votes cast at the last previous elections and at the by-elections show an enormous gain by the Liberal and Free Trade party. The figures are:

	Liberal.	Protectionist.
By-election vote	75,941	70,030
Previous election vote	52,855	69,990
Net increase	23,086	40

At the general election these twelve seats were held, four by Liberals and twelve by Conservatives. They are now held, nine by Liberals and seven by Conservatives. In other words, the Liberals have gained five Tory seats out of twelve, a proportion which works out at 44 per cent. If that ratio could be maintained at a general election in respect of the 389 ministerial seats, the free-trade majority in Parliament would be overwhelming. No wonder Tories shrink from a general election.

TRADE AND THE EMPIRE.

[Mr. Chamberlain's proposals examined in four speeches and a prefatory note by the Right Hon. H. H. Asquith, K. C., M. P., home secretary in Lord Rosebery's ministry.]

PREFATORY NOTE.

I have been requested to republish these speeches in a collected form. I do so the more readily because, whatever judgment may be passed upon their controversial value, they do not, so far as I am aware, contain any statement of fact, whether statistical or historical, which has been successfully impugned.

Those of us who are engaged in the defense of free trade are constantly told that our whole stock in trade consists in the mechanical iteration of catchwords, in blind appeals to authority, in ignorant indifference to actual and potential economic forces, and in obsolete conceptions of the Empire.

My object in the utterances which are here gathered together has been to vindicate our fiscal system, not as an academic dogma, but as a concrete and living policy. As at first, though only a first step in that process of justification, it is necessary to expose without delay the blunders of fact and of logic which have so far accompanied every stage in the new protectionist campaign.

NOVEMBER, 1903.

[I.—Speech at Cinderford, October 8, 1903.]

A little less than six months ago the then colonial secretary startled the world by the announcement that the British Empire was in danger; that its unity could only be preserved by preferential tariffs, and preferential tariffs involving a tax upon the necessary food of the people of the United Kingdom. These opinions the speaker has during the present week further developed and defended, and with them it will be my duty in a few minutes to come to close quarters.

MR. BALFOUR'S "LEAD."

It seems that there is a wide gulf between a convert in principle and a fellow-worker in the mission field. "I do not think," said Mr. Balfour at Sheffield, "that public opinion in this country is ripe for the taxation of food." It is not as though he, the leader, as he reminded us, of a great party, giving a lead to that party upon a critical occasion—it is not as though he professes to agree with public opinion.

On the contrary, he does not disguise his view that public opinion upon this topic is the slave and the dupe of ingrained political prejudice and perverted historical analogies; but bad as he thinks it, and wrong as he thinks it, he is not going to engage his party to combat and to convert it. No; for himself and his colleagues he has abandoned the open mind, but the open field he leaves to Mr. Chamberlain. He is asked to give a lead, and what is the lead that he gives? In effect, what he says to his followers is this: For the moment we will all combine to talk generalities about retaliation or freedom of negotiation, which may mean anything or which may mean nothing; in that way the unity of our party will be secured; but, none the less, our lamented colleague, Mr. Chamberlain—who, as all the world can see, has parted from me and I from him in a glow of mutual appreciation and regret—our lamented colleague will continue to conduct, ostensibly from outside, his propaganda for the taxation of bread and meat.

In the meantime I, the prime minister, having shed my free-trade colleagues, will contemplate his operations from afar, with undisguised, though for the moment inactive, sympathy, waiting, with my sickle ready for the ripening of the harvest.

Sir Robert Peel, speaking to a world then engirdled by protectionist tariffs, in 1846 said: "I do not care whether foreign countries remove those tariffs or not. It is the duty and the interest of this country to fight tariffs by free imports."

FOOD OR RAW MATERIAL.

It is all very well to use this vague rhetorical language about negotiation and standing up to the foreigner and not taking his insults lying down. I want to know from Mr. Chamberlain upon what is he going to retaliate. Here we come to the very crux, and, indeed, the very heart, of the whole matter. You can not retaliate effectively in this country upon protected countries without imposing a tax upon food or raw material. I give you one or two figures which have been put in very striking form by Mr. Sydney Buxton. He takes Russia and the United States, the two most protected countries in the world. Suppose you want to retaliate upon Russia. Out of our total imports from Russia, amounting to twenty-five millions ($125,000,000), twenty-three millions, or eleven-twelfths, consist of food stuffs and raw materials, so that we can not retaliate upon Russia without at the same time injuring either our working classes or our manufacturers, or both. What is the case of the United States? Out of one hundred and twenty-seven millions ($635,000,000) of imports from the United States in 1902, one hundred and eight millions, or five-sixths, were also food stuffs or raw materials.

The moment you begin to translate these vague platform phrases into practice, you find that they can not be carried out as a policy without doing to you here in Great Britain as great, and probably more harm than the persons against whom that policy is used.

The board of trade estimate of the annual earnings of our shipping comes to ninety millions a year.

In 1870, just about the time that Mr. Chamberlain has taken for his comparisons, our tonnage of over-sea shipping was 5,700,000; in 1902 it was 10,000,000 tons. In other words, it has increased very nearly 100 per cent. Now, in 1870 the over-sea shipping tonnage of the United States was 1,500,000; in 1902 this had fallen to 800,000 tons, or a diminution of between 40 and 50 per cent.

If it is true, as Mr. Chamberlain has told us, that we are sending less manufactured goods into the United States, you must not forget that at the same time we are performing for the United States, not gratuitously—great as is our affection for the United States—not gratuitously, but for value received, the service of carrying their goods as well as ours all over the world. While their shipping has declined, owing to the excessive cost of shipbuilding which protection brings about, our shipping under free trade has most continuously and most prosperously increased. Protection is an inclined plane. Once you put your foot on it there is no logical halting place until you get to the bottom.

There is no ground whatever for saying either that British trade, as a whole, is stagnant or decaying, or that the Empire can only be maintained by reverting to fiscal devices which were tried and found wanting in the old days of protection. Free influx of food and of raw materials, from every possible source of supply, into this country is not only as essential, but is more essential to our national strength and prosperity than it was in the days of Cobden and Peel.

THE ALTERNATIVE POLICY.

Do not, however—and this shall be my final word—do not let it be supposed that because we are driven to defend the citadel of free trade, we therefore think that all is for the best and are content with a policy of folded hands. That there are disquieting features in our industrial as in our social conditions no honest observer, certainly no member of the party of progress, will be found to deny. We have seen industries in which we ought to have maintained our supremacy falling behind, and in some cases entirely taken away from us by our competitors. Defective knowledge, inferior processes, lack of flexibility or versatility, a stubborn industrial conservatism, these are the real enemies of British trade and have done us infinitely more harm than all the tariffs and all the dumping syndicates that were ever created.

Better education, better training, better methods, a larger outlook, these are our primary needs—and it says little for our political sagacity that we should allow our minds to be diverted from them by quarrels as to the quantum of dogmatic theology that is to be administered to little children, or by attempts to revive the buried fallacies of protection. True it is, also, that in spite of the continuous growth of our national prosperity we still have with us the unemployed, the ill-fed, the aged poor; but here again let us look to natural and not to artificial remedies. Instead of raising the price of bread let us try to raise the standard of life. Temperance, better housing, the tenure and taxation of land, these are matters as to which we have allowed our legislation to fall deplorably into arrear. To take up the task in a spirit of faith and of resolute purpose is, I hope and believe, the mission of the Liberal party in a Liberal Parliament.

[II.—Speech at Newcastle-on-Tyne, October 24, 1903.]

We are met, as I understand, not primarily for the ordinary purposes of a political demonstration, though they will not be left out of sight, but we are met to take our share in the defense of principles which we believe to be vital to our national prosperity and our imperial union; principles which have been suddenly attacked—I say suddenly, because a year ago no one would have dreamed of the situation in which we now find ourselves—suddenly attacked, I say by a powerful and formidable statesman, while the government of the day surveys his operations not merely with benevolent neutrality, but with undisguised sympathy, and do not conceal from us their intention, if the assault should turn out to be successful and the stronghold should fall, of joining hands in the hour of triumph with the attacking force and sharing with it in the glory and, I suppose, in the spoils of victory.

There is no doubt that during the last thirty years there has been a considerable diminution in our agricultural population, though let me say parenthetically that the way to bring back the people to the land is not to revive the state of things that prevailed before the repeal of the corn laws, when the agricultural laborer had to work for 7s. a week.

PROTECTIONIST COUNTRIES.

Mr. Chamberlain points to the prosperity of protectionist countries, which he says has increased more rapidly than our own. He admits that the circumstances of the United States are exceptional. He does not go into the case of Germany—I wish he would—I wish he would tell us by applying what test—the comfort of the people, the accumulation of wealth, the rate of wages, the hours of work, the average standard of life—he makes out that the protectionist population of Germany is a more favored one than the free-trade population of this country.

But since he was at Glasgow, in the interval between Glasgow and Newcastle, Mr. Chamberlain has discovered another protectionist paradise. It is Sweden. Now, as regards that, only two days ago I was turning over the consular report for the last year from Gothenburg, and a more doleful piece of reading I have rarely come across for years. And only yesterday—I expect some of you saw it in the papers—there was a letter from a gentleman well qualified to speak, Mr. Bayley, who employs labor both in this country and in Sweden.

It was a most significant story. He said they began in Sweden with a small import duty on maize, with the result that their trade in bacon, which up to that time had been a valuable one, was taken away from them owing to the increased cost of feeding pigs by free-trading Denmark, and in the course of twenty years the average cost of living in Sweden had risen 20 per cent. Emigration had increased in the same time 50 per cent; and, as regards wages, Mr. Bayley tells us that he, employing the same class of labor to do the same class of work, pays 40 per cent less wages in Sweden than in London. I don't think the example of Sweden is one likely to encourage the working classes of this country to change their fiscal system.

The board of trade estimate is that the annual value to this country of the carrying services we render amounts to ninety millions. Those ninety millions ought to be added to your exports if you are to form any fair judgment of what they amount to. This is not the academic view of a recluse or an economist. Take the case of the only mercantile country into whose trade this element of sea carriage enters in anything like the same proportion as ours. Take Norway, which has a large mercantile marine. You find in Norway, if you study the returns, exactly the same phenomena, though on a smaller scale than here.

The imports for each year seem largely to exceed the exports. Why is that? Because Norway is receiving, just as we receive, payment for the service of her mercantile marine. Take, on the other hand, the United States of America. Their mercantile marine has dwindled until it is only a half of what it was thirty years ago. What is the result? Other nations have to do their sea carriage for them, we in particular; and that is one of the great causes why their exports exceed the imports, because they have to pay in the form of exports to us for carrying their goods over the sea. I say you can not leave out of account this £90,000,000. Mr. Chamberlain never refers to it at all.

TRADES INJURED BY TARIFFS.

I do not deny—no free trader denies—that protectionist tariffs are a hindrance to the natural extension and distribution of the world's industry. It is not true that this eighty-six millions of manufactures could be just as well made here. A great many of them are things which under any circumstances foreign manufacturers could make cheaper and better than we could make them ourselves, and one of the great advantages of free trade is that instead of having to make these things ourselves which other people can make better for us we can, in our turn, devote ourselves to making other things which we can make better than they can and exchange the proceeds one against the other.

THE 10 PER CENT TAX.

They talk about putting a 10 per cent duty on these things. What would be the result? I can tell you in a sentence. If the 10 per cent duty excludes the foreign goods, you will get no revenue from your tax. That, I think, is plain. If it does not exclude foreign goods, the consumer will pay more in the shape of price than he did before, and to that extent the effective demand for other goods will be diminished.

Mr. Chamberlain has watered down his Glasgow proposal that the colonies should prevent the setting up of new industries which could come into competition with our own—a proposal scouted throughout the whole length and breadth of the British Empire as soon as it was uttered—to one that they should not be "encouraged to manufacture goods for which they have no natural aptitude." Well, that is the doctrine of free trade. If you had free trade, not preferential tariffs between the colonies and ourselves, that is exactly what would happen.

If the taxation does not fall on the the consumer, why does he exempt maize, and why does he exempt bacon? Now we are fortunate enough to know the reason, because Mr. Chamberlain has told us why he has dealt with these commodities in an exceptional way. Maize, he says, is the food of some of the poorest of our people; bacon is a staple food of the majority of the population.

But if the consumer does not pay, if the foreigner pays, why should not the foreigner pay on what is the food of the poorest? That is my first question. I am going to put him another, which I hope he will also answer at the same time. Why, if these do not fall on the consumer, does he take credit for the gain which will accrue to the consumer when he removes the tax on sugar and on tea? If the consumer does not pay, what advantage is it to him?

EVILS CRYING ALOUD FOR REDRESS.

While we oppose with all our force these ill-considered proposals, fallacious as we believe them in argument, disastrous in practice, let no one suppose that the only alternative is to wrap ourselves in the inertia of a complacent optimism. We Liberals do not deny, we assert, not for the first nor for the hundredth time, that both in the industrial and social spheres there are evils which cry aloud for redress. We want first and foremost a reconstruction of our educational system from the bottom to the top upon a just and even and democratic foundation, and adapted in all its stages to the requirements of our trade, our country, our age. We want, further, a serious attempt to grapple with the problems of the tenure and taxation of land, both in the country and in the towns.

[III.—Speech at Paisley, October 31, 1903.]

We have been challenged to a controversy, in which it is no exaggeration to say not only the material prosperity of these islands but the harmonious working of the British Empire is at stake. That controversy is being carried on under conditions which are absolutely unprecedented in political history. A distinguished statesman has been let loose for the purpose from the restraints and responsibilities of office. A purged Cabinet, which does not contain in its new form any recognizable Free Trader, looks on in favoring silence, or, as has been the case, I think, of not less than three of its members during the present week, with the language of open encouragement.

The policy of the halfway house, which is the ostensible official programme of the Government, is universally acknowledged to be merely a formula for the temporary appeasement of divergent and irreconcilable groups. Now, what does Sir Robert Giffen say? He points out that in order to show correctly the net export of the produce of British labor and capital in goods we must deduct from the gross total of our exported merchandise the value of the imported raw materials contained in them. That, I think, is perfectly clear.

Having made that preliminary assumption, he applies the method to two years. He first takes the year 1877—twenty-five years ago—and he then takes the year 1902; and how do the figures work out—the figures of our export merchandise after that deduction has been made? In 1877 the net produce that British labor and capital exported—so ascertained—was valued at £140,000,000. In 1902—twenty-five years later—that net produce was valued at £224,000,000. In other words, during those twenty-five years of this stagnant export trade of ours there has been a net annual growth of £84,000,000.

WHAT IS RAW MATERIAL?

I put this further question: "Will Mr. Chamberlain or any of his friends tell us what they mean by raw material?" I know one definition, and one only, for this purpose. It is a commodity which comes here in order that British capital and British labor may be exercised upon it.

Wire.—What is the fact about wire? Our exports of wire are increasing and the German export trade in that commodity, although it is a very large one, is, I am told on excellent authority, declining year by year, and declining for a very significant reason, owing to the heavy import duty which the German tariff lays on the raw material out of which the wire is made.

WHAT IS DUMPING?

Now, this leads me to say a word, if you will allow me to do so, upon the question—I approach it with a good deal of trepidation—the nerve-shaking topic of dumping, and here I feel I must mind my "p's" and "q's." Mr. Chamberlain is so incensed with the levity which I have shown in this matter of dumping that he uses language about me which I venture to say indicates a loss of temper, and, what sometimes accompanies loss of temper, a loss of manners also. Gentlemen, what is dumping? I agree with Mr. Chamberlain when he says that dumping only takes place, or takes place seriously, when the country that resorts to it is in a state of depression.

A manufacturer, or more often a syndicate of manufacturers, is enabled, by a protective tariff, to keep up the price of the thing they make at an artificially high level in their own home market, export the surplus supply of the same commodity at a much lower price to foreign countries, and undersell the native producer. That is dumping. Well, now, let us note what are its characteristics. In the first place dumping, as Mr. Chamberlain says, does not take place except when the country from which the thing comes is in a state of depression. In the next place, it is a process which, as all experience shows, cannot possibly last long.

It is, indeed, in the long run a suicidal policy. I will tell you why: for two reasons. First, it tends to provoke a strong reaction at home among the domestic consumers, who find that they have been made to pay—as the combined result of a protective tariff and the action of syndicates—more for the same thing than other people in foreign countries pay for it. It leads to resentment, indignation, agitation, and in the long run it is sure to lead to the undermining of protection.

In the second place, dumping cuts its own throat in another way by supplying the manufacturer abroad with the dumped material at an artificially low price, and makes it possible for him to produce the finished article at a lower cost and to drive the dumping nation—who have produced it at a greater cost—out of the market. It has happened over and over again. It is happening in Germany at the present moment. If you wish to know more about it, I would recommend you to read the board of trade blue book. I confess I am absolutely impenitent about dumping.

"Oh," says Mr. Chamberlain, "what can a lawyer know about these things? You should leave them to men of business who really understand them." I am quite content to leave them to men of business who understand and apply the rules of simple arithmetic. But since the appeal is to men of business, I will read you, if you will allow me, a short passage from a speech, made as lately as August last, by a business man, whose name I will give you when I have come to the end of his remarks. This is what this man of business says:

"On behalf of my own company and on behalf of any manufacturer who is fit to be in the business, I altogether repudiate the suggestion that we need protective tariffs or would benefit by them. My company has always done a good business in the better qualities of wire nails, both for home and export, and that business we are increasing year by year. It is a fact that we have not yet been able to compete in the commoner lines, but I no more attribute this inability to unfair competition on the part of the foreigners than I attribute their inability to compete with us in some of our lines to unfair competition on our part.

"Similar cases have come under my notice before, and I invariably found the explanation of the foreigner's success to lie in some natural advantage, or, and this is more often the case, in wiser methods of business. I have no doubt that before long the able men serving my company will have discovered the secret of cheap wire nails, and we shall then add that to the many others we have captured from foreign competitors. Meanwhile, if the knot is to be cut by making England pay more for its wire nails, you take away from inventors the incentive to invention and reward dullards for their dullness."

That is the opinion of a man of business, and the name of the man of business is Mr. Arthur Chamberlain. If Mr. Chamberlain's picture is a true picture—I do not say it is—that foreigners under a protective tariff are driven to try to get hold of our markets by dumping down, in days of depression, at less than cost price, the produce of sweated labor—if that is a true picture—does it not suggest to you that perhaps on the whole protection may not be a panacea for the diseases of the industrial world?

Who is the foreign competitor whom Mr. Chamberlain describes as less "scrupulous" than we in these matters, who conducts his operations without any of the legal protections and safeguards upon which we most rightly insist? Is it possible Mr. Chamberlain is ignorant that in Germany, our chief competitor in this matter, and in almost every continental country, there is a system of factory acts, copies from our own? Only, I am sorry to say, in some respects substantially in advance of them. And in Germany, in addition to the factory acts, they have, of course, as I thought we all knew, a system of compulsory insurance for accident and for sickness.

If the existence of laws of this kind were a real handicap to industry, which I am going to show you it is not, it is one from which almost all countries suffer like ourselves. It is true that the German workman works longer hours, gets less money wages, and is able to buy less with his money than the British workman.

For every 20s.—I am speaking of the skilled trades now—for every 20s. that is received by the workman in the United Kingdom the corresponding German workman gets 12s. 6d. Since 1886, a period of over fifteen years, money wages in these trades have had a considerably greater rise here than they have had there, and while the money wages have been rising, what about the cost of living? The cost of living has fallen here under free trade in these fifteen years by 3 per cent, and it has risen in Germany by something like 12 per cent.

Mr. Chamberlain has not put his finger upon the real spot. There is a difference, a notable difference, between the conditions of the German workman and the British workman, but the difference is not between a country where factory legislation exists and one where it does not; it is the difference between a country which lives under protection and a country which lives under free trade.

[IV.—Speech at Worcester November 9, 1903.]

I have been told, I do not know whether it is true, that this city, and, indeed, this county, are treated by political map makers as within the range of a certain sphere of influence whose headquarters are supposed to lie in the city of Birmingham. That sphere, whatever may be its precise territorial limits, is at present the seat of a good deal of magnetic disturbance, and I can not but think that you here in Worcester, if any such connection did ever exist, which I do not know, could hardly choose a fitter time to terminate it than a time at which Birmingham, whose greatest political glory in the past is to have been associated with the name of John Bright, is being invited to turn its back upon his creed, and to become the rallying center—may I not say the dumping ground—of the crudest and rawest fallacies of protection.

Some of us have said of late that protection is an inclined plane. You begin with a small duty and then before you know where you are you find you are landed in a very heavy duty. Well, just as protection tends to be an inclined plane in practice, so it seems to me the development of the protectionist argument in the present controversy tends to be and has proved to be an inclined plane in logic.

One among the many boons which free trade confers is that it tends, by keeping open the sources of supply, not merely to enlarge the area of employment, but to steady the whole course of industry. It counteracts; it is, in fact, the only effective counter agent which has ever yet been discovered, to those violent oscillations and fluctuations from which countries that surround themselves by a protective fence are constantly suffering.

There is no fact in my opinion which is better attested in the history of the world than that in the years which preceded the repeal of the corn laws, despite the transient spurts occasionally given to industry by exceptionally abundant harvests, the material condition of the great bulk of the British people was deplorably and unutterably bad. Since free trade has become part of our established fiscal system there has been nothing comparable to it, either in kind or in degree. It is always well to reinforce oneself when one enunciates general propositions of that kind by authority.

Therefore I will read a very short sentence from a speech, also made in Birmingham, on November 7, 1885. Mr. Chamberlain, speaking of fair trade—and fair trade is nothing but his own scheme anticipated by more prescient thinkers—used these words: "I warn you that at the bottom of this fair trade there is the question, and if you discuss it you will find it impossible to avoid it, of a return to those bad times of protection, of the corn laws, which were responsible for the destitution and the starvation wages from which your forefathers suffered so greatly."

Mr. Chamberlain will tell you that he has changed his opinions since 1885. So he has, but because Mr. Chamberlain has changed his opinions, the foundations of the universe have not been shifted, nor have the facts of history altered. I quite expect to be told before we are many months older, if the controversy proceeds at its present pace, that the multiplication table is an obsolete shibboleth and that to hold that in this world it is universally or approximately true that two and two make four is to entertain the superstitions of a troglodyte.

THE APPEAL TO MR. MONTGREDIEN.

The facts of history do not alter, and Mr. Chamberlain appeals to the authority of an excellent book, Mr. Montgredien's History of the Free-Trade Movement in England [10]. Very well, let us go to Mr. Montgredien. I am going to read you a short passage from this work, to which Mr. Chamberlain appeals, which describes the condition of things that prevailed here in England and Scotland, not only in 1841, but in the years from 1841 to 1844, which immediately preceded the repeal of the corn laws.

It says: "Some of the details are quite appalling and testify to an intensity and universality of destitution, starvation, and misery to which no period of temporary distress since the adoption of free trade in England can show the slightest approach. In Leeds there were over 20,000 persons whose average earnings were under 1s. a week. In Nottingham 10,500 persons, nearly one-fifth of the population, were in receipt of parochial relief.

"In most of the leading trades of Birmingham the men were earning not one-half, and, in some cases, one-third, of their usual wages, while some of the masters were so near ruin that they had on Saturday night to pawn their goods to pay their men's wages. In Manchester 12,000 females, after having pawned every article of furniture and of dress with which they could possibly dispense, were supported by voluntary charitable contributions. One-third of the population of Coventry was out of work."

I need not go on. Those are samples taken from all the leading industrial centers of the Kingdom. That state of things prevailed in 1841.

UNIVERSAL FREE TRADE.

When you are told that this country adopted free trade upon the assurance, the promise, that other nations would follow suit, and only upon that assurance, I ask you to remember the language of Sir Robert Peel himself, not speaking as a propagandist on a platform, but with the authority of the first minister of the Crown in the House of Commons on January 27, 1846:

"I fairly avow that in making these great reductions on the produce of foreign countries I have no guaranty that other countries will follow our example. Wearied by our long-endured efforts, we have resolved to consult our own immediate interests.

"It is a fact that other countries have not followed our example. Nay, they have in some cases raised the duties upon the admission of our goods."

Then he ends with these significant, just, and true words:

"Hostile tariffs, so far from being an argument against the removal of restrictive duties, furnish a strong argument in its favor."

A CONCLUDING PARADOX.

One other concluding paradox. You are told by Mr. Chamberlain that protection enables foreign countries to undersell us here with the produce of cheap and sweated labor, and therefore we are to tax the imports that come in from foreign countries to make the balance even. In the same breath we are told that the foreign workmen's condition, if not actually better than that of our own, is steadily improving at a more rapid rate, and therefore, apparently, we ought to adopt protection in order that we may share his happy fate.

SUMMARY.

I am not going to add to the number I have given of self-contradictory propositions; I am surprised at my own moderation. But let me, in order that there may be no doubt about this—let me recapitulate what I have been saying. Here are five distinct and cardinal propositions, each of which contains its own confutation:

(1) British trade is stagnant, and yet 1902 and 1903 threaten to be our record years.

(2) A tax on food does not fall on the consumer, and yet we dare not tax bacon and maize because they are the food of the poorest of the community.

(3) We must not tax raw material, and yet if we do not some of our most important colonial interests, like those of South Africa, will obtain no preference.

(4) We are to put a 10 per cent duty on imported manufactures, which is at the same time to bring us a revenue, on the assumption that foreign goods come in and pay the duty, and to secure additional employment for British labor, on the assumption that the same foreign goods do not come in at all.

(5) Last, and not least significant, protection enables foreign countries to undersell us here by sweated labor; let us therefore, in order to improve the condition of our own workmen, adopt the same system of protection which makes that sweated labor possible.

WHAT DOES IT COME TO?

You are asked to take this, the first step on a slippery journey, on the strength, as I have shown you, of a series of unproved and unprovable assertions, in reliance upon a pledge to which no human being can be held, that you will not be invited to go beyond the first stage upon the road, and worse than that, in my judgment, in the illusory hope that by imperiling the very foundation of British prosperity you will be strengthening the fabric of the Empire.

I venture to say that everything is against it. Experience, the experience of our own fathers who tried it, there is nothing new about this scheme, and gave it up, experience is against it. Argument abundant, overwhelming, unanswerable, at any rate unanswered, is against it. Authority is against it.

The authority of every living man who has been responsible for the stewardship of our national finances, with, indeed, one exception, our new chancellor of the exchequer, who, apparently, is not yet aware that he owes to his illustrious predecessor, Sir William Harcourt, that great fiscal instrument of the death duties which, more than any other reform since the establishment of free trade, may enable us to discharge the vast burden of unnecessary expenditure which has been piled by himself and his colleagues upon the shoulders of the people.

A celebrated measure was once called by its cynical author "a leap in the dark." This is more than a leap in the dark; it is a piece of political plunging. Let us demand that without delay it shall be submitted to the judgment of the people, and when their good sense and sound political instinct has got it out of the way, then, and not till then, we shall be able to take up again the interrupted task of reform, and to provide against the real dangers which menace the prosperity of our trade and the consolidation of our Empire.

During the delivery of the above speech the time of the gentleman from New York expired.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and leave is granted.

Mr. BENTON. I now yield to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, we have been informed that it is the policy of the Republican party to make no appropriations for the rivers and harbors and waterways of the country at the present session of Congress. We are told that a deficit of $42,000,000 is confronting the Republican Administration during the present fiscal year; that no bills appropriating money, except for the absolute needs of the Government, will be passed, and that only the usual and necessary supply bills will be framed and enacted into law.

After a period of reckless wastefulness of the public money and of extravagance; after large appropriations for a large standing army to maintain a policy of imperialism, and acquisition of foreign territory to be held as colonies, contrary to the spirit and genius of our free institutions; after the most lavish expenditures for battle ships, armored cruisers, and a large navy, and after a wasteful expenditure of the public money for many other purposes a spasm of economy has seized the Republican party upon the eve of a Presidential election. Millions have been and will be expended upon our Army and Navy and upon the Philippines, but not one dollar at this session of Congress is to be appropriated for the benefit of the people at home, for public buildings, or for rivers and harbors to open and improve the great highways of commerce, the waterways of our country. It is announced that not even a survey preliminary to the improvement of a single river, harbor, or waterway is to be authorized. All must wait until next session and until after the campaign, so that the Republican party can show the people how economical it has been.

This is purely political strategy, Mr. Chairman, against which I protest. There are many necessary and important works in my district and State which should be continued and inaugurated, but under this Republican policy I am powerless and my party is powerless. The rivers and harbors and great waterways of my district must await a political campaign to get that recognition to which they are entitled. Beaufort Harbor and its adjacent waters, the Neuse and Trent rivers and their tributaries, the New River, the Northeast and Black rivers, in my district and State, must be neglected by a great Government because political exigency demands there shall be no money appropriated by the Republican party at this session of Congress other than for governmental necessities.

I have discharged my duty, however, and have insisted upon just and liberal provisions for every river, harbor, and waterway in my district. No portion of it and no interest in it shall be neglected while I have the honor to represent its people. For the harbor of Beaufort I have asked an appropriation of $250,000, which is no more than this harbor should have for the purpose of making it navigable by seagoing vessels of the largest tonnage and capacity, increasing the depth of water on the bar from 14 or 15 feet to 20 or 25 feet. I have insisted that Carrot Island Slough and the other waters adjacent to Beaufort and Morehead City should be improved in accordance with the recommendations of the engineers and the necessities of the case. I have asked that provision be made for carrying out existing projects, including the projects for the Neuse and Trent rivers, New River, the Black and Northeast Cape Fear rivers. It is especially important that depth of water in the last-named river should be increased in order to give needed facilities to the citizens of Duplin County.

But I arose, Mr. Chairman, to call special attention to and discuss the great project of improvement of our inland waters on the Atlantic coast. This project, upon which a report of the Board of Engineers of Rivers and Harbors has recently been submitted to Congress, is known as the "Waterway from Norfolk, Va., to Beaufort Inlet, North Carolina." This is a matter of vital importance, affecting not only my own district, especially the harbor of Beaufort, but all North Carolina commerce. Indeed, it effects our national commerce, and is a project which is national and not local in its scope, interest, and importance. It is a project in behalf of which my colleague, Hon. JOHN H. SMALL, has wrought so long and effectively, and in which I am heartily cooperating with him.

In the river and harbor act approved June 13, 1902, the following provision was incorporated:

SEC. 14. That the Secretary of War is hereby directed to cause preliminary examinations or surveys to be made at the localities named in this section as hereinafter provided. In all cases, unless a survey or estimate is herein expressly directed, a preliminary examination shall first be made, which shall embrace information concerning the commercial importance, present and prospective, of the river or harbor mentioned, and a report as to the advisability of its improvement. Whenever such preliminary examination has been made, in case such improvement is not deemed advisable, no survey thereof or estimate therefor shall be made without the direction of Congress; but in case the report shall be to the effect that such river or harbor is worthy of improvement, the Secretary of War is hereby directed, at his discretion, to cause surveys to be made and the cost of improving such river or harbor to be estimated and to be reported to Congress: Provided, That in all cases preliminary examinations, as well as surveys, provided for in this act shall be examined and reviewed by the board provided for in section 3 of this act, to wit:

NORTH CAROLINA.

Waterway from Norfolk, Va., to Beaufort Inlet, North Carolina, with a view to the construction of a channel not less than 16 feet in depth, upon the most advantageous route between the points named: Provided, That the examination and survey shall be made by a board of engineer officers detailed by the Secretary of War, and any report made shall include the probable cost of any private waterway that it may be to the interest of the United States to acquire in connection with the proposed improvement: Provided further, That the total expense of the examination and of any survey which may be made shall not exceed the sum of $5,000.

Under authority of this act of Congress the special board of engineers, of which Col. Charles J. Allen was president, in their reports, dated September 22, 1902, and August 31, 1903, estimated that the cost of the project was not out of proportion to present and prospective commerce. But the regular Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, in their report of February 9, 1904, expresses the opinion that it is not advisable to undertake the construction of the waterway with a channel of 16 feet in depth; but the belief is advanced that a channel of less depth would be of great advantage to commerce and the military interests involved, and the recommendation is made that a new inquiry be made by Congress with a view to ascertaining the cost of a channel 10 and 12 feet deep and of suitable width. Gen. A. Mackenzie, Chief of Engineers, in his report to Secretary of War Taft, transmitting all these reports to Congress and reviewing them all, says:

Owing to the nature of the country, and on account of various works of improvement heretofore carried on by the General Government and private parties, there were numerous alternative locations subject to consideration by the Board in selecting the "most advantageous route between the points named," as required by the law.

As a result of its investigations the routes selected by the Board in the different divisions of the waterway are as follows: Via Cooper Creek, Rose Bay, Adams Creek, and Beaufort Inlet, covering a total distance of 194.1 miles between Norfolk, Va., and Beaufort Inlet. The amount ($5,000) allotted by the act for this examination and survey was not sufficient to permit of a definite location of the exact lines of the proposed channel way. The Board specifically states that the selected route has been defined in general terms only, and that before the definite location of the different parts of the route can be made further detailed surveys will be necessary.

The estimated cost of a 16-foot channel by the route indicated is fixed by the Board at $10,000,000 in round numbers, with $150,000 annually for maintenance of the completed waterway. This estimate of first cost includes excavation, retaining walls, right of way, bridges, and one tidal lock, but does not include the purchase price of any canal rights, for the reason that the route selected does not follow the line of any existing private canal.

In concluding its report of August 31, 1903, the Board expresses the opinion that the selected route is a perfectly practicable one, and that a waterway can be constructed along it for the amount of the estimate named—$10,000,000—provided the appropriations are of sufficient size and are made with sufficient regularity to allow the work to be carried on constantly and systematically. After carefully considering all available data as to its present and prospective commerce, the Board gives the further opinion that the estimated cost of the project under discussion is not out of proportion to the extent of such commerce, added to the importance of the completed waterway as a factor in the scheme for coast defense on the Atlantic seaboard.

These reports have been referred for consideration by the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, as provided in sections 3 and 14 of the act of June 13, 1902, and attention is invited to this Board's report of February 9, 1904, herewith. After reviewing at length the reports of the special board, the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors expresses the opinion that it is not now advisable to undertake the construction of a waterway from Norfolk to Beaufort Inlet with a channel not less than 16 feet in depth, the Board believes that a channel of less than 16 feet depth would be of great advantage to the commercial traffic and military interests involved, and recommends that a new inquiry be initiated by Congress with a view to ascertaining the best route, and the cost of channels 10 and 12 feet deep, respectively, and of suitable width, between Norfolk, Va., and Beaufort, N. C., with a view to determining the advisability of undertaking the creation of a channel of either of the depths mentioned.

I concur in the view of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors that it is not advisable for the United States to expend $10,000,000 in constructing a channel 16 feet deep from Norfolk, Va., to Beaufort Inlet, North Carolina.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. MACKENZIE,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Engineers, U. S. Army.

Hon. WM. H. TAFT,
Secretary of War.

Mr. Chairman, this is at least a partial victory for this great project. I regret the Board of Engineers should have reported against a channel 16 feet deep, but they admit the value of the project to commerce, and with all due respect to General Mackenzie and the Board of Engineers of Rivers and Harbors, they are wrong, in my opinion, as to the disapproval of the proposed depth or any change in the project. Measured in dollars and cents, the $10,000,000 expenditure, which the project of 16 feet depth would require, is a mere bagatelle compared with the advantages of the waterway to the commerce of the country. One battle ship equipped costs, according to the best estimates, about $8,500,000. This great waterway would cost only a little more than one fully equipped battle ship. For the cost of one battle ship Congress could give a safe and cheap inland route from Baltimore to the South, reducing freight rates, increasing transportation by barges, and avoiding the dangers of Cape Hatteras, that "ocean 'Blue Beard' standing with outstretched arms and welcoming to the chambers of death the white-winged brides of the sea." Upon Cape Hatteras many a gallant ship, richly freighted, has been doomed to destruction.

The project is now being discussed to appropriate a very large sum for the purpose of erecting a light-house at this cape upon the outer Diamond Shoals, so well known as the most dangerous spot upon the Atlantic coast. The special board of engineers says:

In regard to the dangers of Cape Hatteras, the records of the Life-Saving Service show that within the last twenty-five years not less than $3,000,000 worth of property and sixty-seven lives have been lost on the shoals in the vicinity of Cape Hatteras alone. The records of the losses in the vicinity of Cape Lookout are not immediately available, but the losses are no doubt sufficient to add materially to the aggregate of the two capes, and argue strongly the necessity of a safer route under existing conditions.

An inland water route would lend itself admirably to the method of barge transportation and the lowering of freight rates, and would have a very great influence in developing a traffic that at present does not exist. It would offer a safe route for barges from Baltimore to the mouth of St. Johns River, Florida, and possibly to Cuba and other West India Islands. It would enable coal, machinery, and manufactured articles to be shipped south, and lumber, cotton, phosphate, and southern products to be shipped north by the most economical method known. According to Captain Lucas's estimate, based upon an extended investigation of this subject, and contained in his report of November 22, 1900, the commerce of this route would amount to as much as $115,000,000 per annum.

The possession of such an inland route would be important from a military point of view, and there are not a few who do not hesitate to say that the importance of this feature alone is sufficient to warrant the expenditure of whatever sum may be necessary to secure its construction.

After due consideration, the Board is of the opinion that the proposed inland waterway can be secured for a sum not exceeding $7,000,000; that it is entirely feasible, and that the improvement is worthy.

Notwithstanding this report, the regular Board of Engineers overrules the special board of engineers and declares that $10,000,000 would be required, and this is too much money to be expended by the Government at this time for this great project, and recommends a new survey for a depth of 10 and 12 feet.

ROUTE RECOMMENDED.

The special board of engineers says in regard to the route:

The existence of two large sounds in the path of this waterway divide it naturally into divisions, which will be separately discussed.
First. The part from Norfolk Harbor to Albemarle Sound.
Second. From Albemarle Sound to Pamlico Sound.
Third. From Pamlico Sound to Beaufort Inlet.
Fourth. Beaufort Inlet.
The routes selected by the board in the different divisions of the waterway and their lengths and cost are as follows:

Division.	Route selected.	Length.	Excavation.		Estimated cost.
			Cubic yards.	Length.
		Miles.		Miles.
First	Cooper Creek	62.0	31,600,000	54.2	$4,922,000
Second	Rose Bay	80.5	24,500,000	55.3	3,719,000
Third	Adams Creek	50.0	9,600,000	19.7	1,337,000
Fourth	Beaufort Inlet	1.6	300,000	.8	45,000
Total		194.1	66,000,000	130.0	10,023,000

The selected route passes from Norfolk up the south branch of the Elizabeth River to near the mouth of Mill Creek; thence in a direct line by a land cut to the Pasquotank River at the mouth of Cooper Creek; thence down this river to and across Albemarle Sound and up the straight portion of the Alligator River; thence in a land cut through the marshes of the upper Alligator River, across the neck of land and into Rose Bay; thence into the Pamlico River, down this river, around Brant Island light-house, and up the Neuse River to opposite the mouth of Adams Creek; thence up Adams Creek and by a land cut to the head of Core Creek; thence down Core Creek, Newport River, and across Beaufort bar to the ocean. The length of this route, allowing for a direct line across the deep water of Albemarle Sound, is about 190 miles. This distance can be considerably shortened, and the route will be a better protected one if a cut should be made across Brant Island shoal not far from Brant Island. The Board has not sufficient data upon which to base an estimate for the work, but it will not be great.

This route has the advantages of the greatest possible amount of protection from storms throughout its length, of having safe harbors at each end of every land cut, of passing close to Elizabeth City, Morehead City, and Beaufort, and of being conveniently located with reference to the cities on the Pamlico and Neuse rivers.

In thus expressing its choice of the route the Board desires to specifically state that the selected route has been defined in general terms only, and that before the definite location of the different parts of the route can be made further detailed surveys will be necessary.

The Board is of the opinion that the selected route is a perfectly practicable one and that a waterway can be constructed along it for $10,000,000, provided that the appropriations are of sufficient size and are made with sufficient regularity to allow the work to be carried on constantly and systematically. The annual cost of maintenance of the completed waterway is estimated by the Board at about $150,000.

COMMERCIAL IMPORTANCE.

The termini of the waterway, as defined by the act, are at Norfolk, Va., and Beaufort Inlet, North Carolina; but as Norfolk is at present connected by a deep channel with Chesapeake Bay and the Atlantic Ocean, and Beaufort Inlet opens on the same ocean south of Capes Hatteras and Lookout, the object of the waterway is evidently to furnish an inland connection between the Atlantic Ocean at Chesapeake Bay and the same ocean south of both capes.

These two capes, and especially the former, have long been the terror of navigators. Before the introduction of steam the passage around Cape Hatteras was hazardous in the extreme; and though at the present time this cape is not as great an obstacle as formerly, yet it is still a serious menace to navigation. The records of the Life-Saving Service show that within the last quarter of a century not less than $3,000,000 worth of property and sixty-seven lives have been lost in the vicinity of Hatteras alone, and if the records of all the losses between Cape Henry and Beaufort were available the total would be much greater. Indeed, in a recent publication it was stated "that 17 per cent of the vessels trading along the coast are wrecked at this point."

Not only is Cape Hatteras a source of danger, but by reason of the conflicting winds and currents to be met with at that point sailing vessels are frequently delayed in rounding the cape, even when the weather is not stormy enough to be a source of danger. Indeed, these delays have been so frequent that the establishment has several times been seriously contemplated of a line of seagoing tugs to wait near Hatteras to tow away any sailing vessels that might be delayed there.

All these dangers, both of loss and delay, have had their effects upon the rates charged for freight and insurance between the South and North Atlantic ports, and could these dangers be avoided there would of course be a considerable saving in these items.

It has been clearly demonstrated in recent years that the cheapest method of transporting bulky freight is in large barges towed by suitable tugs. Transportation by this method is now carried on to a large extent on the Great Lakes, and it has been successfully introduced between points on the Atlantic coast north of the Chesapeake. In all cases the introduction of this method of carrying freight has resulted in the reduction of freight rates by from 30 to 60 per cent.

Owing to the difficulties and dangers due to Capes Hatteras and Lookout all attempts to introduce the barge system on our South Atlantic coast have up to the present been unsuccessful, and the traffic around the capes is now carried on almost exclusively in steamers or in large sailing vessels. As south of Beaufort there is no very menacing cape and as possible harbors are quite numerous, there is every reason to believe that the opening of a waterway avoiding these capes would be shortly followed by the extension of the barge method of transportation to our South Atlantic ports, with a resulting decrease in freight and insurance charges.

While it is easy to see that the opening of the waterway would result in a considerable saving in freight charges, it is not so easy to arrive at any reliable conclusion as to the extent of the commerce which would be affected and the amount of freight that would be saved.

Being informed that the Board was investigating this matter, the commercial bodies of the various cities on or near the South Atlantic coast undertook to assist, and the letters and statistics received from these commercial bodies are appended to this report.

These cities may be classed as those north of the waterway, those south of it, and those situated along its course. A brief analysis of the papers received from these cities will now be given.

The cities of Baltimore and Norfolk are both situated north of the waterway, and in the papers received from them it is estimated that the saving in freight charges on the commerce to and from them will amount to about $2,250,000 annually.

The ports of Wilmington, Georgetown, Charleston, Savannah, Brunswick, Fernandina, and Jacksonville are all situated south of the southern terminus of the waterway, and from the statistics received from these ports it would appear that their total coastwise trade is now about 4,500,000 tons annually, valued at $225,000,000, practically all of which is with ports north of the Chesapeake. Of this total trade they estimate that about three-fourths will be affected by the new waterway, and that the annual saving in freight charges will be about $2,500,000.

While accepting as sufficiently accurate this statement of the present coastwise trade, the Board nevertheless believes that the effect of the opening of the new waterway upon it has been somewhat exaggerated. That a considerable amount of this commerce would shortly seek a cheaper method of transportation is undoubtedly true, but the Board is more inclined to put the ratio at one-fourth than at three-fourths. This commerce is now largely carried in steamers that give it quick and regular transit, and it would be some time before it would be likely to change to a less regular though possibly slightly cheaper method of transportation. Accepting this figure of one-fourth as more nearly correct, we have, as the total present commerce that would be affected by the waterway, about 1,100,000 tons, valued at about $55,000,000. The annual saving in freight on this would probably not be less than $600,000.

The commerce above considered would all, as far as the new waterway is concerned, be "through" freight, but there will also doubtless be a large amount of local freight passing to and from points situated along the line of the canal.

Statements from the existing canals show that in the past few years the total commerce of these canals has amounted annually to about 400,000 tons, valued at $4,100,000, and carried in about 7,000 vessels. As the present conditions of navigation through these canals are such as to restrict the traffic to vessels of small size, and as there is a considerable toll charged, these figures give no basis upon which to estimate the amount of local freight in the new waterway.

Of the cities affected by this local traffic, statistics have been received from Elizabeth City, Washington, and Beaufort. The total commerce of these points is about 1,500,000 tons annually, and they estimate the probable saving in freight charges due to the new waterway at about $750,000.

All the figures given above as to the commercial importance of the new waterway are based upon the traffic at present carried by water, but there are other items which should be considered. There is a large amount of commerce originating at or near the seacoast and now carried to other seaports by rail that would undoubtedly seek water transportation should such transportation be made comparatively cheap and safe. Cheap transportation is one of the most important factors in the development of a country, and the opening up of a cheap and safe route along the middle part of our Atlantic coast would certainly have a very large effect in stimulating trade between the different sections, increasing that already existent, and bringing into being much commerce that at present does not exist.

Especially would this be true of the country to be traversed by the waterway. This region is at present poorly supplied with rail transportation, while its water trade is hampered by the lack of a practicable ocean outlet, the small size of the existing canals, and the toll charges thereon. With these difficulties removed there would undoubtedly be a great and rapid development of this region and its trade.

To what extent and at what rate this increase and development would take place are matters of speculation, but, judging from the effects of the opening of the canal between Lakes Superior and Huron, there is reason to believe that the development would be sufficiently rapid.

MILITARY IMPORTANCE.

From a military and strategic point of view the construction of this waterway would be of great importance. In connection with other canals already existing, it would permit our torpedo boats and small gunboats to pass by an interior and protected route from one part of our coast to another, and to thus concentrate at any desired point.

Besides these abstracts from the reports of the engineers I will incorporate in my remarks, Mr. Chairman, and ask to have read, the following letters from the Wilmington (N. C.) Chamber of Commerce and from citizens of Beaufort:

[Letter from the Wilmington (N. C.) Chamber of Commerce.]

APRIL 16, 1903.

DEAR SIR: At a meeting of the chamber of commerce held this day (7th April) the plan to open an inland waterway from Chesapeake Bay to the Atlantic Ocean at Beaufort Inlet, in North Carolina, was brought before the meeting by Mr. William W. Worth, chairman of our committee on harbor, shipping, and commerce, and very freely discussed, and received the unanimous indorsement of the chamber. It was concluded by all that such an inland waterway would in a great many ways benefit this port. It would open to us an enormous territory, fully 200 miles of sounds, besides the wide territory to be reached therefrom by using the rivers flowing therein, constituting hundreds of miles, which we can not now reach. It would from the very nature of things result in the establishing of barging, the cheapest known method of transportation, barging from this port outside to Beaufort Inlet being perfectly practicable and safe at any season of the year.

This city and immediate vicinity consumes annually 60,000 to 75,000 tons of bituminous coal. Barging from Chesapeake Bay would enable us to land this coal 60 cents per ton cheaper than now obtainable, causing a saving thereby of $45,000 annually, which result would largely increase its use. We ship by water annually 75,000,000 feet of lumber, poles, ties, and piling. The present rate to Baltimore is $4.25 per thousand. By barging this lumber and timber could be landed in Baltimore and other Chesapeake Bay markets $1.75 per thousand cheaper, thereby causing a saving of $131,000 annually in handling of wood products alone. We handle annually of canned goods, lime, cement, and heavy groceries in value about $6,000,000. These goods would naturally seek the route offering the cheapest rate of transportation and would be the principal cargo coming this way, and on which we could reasonably expect a saving of about $100,000.

By this waterway we would avoid the dangers of Capes Lookout and Hatteras, thereby lessening the rate of insurance, and reduce to a minimum time in water transportation, as vessels would not be forced to wait favorable weather to get around Hatteras. We are confident the opening of this waterway would result in the establishing of new enterprises and industries in our immediate vicinity and the enlarging of some we now have. As the making or unmaking of the centers of trade is now dependent largely upon the rates of freight, it was the unanimous opinion that the opening of this waterway could but result in benefiting our immediate commerce in every way, which now exceeds in volume $50,000,000 annually. The aggregate of saving on inward and outward freight which would directly accrue to us by reason of the construction of this canal and waterway would be $276,000 annually and of immense benefit indirectly.

Our total domestic tonnage for 1902 was 295,897 tons.

Yours, very truly,

WM. E. WORTH,
J. A. TAYLOR,
JNO. A. ARRINGDALE,
Special Committee Wilmington Chamber of Commerce.

Col. CHARLES J. ALLEN, Corps of Engineers, U. S. Army,
President of Board of Engineers having under consideration the project of an inland waterway between Norfolk, Va., and Beaufort Inlet, North Carolina.

[Letter of citizens of Beaufort, N. C.]

JUNE 29, 1903.

DEAR SIR: At a mass meeting of the citizens of the town of Beaufort held in the town hall on the 3d day of June the undersigned were appointed a committee to secure data and statistics of the business, commerce, industries, and different enterprises of the town of Beaufort, and the county of Carteret, N. C., to be forwarded to you, in reference to the project of the inland waterway from Chesapeake Bay to Beaufort, N. C.

Beaufort is a thriving town on the eastern coast of North Carolina, the county seat of Carteret County. According to the last census it has a population of 2,185; it is the third oldest town in North Carolina; was incorporated in the year 1722 as a port of entry by the English Government; it has a fine natural harbor, and notwithstanding the fact that it has never been deepened by the Government, yet vessels drawing 14 and 15 feet of water can come in with safety. Vessels have entered this harbor in the past drawing as much as 25 feet of water; in fact, Beaufort Harbor was the rendezvous of the United States fleet in 1864, in charge of General Butler, when the attack was made on Fort Fisher, and also the later one in charge of General Terry. This latter fleet contained near 300 vessels. By a reference to a recent report of the United States engineers in regard to the Beaufort Harbor it can be seen that with an outlay of from $60,000 to $100,000 the harbor can be deepened so that vessels drawing 25 feet of water can come into our port.

The town of Beaufort is only about a half-hour's run from the sea, and the harbor is landlocked on all sides and makes a good refuge for vessels from storms in any and all directions.

The county of Carteret is a very fertile county. The principal industries are fish, oysters, clams, and other sea products; farming, trucking, timber interests, etc.

The Gulf Stream is within 19 miles of our coast, and owing to its nearness truck and early vegetables can be raised at least two weeks earlier than they can be raised within 30 miles in the interior. Our soil is capable of raising cotton, corn, hay, rice, potatoes, vegetables, and numerous other products.

There was listed for taxation in June, 1902, in the county 157,903 acres of land; 1,956 town lots. The aggregate value of the real and personal property was, in round numbers, $1,000,000. The report from the custom-house for the port of Beaufort shows 225 registered vessels, with a gross tonnage of 2,675 tons. There are at least eight times as many smaller craft, which are engaged in commerce in the county, not registered in the custom-house, they being under custom-house tonnage. The amount of the gross sales of the merchants in Carteret County for the year ending December 30, 1903, aggregates, in round numbers, about $1,000,000; the amount of gross sales for the town of Beaufort aggregates $200,000; the number of vessels engaged in the oyster business in the county, dredgers, 54, smaller craft, 1,000. The number of licenses issued for oystermen for the year 1902 was 766.

The different commodities handled in the county for the year ending December 31, 1902, were as follows:

Cotton	bales..	2,500	Oysters	bushels..	1,000,000
Cotton seed	bushels..	7,500	Turpentine, crude, barrels..		1,000
Tobacco leaf	pounds..	25,000	Clams	bushels..	75,000
Rice, rough	bushels..	2,000	Wood	cords..	200,000
Grain	do....	100,000	Timber	feet..	25,000,000
Hay	tons..	100	Lumber	do....	20,000,000
Potatoes	bushels..	200,000	Shingles	number..	1,000,000
Vegetables	pounds..	1,000,000	Fertilizers	tons..	10,000
Cattle	head..	2,000	Merchandise, general	do...	500,000
Horses	do....	3,000	Machinery	pounds..	100,000
Hogs	do....	5,000	Passengers	number..	20,000
Poultry	do....	50,000	Coal	tons..	1,000
Eggs	dozen..	500,000	Peanuts	bushels..	10,000
Fish	pounds..	60,000,000	Fish oil	barrels..	10,000

In gathering the above statistics the committee have in some instances been unable to get definite figures and have had to estimate the same. The estimates are very low.

With the inland waterway we feel confident that this business would increase treble.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

Col. CHARLES J. ALLEN, Corps of Engineers, U. S. Army,
President of the Board of Engineers having under consideration the project of an inland waterway from Norfolk, Va., to Beaufort Inlet, North Carolina.

Mr. Chairman, as stated the other day upon the floor by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY], this is an era of canal building. The era of railroad building must sooner or later come to an end. The water-controlling period of the world is upon us. The whole drift of the times is toward the construction of water routes of transportation, supplementing railroad routes, and made necessary by the growth of population of the country. In the history of the centuries the time has arrived in which we propose to build the great isthmian canal at Panama connecting the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, shortening the distance between New York and San Francisco 10,080 miles. From New York to San Francisco by way of Cape Horn it is 14,840; by way of the Panama Canal it will be only 4,760, a saving of over 10,000 miles, and over fifty days' time by freight steamers between those two points, with a corresponding economy of sailing time to other points of the two coasts.

Soon, by means of this great canal, the lumber, cotton, cotton manufactures, coal, and iron of the South will be shipped to the Pacific coast and to the far Orient. Bearing a relationship to the construction of the Panama Canal, and in line with the general drift of the times, is the improvement and extension of the inland waterways of the United States. Inland waterways tend to cheapen the cost of freight, to develop industry; they cheapen the rate of transportation not only for the products of the farmers, but of manufacturers as well. In the world at large the Suez Canal is now open to commerce; the great Baltic Ship Canal is now in operation. Germany has within a very recent period expended more than $90,000,000 in the construction of a canal, and France has entered upon an extensive system of similar improvements.

On this continent Canada has a splendid system of waterways. In the United States the city of Chicago has started to build a great canal to the sea for its shipping and that of the Great Lakes; and without the aid of the State or National Government has already expended for that purpose $35,000,000, and has already constructed a great canal through which almost any vessel that can go through the Suez Canal can pass, making a great waterway from the Great Lakes, through the Illinois and Mississippi rivers, to the Gulf of Mexico. The State of New York has just determined to expend over $100,000,000 in enlarging the Erie Canal. The citizens of Philadelphia are clamoring for a 35-foot channel to the sea. The citizens of Delaware are asking Congress to deepen and widen the old Delaware and Chesapeake Canal, making a ship canal for our ships of war and our merchant marine and constituting a link in that wonderful water passageway which exists almost all the way from Sandy Hook to Florida.

With this well-recognized drift of events, I believe and I hope the day is near at hand when this great project of an inland waterway along the North Carolina coast, a project which has been agitated for so many years, and which was first suggested nearly one hundred years ago by Albert Gallatin, will soon meet the approval of Congress. I find in a valuable pamphlet on "Internal Improvements in North Carolina" an article which outlines the scheme of Albert Gallatin for a great coastwise canal in the early part of the nineteenth century. The article states the estimated cost of this work was placed at $3,000,000.

According to Gallatin's idea a seagoing vessel would enter the first canal at Boston Harbor, pass through the Rhode Island Bay, Long Island Sound, the harbor of New York, and reach Brunswick on the Raritan. It would then follow the second canal to Trenton, where it would meet the Delaware. It would follow this river to Christiana or New Castle; then through the third canal to Elk River and the Chesapeake. Down the Chesapeake Bay and up Elizabeth River it would enter Albemarle Sound through the fourth canal. Then by Pamlico, Core, and Bogue sounds it would reach Beaufort, N. C. From Beaufort vessels of smaller draft could be made to reach the Cape Fear Inlet by cutting two small necks of land. Below this point inland navigation could be continued between the outlying chain of islands and the coast of South Carolina and Georgia.

This bold plan of Gallatin attracted much attention and met with widespread approbation, but the war with Great Britain interrupted its execution. To North Carolina Gallatin's plan was very acceptable. The Secretary, before he made his great report, had surveyed a part of the route. In 1818 additional surveying was done. If the plan of connecting Norfolk and Beaufort were carried out, North Carolina confidently expected to see all the coasting trade of the United States pass that way in order to avoid the dangerous navigation around Cape Hatteras.

I trust, Mr. Chairman, that this great project, advocated thus early by the distinguished Gallatin, will sooner or later become a reality, making the seaports of North Carolina, especially the great harbor of Beaufort, all that the God of nature intended they should be, and benefiting the commerce of the whole country. Would it not be better for our national interests to spend a little less money for battle ships and cruisers to sail the seas and expend a little more money for the defense of our coasts, improving our navigation, the increase of our commerce and coastwise trade, and the benefit of the people who live at home?

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, I am not a believer in made-to-order issues for a Presidential campaign. Such issues, embodied in a platform, constitute a platform intended to get in on, but not to stand on. A platform to catch votes, to fool the people, but not embodying any vital principles. I have been somewhat amused during the present session of Congress at the efforts of certain Democratic leaders to get a made-to-order platform, differing materially from the platforms of the past, relegating to the rear or evading old issues in order that the Democratic party might be rejuvenated with something resembling actuality, so that there might be some possible chance of inducing the voters of the country to forget its past and again intrust it with the control of the Government. Those efforts seem to have thus far been futile, and it now seems that the coming political battle must be fought out along old lines and on well-established questions of principle.

There is one issue, and one only, on which the two great political parties of this country are divided to-day, precisely as they have been divided in the past. That is the issue of protection to American industries and American labor. There is no other issue—for this campaign there can be no other issue—upon which every Republican stands on one side and every Democrat upon the other side. This issue is as important now, as vital, as ever before in the history of this country. Protection is as necessary to preserve and maintain universal prosperity of all industries, of all classes, as it was originally to secure and bring about such prosperity. Strike it down in any degree and just to that extent you will strike down the interests and the prosperity of our manufactures, our agricultural interests, and the interests of every man who toils with hand or brain. The "academic idea of free trade" is as dangerous as it would be to intrust all the great affairs of this Government to the management of "academic" minds. It is not matter of dispute that since the passage of the Dingley tariff bill we have enjoyed in this country a period of unexampled prosperity in which all classes have participated.

Yet there are those who claim, in opposition to all the teachings of history, that freer trade with foreign nations would benefit the people of this country by giving them cheaper goods. So far as competitive products are concerned, I deny that any class of our people would be benefited by free trade or by a material reduction of present tariff rates. Certainly not the laboring man, for every dollar's worth of additional products imported from other lands would to just that extent lessen the demand for labor here, for we should be purchasing from abroad what could be made at home, which ought to be made at home, and which otherwise would be made at home by American labor. The business interests of the country would not be benefited by sending out of the country the money that should be used to pay for material and labor produced at home, for in the one case we should have only the goods and some other country would have the money, while in the other case we should have both the goods and the money, which would inevitably go back into the channels of our own trade to produce and pay for still other goods and furnish employment, comfort, and independence to the laboring men of our own country.

Lower duties would inevitably increase importations and just as inevitably would close some of our factories and throw out of employment some of our citizens. Such has always been the effect; such always will be the effect. In these days there is much of humbug and claptrap in connection with the doctrine of reciprocity, which is the handmaiden of protection or of free trade, as the case may be. Reciprocity in noncompetitive products is the doctrine of Blaine and McKinley, and is in truth the handmaiden of protection. Reciprocity in competitive products is just the opposite and is only another name for free trade. In other words, there can be no such thing as reciprocity unless we get our fair share of the benefits, and as we can derive no benefit by admitting free-of-duty articles that come in competition with like articles produced by our own citizens, such an act would not be one of reciprocity, but of simple free trade; nothing more and nothing less. There would be no reciprocity in admitting, for instance, Canadian cereals, eggs, butter, and other farm products free of duty in competition with the products of our own farmers, for of such articles we can more than supply the home market, and admitting great quantities of the same articles from Canada would inevitably reduce the price our farmers would receive at home, and would also compel them to seek a market abroad for just so much more of the home crop and therefore operate to reduce the export price as well.

No; our farmers will never consent to let in the natural products of Canada duty free to compete with them in their own home market, and woe to the political party which advocates such reciprocity as that. Canada can offer us nothing to adequately compensate for admitting its products free. If they should admit our manufactured goods, such as farm implements, for instance, free of duty, their own growing industries of the same kind would be driven out of business, their own laborers thrown out of employment, and in the end it would be but a bad bargain for both countries. Flood Minnesota with Canadian wheat, so that the great flour mills would be independent of home producers, and every farmer of that State and of other surrounding States would suffer. Flood Canada with our manufactured products free of duty and her own factories, would go out of business, her own laboring men be driven out of employment.

Protection is fair trade as opposed to free trade; that is, we should admit free of duty or at a low rate of duty by reciprocal arrangement with other countries such articles as they grow or produce and the like of which we can not grow or produce, on consideration of such countries admitting our products upon equally favorable terms. But every competing product of soil or factory should pay a duty equal at least to the difference in wages and cost of production between the country from which it comes and our own country. Thus we protect our own producers, give employment to our own people; and necessarily, as we are, and for all time must be, the greatest producing nation on earth, the country of the greatest resources, we shall inevitably keep the balance of trade in our favor, and thereby insure for all time the prosperity of our people. When we sell more than we buy, when the balance of trade is constantly in our favor, we are sure to be materially prosperous. With all our wonderful resources, the balance of trade has generally been against us in times of free trade or low tariffs, and always in our favor in times when the doctrine of protection has prevailed. We have sold more to other countries since the passage of the Dingley protective law, and at the same time we have bought more, notwithstanding the tariff, because we have been better able to buy. But our exports have increased to a much greater extent than our imports, because under the stimulus of protection our products have greatly increased, new industries have been established, and our people have been constantly employed.

Let us do a little comparing here between the condition of affairs in this country and in Great Britain, the one under the policy of protection and the other under the policy of free trade. The export trade of Great Britain has fallen off in thirty years about $110,000,000 per year, and her imports have in the same time increased about $800,000,000 per year, being a net loss of a little less than a round billion dollars per year. What wonder is it that her statesmen are seriously considering a radical change of policy from free trade to protection! Take the same thirty years in this country, and the figures, without other argument, ought to be enough to convert to the cause of protection every Democrat in the United States. Our imports in the calendar year 1903 exceeded those of 1873 by $400,000,000, an increase in the thirty years of 67 per cent, while at the same time in the calendar year 1903 our exports exceeded those of 1873 by $917,000,000, an increase in thirty years of 161 per cent.

Neither imports nor exports decreased by reason of the repeal of the Wilson bill and the enactment of the Dingley bill, but under the protective system both increased enormously. Our imports in the calendar year 1903 exceeded those of 1893 by $219,000,000, and the exports of 1903 exceeded those of 1893 by $608,000,000. For the calendar year 1903 our imports, including those from Hawaii and Porto Rico, were $1,035,119,829, and our exports were $1,508,314,032, leaving a net balance of trade in our favor of $473,194,103. And in the last seven years, under the protective system, the net balance of trade in our favor has been more than three and one-half billions of dollars.

It will be seen by the figures that under the protective system we buy more and we sell more than under free trade or a purely revenue tariff. It works both ways. By building up our industries we produce more and thus have more to sell to other countries, while by keeping our people constantly employed in remunerative pursuits they have more money with which to buy, and thus our foreign trade increases materially and our home trade enormously. Let me quote a British authority as to the effect of a protective tariff. Mr. Chamberlain, talking to the tinplate workers at Cardiff, Wales, said:

> You have the iron, you have the coal, you have the workmen, you have the people who have for generations been devoted to this particular trade. It is recognized everywhere that this particular trade is favorably situated, and yet this trade which ought to have been yours under any theory of true free trade or free exchange received a few years ago a mighty and staggering blow. The greater part of this trade was done with the United States of America. The McKinley tariff of 1891 put on it a prohibitive duty. This did not operate on your trade immediately, but, as always happens in such cases, behind the tariff a great industry grew up in America—a great industry which, at the present time, produces 400,000 tons of tin plate every year and gives employment to 50,000 workingmen. * * * What was the position at the time Mr. McKinley put on the duty? At that time the whole manufacture of tin plates in America was 500 tons. Now, in a few years it has increased to 400,000 tons. A trade of 400,000 tons you can not disturb. The vested interest is too powerful; the advantage to the country is too evident; the trade you have lost you have lost and you will never get it back.

Is not that an object lesson the effect of which no free trader or tariff reformer can get around or explain otherwise than as an irrefutable argument in favor of the doctrine of protection? I might go on to show you from the figures that the consumer did not, either, in that case pay the tax, because, as a matter of fact, the product was immensely cheapened to the consumer. A great industry built up, 50,000 men given employment, and all the money kept at home instead of being sent out of the country to pay for the same product! In innumerable cases the same result has followed protective legislation. In the last year, just one single year, it is stated by the Chattanooga Tradesman, 5,236 new industries were started in the Southern States alone. How many millions of dollars were invested in them I do not know; how many American citizens were given employment I can not tell; but this I do know, and every intelligent being knows the same thing, that the protective laws upon our statute books made this wonderful feat of development and prosperity possible.

Think you the South can be again humbugged with the fallacious idea that its people would be benefited by reducing duties and amending tariff schedules so that these new industries would have to compete in the open markets of the world, and of this country in particular, with the same kind of products produced in other lands where wages are only a third or a half what they are here? Can the laboring men of the land be induced to ever vote again for a policy that will close these factories and throw them out of employment? The days of free soup houses, of Coxey's armies, of millions of men out of employment and looking for work, are altogether too recent to be wholly forgotten.

Mr. Chairman, the logic of events has made the one and only issue of the coming campaign. It is the paramount issue, if you please, and the issue that will continue President Roosevelt and a Republican Congress at the helm. It is the issue that will insure the continuance of our wonderful prosperity in every avenue of trade and commerce north, south, east, and west, in every nook and corner of this broad land; the issue upon which every Republican holds the affirmative and every Democrat the negative, unless, indeed, the Democratic party is ready to admit that the Republican party has been right upon this issue during all its past history, while they have been wrong, and as to both these propositions, in the light of experience, there can be and there is no shadow of doubt.

We have all heard the argument—we shall doubtless continue to hear it in the next campaign—that the tariff fosters trusts and great monopolies. No one can deny that such trusts and monopolies exist in free-trade countries as well as in this country; no one can deny that they exist in nonprotected as well as in protected industries. But the mere fact—and I admit it is a fact—that they derive benefit from a protected tariff is used as an alleged argument against the entire policy of protection. Would you take away the benefits of protection from all industries, from all the people, because some great corporations are benefited? I would not. The rain falls on the just and on the unjust, yet I have never heard any one argue against the plan of an all-wise Providence in that respect. The wicked as well as the good, the rich as well as the poor, high and low alike enjoy all the blessings and the benefits of sunshine and shower, yet who would deny the actuality of the blessings or the benefits or propose to alter or change the Divine plan in order that the undeserving might be shut out from the enjoyment of such blessings and such benefits?

The protective system benefits all and is for all our people. I would not crush out a small industry to injure a larger industry. I would not think it a blessing or a benefit to deprive a thousand or a hundred thousand or a million of our people of their employment, of their chance to earn a livelihood, even if by so doing the greatest and richest corporation on earth could be driven out of business. If it were to never rain again, if the sun were to never shine again, the righteous would suffer quite as much as the sinners. Strike down your protective tariff system and not the trusts alone would be crippled, but the prosperity of all would be destroyed. We can manage our great corporations; we can control them; we will manage and control them, but not at the expense of all business, of all industries; not by closing all factories and all avenues of production; not by throwing all our laboring people out of employment, but by wise and enlightened supervision and control.

I believe that even with our present tariff laws we are getting quite as much of foreign manufactured goods shipped into this country as we need. If it would shut more of them out I would be willing to increase rather than reduce the tariff rates. The last fiscal year, 1903, our imports increased over the year previous by more than $100,000,000. The imports of manufactured articles for the year were more than $412,000,000. That is quite a large enough amount of manufactured goods from abroad to be admitted into this country in a single year to compete with our own manufacturers, especially when we consider that if the same goods had been made here by our own people fully $300,000,000 of that amount would have gone into the pockets of the laboring men of this country. Does it seem reasonable in the face of these figures that any laboring man would vote to take down the tariff bars and admit unlimited quantities of such foreign manufactured goods?

Mr. Chairman, I do not believe in the sacredness of any tariff schedules. Sometimes, no doubt, they need revising, to make more perfect the protective system. But as to the system as a whole the Republican party "stands pat." That will be its platform. That will be the issue, and on that issue, with hundreds of thousands of votes from those who have heretofore voted the Democratic ticket, but who as sensible and patriotic Americans can not do otherwise than vote with the Republican party on this great issue, we shall sweep the country.

Mr. BENTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EMERICH].

Mr. EMERICH. Mr. Chairman, there has during the current month been a vast amount of discussion in this House upon the subject of the Post-Office Department. Many able addresses have been made by Members; much information has been elicited concerning its workings and methods. The iniquities that fester and canker the conduct of the Department have been thoroughly thrashed out; its abuses have been made manifest. The rottenness existing among many of its higher officials has been trumpeted forth to the country. Charge and countercharges have been insistently made, and a veritable tempest of wrath seems to have devoured this House and the country at large whenever the malodorous subject of the administration of the Post-Office Department has been broached.

And yet, with this Department the storm center of the Administration, with the courts justly punishing parasitic officials who have used their exalted positions for the purpose of plundering the nation and guiltily enriching themselves, and with the spectacle before us of frantic attempts upon the part of all concerned to shift the blame from themselves to the shoulders of others, with absolute recklessness of the guilt or innocence of those accused so long as their own miserable, pitiful persons are protected, little has been said of the rank and file of the employees of the Department.

And this, too, is strange, because I doubt if the Government in any branch of its service contains a body of men more faithful to its employer, more single minded in its devotion to duty, and of greater public utility than this same class of uncomplaining, unmurmuring, hard-working, and thoroughly efficient postal clerks, carriers, and messengers.

While I realize that any statement that I may make in their behalf must be necessarily inadequate, lame, and halting, since no one without the actual experience in the arduousness of their work and the assiduity of their efforts can effectually portray them, still, I shall call the attention of this House to some of the important features, which, while of so common and everyday occurrence as to almost fail to excite comment, are yet of such a character as to demand prompt and careful attention. I wish also to call to the attention of the House some remedial legislation that I have proposed, which, in my judgment, will tend to mitigate the ardors and rigors of the very unenviable condition of these postal employees.

Briefly, then, I have offered two bills during the present session, House bills Nos. 13993 and 14096, which have been referred respectively to the Committee on Reform of the Civil Service and to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The first of these bills is one entitled "A bill to provide for the employees of the United States engaged in the postal service, who are incapacitated by injuries sustained in the performance of their duties or who become superannuated after twenty successive years of service, and for other purposes."

In it I have provided that clerks, carriers, messengers, and the men engaged in the difficult, arduous, and wearing duties of the Railway Mail Service be recompensed when they have sustained physical injuries which prevent them from further performing their duties.

In this connection it may not be amiss to dilate for a few minutes upon the character of men engaged in the Railway Mail Service, and the importance, danger, and physical strain of their work and of their own courage, fortitude, bravery—aye, unvaunted and unappreciated heroism.

The railway postal clerk leads the life of a nomad. His waking and sleeping hours are spent in the uncomfortable and nerve-racking environment of the United States mail coach, and his waking far exceed in number his sleeping hours. His duties demand his entire attention. The minuteness of detail that he must attend is tremendous. He must be a man of good education, quick, alert, and indefatigable. He must stand a frigh ful strain, which inevitably undermines his constitution. His responsibilities are enormous. His labor highly essential. He is in constant danger of his life. Yet in the face of all these obstacles, which might well appall a man of Spartan training and fortitude, he goes about the performance of his duties in a manner which must force admiration from the most grudging miser of praise, by sheer force of simple self-devotion and apparent unconsciousness of self-sacrifice.

How often have you gentlemen read in the public prints of railway disasters, frightful wrecks, bold robberies, almost unbelievable catastrophes, and at the end of the account noticed two or three lines to the effect that the railway mail clerk stuck to his car, defended his mail, gave up his life, or suffered dreadful physical tortures in the course of the effort required of him by the circumstances in safeguarding and defending the trust reposed in him. You have read numberless accounts of his quickness of wit, his address and adroitness, his bravery, and his utter unselfishness when these qualities were necessary to insure the inviolability of his trust. It is, as I stated above, so common as to scarcely excite remark, and yet this is heroism—true heroism in the ordinary walks of life, and it is not exceeded in sublimity by the most admired and hysterically bepraised action on the field of battle.

Are these men adequately rewarded? Does their emolument or opportunity for substantial advancement compare favorably with those of other public servants in less exacting, less arduous, less necessary, but more prominent and showy positions?

Does a great government which, quite properly, cares for and tenderly cherishes the lives of its defenders in time of war evidence a corresponding solicitude for these tried, brave, and faithful servants who so signally assist in promoting the arts of peace?

In their old age, when exhausted nature precludes them from continuing in so exacting a branch of the service, and when, by force of long habit, they are practically unfitted for other fields of effort, does a benign employing government say to them: "You have labored faithfully; you have given much and received little; you deserve well of your country, and it shall be your country's care and pride to deserve well of you?"

Alas, for the fact that it is not so. It is a trite saying that republics are ungrateful, and it must be admitted that our treatment of these deserving men adds tremendous force to the adage.

Mr. Chairman, let us rectify this deplorable condition. Let us mete out at least a modicum of justice to these silent, suffering, persevering heroes.

In my bill I have provided that when these men are so disabled as to be unfitted for the further discharge of their duties they shall receive a pension equal to one-half of the salary that they earn at the time of their disability. Is not that a sufficiently modest proposal? Is it too much to guarantee a bare existence for life to a man who has sacrificed the best that that life possesses for the promotion of the comfort and the well-being of his country and his fellow-men?

I have made this feature apply also to clerks, carriers, and messengers in the postal service, and they are equally entitled to it.

It is true that the chance of injury in their cases is considerably smaller, but, especially in the cases of carriers and messengers, cruel and continuous exposure and other factors in our complicated modern social and business systems render them always liable to injury and to becoming incapacitated for further active duty, and the reasons that I have previously cited apply here with equal force and cogency.

In this bill I have also provided that superannuation pensions be granted to clerks, carriers, and messengers in the postal service and to employees in the Railway Mail Service, and this provision I regard as the essential feature of the bill.

While there is always the chance of injury in any of these services, and in some cases the probability is greater than the probability of immunity, still the element of chance governs, and there always exists the prospect of a lifetime of service without mishap, but old age is inexorable and a certainty, and from the palsying and ruthless hand of time there is no escape.

Our postal clerks, carriers, and messengers are scantily paid, hard worked, capable, deserving, and perform functions of enormous utility. The carriers and messengers work long hours, perform hard physical labor, have great responsibilities, are indefatigable, tireless, and devoted. They are constantly subject to severe hardships, they are exposed to all the rigors of climate without the means of ameliorating conditions which other men more fortunate in their choice of avocation possess, and in this service they age quickly and their usefulness perceptibly diminishes with their advancing years until the period is reached when they are discarded like a cast-off garment which has served its purpose. Indeed, of the two, the garment receives the more consideration, from the fact that its owner frequently regrets it from force of association and for the service it has performed, while little if any sympathy is bestowed upon the worn-out public servant, who has only given his entire life to the service of his country.

My bill provides that when one of these employees reaches the age of 60 he may retire upon a pension of one-half the amount of salary he earns at the time of retirement, provided he has been in the Government employ continuously for a period of twenty years, and that if he has been employed for a less period than that and for a period of five years or more his retiring pension shall be such proportion of one-half his salary as the number of years of his service shall be of twenty.

Mr. Chairman, this proposal is not one that partakes of the nature of a request for alms for any set of men, but it is a matter of simple justice.

The country would not be giving them anything for nothing, but would merely be letting them have what they deserve and what they have earned. Surely a lifetime of earnest effort for inadequate remuneration deserves and earns a guaranty of competence in enforced retirement.

The country owes these men not merely a debt of gratitude but a more substantial, more tangible debt of dollars and cents, earned through much travail and hard labor, and at a cost of absolute life sacrifice, and it is incumbent upon you gentlemen in this House to provide for the payment of that debt in your positions as the nation's business managers, just as you would provide for the payment of the honest obligations of any commercial enterprise the management of which was intrusted to you.

The great business houses, the great industrial enterprises, all the great employers of labor are rapidly realizing that they are under both a moral and actual obligation to their faithful employees when these are compelled by stress of advancing age to relinquish their labors, and these same concerns are providing for the payment of that obligation.

Is a great government that ruthlessly takes the best that is in its servants to be held exempt from a similar obligation, or shall we make the humbling and disgraceful confession that this same great nation, so generous in the fostering of material advancement, so prodigal in its benefactions to industrial enterprises, so persistent in exemplifying the truth of the adage, "To him who hath shall be given," is too neglectful or too niggardly to properly provide for its deserving and patient servants?

For shame! Let us not stand before the world a nation that self-confessedly appropriates the lifeblood of its human pillars and then refuses to recompense them for their sacrifice.

Mr. Chairman, I have also, as I stated before, introduced a bill that is now innocuously slumbering in the cavernous recesses of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads with many other worthy bills, which the timidity, to call it by no worse name, of our legislators will not permit to see the beneficient light of day, and that bill proposes an increase of pay for postal clerks, carriers, and messengers.

Mr. Chairman, that bill is a just measure, and all that I have previously said about the neglect of the postal employees gathers renewed force when their shamefully inadequate pay is taken into consideration.

I have no power of expression that can voice my indignation at the penurious policy which the Government has employed in dealing with this question. We stand convicted before the world of rank and flagrant injustice. Our neglect and our self-complacency in the face of that neglect are nothing short of beir g absolutely criminal.

We discuss calmly and smugly the well-being of Filipinos, the righteousness of our conduct toward the Cubans, the beneficial or harmful nature of our policies respecting the Porto Ricans, and our duties toward hundreds of alien races and peoples, and this is all proper enough. We condemn the Sultan of Turkey's treatment of his subjects. Quite correct. But for Heaven's sake, before we remark on the mote in our brother's eye, let us cast the beam from out our own. Let us be just to our servants and true to ourselves, "and it must follow, as the night the day, that we shall not then be false to any other man." [Loud applause.]

My bill provides for but a small increase. I would I thought I could procure a greater.

Mr. Chairman, if we can not prevail upon ourselves to do entire justice, let us at least assure to these men a tithe of what is their due.

One feature of my bill, to which I wish to call especial attention, is that of an automatic increase of $100 in yearly salary for each five years' service.

Mr. Chairman, no reputable business house fails to recognize long, faithful service, and it is as little as we can do to grant the miserably small additional pittance of $100 after we have been faithfully served for five years. [Applause.]

When I reflect what a comparatively small sum it would require to effect the changes concerning which I have spoken, when I reflect what haggling, what puerile objections are advanced to the carrying out of these proposals, when I reflect, in addition, what prodigality is indulged in for less meritorious reasons, I am consumed with indignation and can hardly trust myself to give coherent expression to my views.

Mr. Chairman, this is no attempt to procure partisan advantage; it is no effort to place any man or men or party in a disagreeable position or bad light. I merely ask that some measure of justice be accorded hard-working, modest, deserving men, and I ask in the name of American manhood, American ideals, American principles of right that earnestness and single-heartedness be recognized and rewarded, and that justice, the eternal foundation of an enduring nation, record its triumph and vindicate our claim to perpetual fame and an exalted position in the plane of moral rectitude. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BURTON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 14416, the sundry civil appropriation bill, and had instructed him to report that the committee had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 8889. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Monongahela River, in the State of Pennsylvania, by the Eastern Railroad Company."

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 1570. An act granting an increase of pension to Jasper Robinson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 76. An act granting a pension to Mary H. Cornell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 4773. An act granting a pension to Juliette Nunez—to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 5846) granting an increase of pension to Carrie K. Baker; and

A bill (H. R. 12099) granting an increase of pension to Edwin M. Slayton.

Mr. SCOTT, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1909) granting an increase of pension to William Holliday, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them each with an amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 2367) granting an increase of pension to Ferdinand Mergel;

A bill (S. 423) granting an increase of pension to Louisa Weaver;

A bill (S. 4811) granting an increase of pension to Phebe Sibley; and

A bill (S. 2011) granting a pension to Maggie E. Bamford.

Mr. HEYBURN, from the Committee on the Geological Survey, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3788) to provide for an examination to determine the feasibility of reclaiming the overflowed lands of the Kootenai River, in northern Idaho and Montana, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

COURTS IN GEORGIA.

Mr. BACON. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report back to the Senate favorably without amendment two House bills, short bills, and I ask that they may be immediately considered. They relate to the sessions of courts, local matters, important to be disposed of, so that they may not be delayed beyond the time when those courts will meet.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first bill reported by the Senator from Georgia will be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill (H. R. 12904) providing for holding of courts of the eastern division of the northern Federal judicial district of Georgia at Athens, Ga.; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The second bill reported by the Senator from Georgia will be read.

The Secretary read the bill (H. R. 13352) transferring the county of Pierce, in the State of Georgia, from the eastern to the southwestern division of the United States district court for the southern district of Georgia, and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WABASH RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. ELKINS. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5075) to authorize the board of commissioners of Vigo County, Ind., to construct and maintain a wagon, foot, and trolley-car bridge across the Wabash River at the foot of Wabash avenue, in the city of Terre Haute, in said county and State, to report it favorably with an amendment.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendment of the Committee on Commerce was to add, after the word "bridge," at the end of section 4, on page 3, line 2, a comma and the following:

And equal privileges in the use of said bridge shall be granted to all telegraph and telephone companies.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COURTS IN MISSOURI.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8681) to detach the county of Linn, in the State of Missouri, from the western and attach it to the eastern judicial district of said State, to report it favorably with an amendment.

Mr. STONE. The bill just reported by the Senator from Kentucky is of purely local import in Missouri, and there are some reasons why it ought to be acted upon speedily. I ask unanimous consent that it be considered now.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary was, in line 3, to strike out the word "county" and insert "counties;" and after the word "Linn," in the same line, to insert the words "and Chariton;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the counties of Linn and Chariton, in the State of Missouri, be detached from the western and attached to the eastern judicial district of the State of Missouri: Provided, That the courts of the said western district shall retain and exercise jurisdiction over all causes and proceedings, civil and criminal, arising in or coming from said county and begun and pending at the date of the taking effect of this act as completely as if this act were not passed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to detach the counties of Linn and Chariton, in the State of Missouri, from the western and attach them to the eastern judicial district of said State."

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BAILEY introduced a bill (S. 5283) for the relief of the estate of Alexander C. Crawford, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. McCREARY introduced a bill (S. 5284) granting a pension to Mary Jane Lewis; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5285) granting an increase of pension to James T. Goode; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5286) for the relief of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, of Bryantsville, Ky.; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DOLLIVER introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 5287) granting an increase of pension to Amos M. Runkle;

A bill (S. 5288) granting an increase of pension to James H. Lewis;

A bill (S. 5289) granting an increase of pension to Peter Baker; and

A bill (S. 5290) granting an increase of pension to Justin C. Kennedy.

Mr. DOLLIVER introduced a bill (S. 5291) to correct the military record of James Boyle; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5292) to correct the military record of Solomon W. Kyle; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. QUAY (by request) introduced a bill (S. 5293) for the relief of the Colville Indians occupying the Colville Reservation, in the State of Washington, and comprising the San Puell Indians, the Columbia Indians (or Moses's band), the Nez Percé Indians (or Joseph's band), the Okanogan Indians, the Lake Indians, and the Colville Indians; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. LODGE introduced a bill (S. 5294) to refund internal-revenue taxes paid by owners of private dies; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CLAPP introduced a bill (S. 5295) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Daniel W. Seal; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. FRYE introduced a bill (S. 5296) granting an increase of pension to George W. Bryant; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GALLINGER introduced a bill (S. 5297) granting an increase of pension to Jerry L. Gray; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 5298) to incorporate the Lammi Interstate Railway Company, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

AMENDMENT TO CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. TELLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 9548) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1883, and commonly known as the "Bowman Act;" which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEWART submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $1,000 for printing the report of the Venezuelan arbitrations at Caracas, Venezuela, the usual number of copies for the Senate and House of Representatives, and 250 extra copies for the Department of State, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

CONTRACTS FOR POST-OFFICE SUPPLIES.

Mr. CLAY. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed to the pending post-office appropriation bill. It is short, and I ask that it be read and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the proposed amendment will be read.

There being no objection, the amendment was read and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed, as follows:

To amend the bill making appropriation for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes, by adding the following section, to be known as section 7.

"SEC. 7. The Postmaster-General, in making purchases for supplies necessary for the Post-Office Department, shall advertise, as now provided by law, and award contracts for such supplies to the lowest bidder in pursuance of existing law. The Postmaster-General shall have recorded in a book to be kept for that purpose a true and faithful abstract of all bids made for furnishing supplies to the Post-Office Department, giving the name of the party bidding, the terms of the offer, the sum to be paid, and he shall keep on file and preserve all such bids until the end of the contract term to which they relate. Each bidder shall have the right to be present, either in person or by attorney, when the bids are opened, and shall have the right to examine and inspect all bids. All purchases and contracts for supplies for the Post-Office Department shall be made by or under the direction of the Postmaster-General, and in purchasing such supplies preference shall be given to articles of domestic production and manufacture, conditions of price and quality being equal. There shall be separate proposals and separate contracts for each class of material furnished. It shall be the duty of the Postmaster-General to report to Congress at the commencement of every regular session. This report shall contain a schedule embracing the bids by classes, including the name of the bidder, the prices named, indicating such as have been accepted. These records shall be open at all times for the inspection of Congress, and for the inspection of those who may be interested in such contracts made, or to be made, to furnish supplies to the Post-Office Department."

ELI AYERS.

Mr. TELLER. I move that the bill (S. 3170) to quiet the titles of certain lands in the State of Mississippi and for the relief of the estate of Eli Ayers be recommitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

MISSOURI, KANSAS AND OKLAHOMA RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. COCKRELL. On the 16th instant I introduced a bill (S. 5065) permitting the Missouri, Kansas and Oklahoma Railroad Company, a consolidated railroad corporation organized and existing under the laws of the Territory of Oklahoma, to sell its railroads and properties to the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railway Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Kansas; which was referred to the Committee on Territories. I move that that committee be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

ESTATE OF THE LATE SENATOR FLANAGAN.

Mr. BAILEY (by request) submitted the following resolution, which was read:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States of America, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and is hereby, authorized to pay to the heirs of the late J. W. Flanagan, formerly a Senator from the State of Texas, for balance of salary due him as Senator of the United States from March 4, 1869, to March 29, 1870, the sum of $5,356.16, to be paid from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate, as follows:

One-seventh to each of his three living children, Webster Flanagan, James W. Flanagan, Mrs. Fanny Swan, and one-seventh to Webster Flanagan for the heirs of Mrs. Laura Stewart; one-seventh to James W. Flanagan, jr., for the heirs of R. B. Flanagan, and one-seventh to Thomas Yates for the heirs of Mrs. Marion Yates, and one-seventh to Mrs. Emma Flanagan for the heirs of S. H. Flanagan.

Mr. BAILEY. I take it that the resolution would properly be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, but I am informed that in cases of Senators situated exactly as Senator Flanagan's was, payments have been made upon reports from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and that being true, if it is in order under the rules to send it to that committee, I would prefer to have it go there.

Mr. HOAR. Let the resolution be read again.

Mr. BAILEY. If there is any question about it, I shall not insist on that reference, and will just let it go to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not think there is much question about it. Ordinarily such resolutions are referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and after having been reported by that committee they are referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. That is right.

Mr. BAILEY. Very well; let it take that course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. HOAR. Let me say to the honorable Senator that the Committee on Privileges and Elections a year or two ago went very carefully over all these claims for arrears or inequalities in the pay of Senators in the past—the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] was one of the committee—and they adopted a carefully considered general rule about it. So they will be able to deal with this question, I think, very easily.

Mr. BAILEY. Very well.

DECISION IN MERGER CASE.

Mr. GORMAN. I submit a resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed, for the use of the Senate, 13,000 copies of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of the Northern Securities Company and others v. The United States, with concurring and dissenting opinions, 3,000 for Senate document room and 10,000 for Senate folding room.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will that include the briefs?

Mr. GORMAN. No, sir.

Mr. COCKRELL. Merely the opinions?

Mr. GORMAN. Simply the opinions; not the briefs. I will state to the Senator from Missouri that it would take quite a long time to have the document printed with all the briefs, and this comes within the rule, the cost being less than $500.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

LIFE-SAVING DEVICES ON RAILWAYS.

Mr. CARMACK submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

Resolved by the Senate, That the Interstate Commerce Commission be instructed to inquire into the utility of the various patent life-saving devices for use in railway transportation, and make report as soon as practicable to the Senate.

NEW PANAMA CANAL COMPANY.

Mr. DRYDEN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Senate 400 copies of Senate Document No. 188, first session Fifty-sixth Congress (New Panama Canal Company of France), with illustrations.

REPORTS OF DIRECTOR OF THE MINT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 3,000 additional copies of the Report of the Director of the Mint on the Production of the Precious Metals for the calendar year 1902, bound in cloth and wrapped, for the use of the Director of the Mint.

Resolved, That there also be printed 3,000 additional copies of the Report of the Director of the Mint Covering the Operations of the Mints and Assay Offices of the United States for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1903, to be bound in cloth and wrapped, for the use of the Director of the Mint.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands:

A bill (H. R. 9985) providing for the donation of lots A, B, K, and L, in block 39, in Fort Dalles military addition to The Dalles, Oreg., as shown on the plat of the city of The Dalles and surroundings and filed in the local land office at The Dalles, Oreg., to the Oregon Historical Society; and

A bill (H. R. 12685) for the reappraisement and sale of the undisposed lands within the Fort Walla Walla Military Reservation, in the State of Washington.

The following bills and joint resolution were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

A bill (H. R. 10208) for the relief of Allegheny College, at Meadville, Pa.;

A bill (H. R. 14110) to authorize the donation of a certain unused and obsolete gun now at Chickamauga Park, Ga., to Phil Kearny Post of the Grand Army of the Republic, at Nelsonville, Ohio; and

A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 136) for appointment of members of Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

The bill (H. R. 9) to open for settlement 505,000 acres of land in the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indian reservations, in Oklahoma Territory, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The bill (H. R. 9135) for the relief of F. R. Lanson was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The bill (H. R. 10866) to amend section 68, chapter 23, of volume 28 of the United States Statutes at Large was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

The bill (H. R. 13740) for the relief of the Western Alaska Construction Company's Railroad was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

FISH-CULTURAL STATION IN IDAHO.

Mr. HEYBURN. I desire present consideration of the bill (S. 4248) to establish a fish-hatching and fish station in the State of Idaho.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Fisheries with an amendment, in line 8, to strike out the words "United States Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries" and insert "Secretary of Commerce and Labor;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated for the establishment of a fish-cultural station in the State of Idaho, including purchase of site, construction of buildings and ponds, and equipment, at some suitable point to be selected by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to establish a fish-cultural station in the State of Idaho."

PENSION ORDER OF INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

Mr. ALLISON, Mr. CARMACK, and Mr. PENROSE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee is recognized. The Senator from Tennessee desires to call up a resolution which was laid on the table subject to his call. That is the Chair's reason for recognizing him, as it is practically morning business.

Mr. PENROSE. I ask the Senator from Tennessee if he will permit me to call up a short bill in reference to a lost check.

Mr. CARMACK. I have promised to yield to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY]. Let the resolution be brought up first, and then I will yield to both Senators.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. CARMACK on the 21st instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire and report to the Senate whether, in the opinion of said committee, there is any authority of law for a recent order of the Secretary of the Interior to the effect that all persons who served in the Army or Navy of the United States during the war of the rebellion, and who have reached the age of 62 years, shall be presumed to have incurred such disabilities as to entitle them to receive pensions under the act of Congress, June 27, 1890.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate agree to the resolution?

Mr. LODGE. What is the resolution? I ask that it may be read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be again read.

Mr. MCCREARY. I ask the Senator from Tennessee to yield to me for just a moment.

Mr. CARMACK. I will state to the Senator from Massachusetts that I do not want to have the resolution voted on this morning. I expect to discuss it briefly and then let it go over again.

Mr. LODGE. I withdraw the request. I thought it was a request to have it passed.

Mr. MCCREARY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Tennessee say he desires that the resolution shall go over?

Mr. CARMACK. I desire to discuss the resolution briefly and will then let it go over again. I yield now to the Senator from Kentucky.

CENTRAL UNIVERSITY OF KENTUCKY.

Mr. MCCREARY. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 4448) for the relief of Central University of the State of Kentucky, and A. R. Burnam and John Bennett.

The Secretary read the bill: and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to release Central University of the State of Kentucky, and A. R. Burnam and John Bennett, sureties, from the payment of $556.72, for small arms and ordnance stores furnished Central University of the State of Kentucky, which were lost, destroyed, or taken away without the fault or negligence of Central University of the State of Kentucky, or the sureties, A. R. Burnam and John Bennett.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PITTSBURG SHEAR, KNIFE AND MACHINE COMPANY.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] has consented to yield while I ask for the consideration of a small bill for the issuance of a duplicate check in lieu of one lost. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10925) directing the issue of a check in lieu of a lost check drawn in favor of the Pittsburg Shear, Knife and Machine Company, now the Heppenstall Forge and Knife Company, of Pittsburg, Pa.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with amendments, in line 3, after the first word, "That," to strike out "said:" in line 5, before the word "original," to insert "an:" and in the same line, after the word "check," to insert "issued by him on the 6th day of November, 1902;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That D. M. Taylor, major of ordnance, United States Army, be, and he is hereby, instructed to issue a duplicate of an original check issued by him on the 6th day of November, 1902, No. 38017, upon the assistant treasurer of the United States at Chicago, in favor of the Pittsburg Shear, Knife and Machine Company, for the sum of $3,048.50, under such regulations in regard to its issue and payment as have been prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury for the issue of duplicate checks under the provisions of section 3646, Revised Statutes of the United States.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

PROTECTION OF THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to give notice that on next Monday, after the completion of the routine morning business, I shall move to take up the bill (S. 5093) for the protection of the President of the United States, and for other purposes, and I shall ask the Senate to proceed with the consideration of the same until it shall have been disposed of.

CONNECTICUT RIVER BRIDGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4672) to authorize the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad Company to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge accross the Connecticut River; which were, on page 4, line 1, to strike out "two years" and insert "one year;" and in the same line, to strike out "six" and insert "three."

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. That passes the bill, I understand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does.

DISPOSITION OF PENSIONS OF INSANE PENSIONERS.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I ask the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] to yield to me that I may secure the consideration of a bill which I think will lead to no debate.

Mr. CARMACK. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3781) relating to the payment and disposition of pension money due to inmates of the Government Hospital for the Insane.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for information, subject to objection.

The Secretary read the bill: and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to amend the provision in the act approved August 7, 1882, appearing on page 330 of the Twenty-second Statutes at Large and relating to pensions of inmates of the Government Hospital for the Insane, so as to read as follows:

During the time that any pensioner shall be an inmate of the Government Hospital for the Insane, all money due or becoming due upon his or her pension shall be paid by the pension agent to the superintendent of the hospital, upon a certificate by such superintendent that the pensioner is an inmate of the hospital and is still living, and such pension money shall be by said superintendent disbursed and used, under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, for the benefit of the pensioner, and in the case of an invalid pensioner, his wife, minor children, and dependent parents, if any, in the order named, and to pay his or her board and maintenance in the hospital, the remainder of such pension money, if any, to be placed to the credit of the pensioner, and to be paid to the pensioner or the guardian of the pensioner in the event of his or her discharge from the hospital, or to be applied to the general uses of the hospital in the event of the pensioner's death while an inmate thereof. This provision shall also be applicable to all unexpended pension money heretofore paid to the officers of said hospital on account of pensioners who were inmates thereof.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PENSION ORDER OF INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

Mr. ALLISON. Regular order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution submitted by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] relative to a pension order of the Interior Department is before the Senate, on which the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, as I have said before, I meant no disrespect to the Committee on Pensions, of which I am a member and for whose other members I have a very high regard, in naming the Committee on the Judiciary in this resolution. I have named that committee because I think the duty to be performed belongs to that committee and to no other.

This resolution presents a legal and constitutional question, involving the legal and constitutional powers of the Executive and the legal and constitutional rights of Congress. I am asking for a legal opinion with respect to the legal and constitutional rights of this body, and I naturally seek that opinion from the committee which is properly regarded as the legal advisers of the Senate.

The order of the Secretary of the Interior deals with the matter of pensions, but the importance of this resolution is not affected in the least by that fact. I am not asking the Senate to investigate any question with reference to the effect of that order upon the pension roll or upon the annual pension appropriations. I am asking the Senate to take legal advice with reference to its own constitutional rights and privileges as a part of the lawmaking department of this Government. I think, Mr. President, that legal opinion ought to be given by a committee of lawyers.

If this question is of any importance whatever, it is a question of the very highest importance. If the investigation called for should be made at all, it should be made by a committee whose members have been selected by the Senate because of their preeminent legal abilities and their preeminent fitness to advise the Senate upon all questions involving an interpretation of the Constitution and the laws.

The Committee on Pensions is a committee composed of very able men, but that committee was not chosen with reference to the legal abilities of its members, and, as a matter of fact, the majority of that committee are not lawyers at all. So, while there are some excellent lawyers on that committee, it seems to me a little absurd that the Senate should ask for legal advice upon a legal and constitutional question from a committee the majority of whose members are not lawyers at all. For that reason, I repeat, without meaning any disrespect whatever to the Committee on Pensions, I have asked that this investigation and report be made by the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. President, I do not intend this morning to discuss at any great length the merits of this proposition. I have before me a copy of this order issued by the Secretary of the Interior.

In substance it declares that hereafter any man who served ninety days in the Union Army, and who has reached the age of 62, shall be presumed—and under this order I think it amounts practically to a conclusive presumption—to have incurred such disability as to entitle him to a pension whether or not he makes the proof required by the plain letter of the law.

Here is the law, the act of 1890, as amended by the act of April 23, 1900:

SEC. 2. That all persons who served ninety days or more in the military or naval service of the United States during the late war of the rebellion and who have been honorably discharged therefrom, and who are now or who may hereafter be suffering from a mental or physical disability of a permanent character, not the result of their own vicious habits, which incapacitates them from the performance of manual labor in such a degree as to render them unable to earn a support, shall, upon making due proof of the fact according to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may provide, be placed upon the list of invalid pensioners of the United States.

"Upon making due proof of the fact." I do not know whether anyone here will contend that that is modified by the provision that proof shall be made "according to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may provide," but it seems plain to me that that must be subordinate and ancillary to the requirement that "due proof" shall be made.

Evidence is not proof; it only becomes proof when it is strong enough to establish the fact, to convince the mind of the fact in question. The law distinctly provides that the fact of disability shall be proven as a fact; and you can not prove it by any presumption that dispenses with the taking of evidence and the making of proof. You must make proof; you must show that the disability exists as a fact. You do not make "due proof" of a fact by a presumption that dispenses with proof; you do not make "due proof" of a fact by simply begging the question and assuming the very fact to be proven.

This law further says:

And in determining such inability each and every infirmity shall be duly considered and the aggregate of the disabilities shown be rated.

"Each and every infirmity shall be duly considered" before you can determine and decide that a man is so disabled as to entitle him to a pension. You can not presume that these infirmities exist. The law requires that proof shall be made in every case. No matter whether a man is 62 years old, or 61 years old, or 60 years old, or 59 years old, the law makes no distinction—"each and every infirmity" must "be duly considered and the aggregate of the disabilities shown rated" before you can place a man on the pension list.

This order attempts in a rather curious way to get around that provision of the statute. It says:

Whereas old age is an infirmity the average nature and extent of which the experience of the Pension Bureau has established with reasonable certainty.

"Whereas old age is an infirmity." Why, Mr. President, we speak of the infirmities of age; but, except by a figure of speech, where the cause is put for the effect or the effect for the cause, you can not say that age is an infirmity in itself any more than a gunshot wound is an infirmity. Thousands of men during the late war received gunshot wounds without any appreciable diminution of their bodily strength and vigor, and without any impairment of their ability to earn a support. In the same way thousands of men have reached the age of 62 without any appreciable impairment of their ability to earn a support. Whether, when a man has reached the age of 62 years, the disabilities and infirmities of age come upon him is a fact to be proved in every case.

What is an infirmity? It is a mental or a physical weakness. The fact that a man has lived to be 62 years of age does not of itself constitute a physical weakness. It may be a cause of it. The fact that a man has lived to be 75 years of age may be the cause of his death, but you can not assume that he is dead by proving that he is 75 years old; and you can not assume that because a man has reached 62 years he has certain infirmities—such infirmities as would entitle him to a pension—because age itself is not an infirmity. It causes infirmities, but the age that makes one man infirm does not make another man infirm. It depends upon the native vigor and strength of his constitution whether at any particular age a man has become infirm. That, under this law, is a matter to be proven as a fact and not to be assumed or presumed as a fact, so that proof may be dispensed with.

Mr. President, I am not to be answered by the statement that the Department itself has made a precedent for such action in the past and that this violation of the law only differs from past violations of the law in being more flagrant and outrageous in its character. I say it is a piece of executive legislation. How did it happen to come here, Mr. President? I call attention to a very remarkable coincidence. This order says:

Ordered, (1) In the adjudication of pension claims under said act of June 27, 1890, as amended, it shall be taken and considered as an evidential fact, if the contrary does not appear, and if all other legal requirements are properly met, that when a claimant has passed the age of 62 years he is disabled one-half in ability to perform manual labor, and is entitled to be rated at $6 per month; after 65 years, at $8 per month; after 68 years, at $10 per month, and after 70 years, at $12 per month.

I want to read an extract from a bill now pending in the Congress of the United States. It reads as follows:

That every officer or enlisted man in the Army or Navy of the United States coming within the provisions of the second section of the act of June 27, 1890, as amended by the act of May 9, 1900, who is or may become 62 years of age shall be pensioned under said acts at $6 per month, and every one who is or may become 65 years of age shall be pensioned at $8 per month; those who are or who may become 68 years of age shall be pensioned at $10 per month, and those who are or who may become 70 years of age shall be pensioned at $12 per month.

This order has simply been taken and copied from a bill pending here in the Congress of the United States. Why? Mr. President, it had become evident that that bill could not pass.

Mr. OVERMAN. May I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PERKINS in the chair). Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. CARMACK. I do.

Mr. OVERMAN. Is it not true that there are service-pension bills now pending before the Committee on Pensions of the Senate?

Mr. CARMACK. There are two service-pension bills now pending before the Committee on Pensions of the Senate; and this order has copied almost verbatim the language of one of the bills now pending in the Congress of the United States. Congress has practically refused to make that bill a law.

It had become evident that Congress would not enact any such legislation; and when it did become evident that that could not be done and would not be done, the Secretary of the Interior says "It is not at all necessary; we will not fool with those cattle up there"—as the President of the United States once described the Congress of the United States—"we will not fool with those cattle, but go on and pass a law ourselves by a simple twist of the wrist."

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. CARMACK. I do.

Mr. FORAKER. I rose to inquire of the Senator how it became evident that the bill to which he has called attention could not be favorably acted upon by Congress? I ask only for information. I never heard of the bill until the Senator read it just now; I do not know anything of its history; and I do not know in which House it was introduced.

Mr. CARMACK. It was introduced in both Houses. It has never been reported favorably by any committee; and if the Senator had been a member of the Committee on Pensions, as I am, he would know——

Mr. FORAKER. Has there been any action taken upon it?

Mr. CARMACK. No; and there will not be.

Mr. FORAKER. I want to ask the Senator another question while I am on my feet, if I do not too much interrupt him——

Mr. CARMACK. Not at all; I am always glad to be interrupted by my friend from Ohio.

Mr. FORAKER. My question is whether it is true, as I have seen it stated in the newspapers, that a similar order to this was made during the Administration of Mr. Cleveland in regard to pensioners of the Mexican war?

Mr. CARMACK. I do not think so. That was covered by law.

Mr. OVERMAN. That was an act of Congress.

Mr. CARMACK. Congress passed an act pensioning Mexican veterans 62 years of age.

Mr. FORAKER. I am asking for information. I have seen it stated that this order is framed in exact accordance with an order made during the Administration of Mr. Cleveland.

Mr. CARMACK. The Senator from Ohio will excuse me. There was an act of Congress fixing that.

Mr. FORAKER. I know the Senator has just so stated, but I do not so understand.

Mr. CARMACK. If the Senator will permit me, I will read from this order, and I think that will settle the question:

Whereas by act of Congress in 1887——

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. CARMACK. I will read this order, and then I will yield to the Senator.

Whereas by act of Congress in 1887, when thirty-nine years had elapsed after the Mexican war, all soldiers of said war who were over 62 years of age were placed on the pension roll—

So it will be seen that was by an act of Congress.

Now I yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] has yielded to the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY].

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I was just about to volunteer the suggestion that doubtless this will be considered the act of the Government. I remember some few weeks ago, when the entire country was horrified by that great fire calamity in Baltimore, the President of the United States telegraphed over there to the mayor, expressing his sympathy with that stricken people, and he wound the telegram up by saying: "If there is anything the Government can do to relieve your situation, I pray you call on me." He thinks he is the Government.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. CARMACK. I do.

Mr. LODGE. I want to ask the Senator—merely for information—if this presumption of disability arising from age has not existed before this time?

Mr. CARMACK. Yes, Mr. President; as stated a while ago, there was a precedent for that.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me ask the Senator a question.

Mr. LODGE. Let the Senator answer me, if he does not mind.

Mr. CARMACK. I will tell the Senator in a moment. The ages were fixed at 65 and 75. It is stated in this paper somewhere.

Mr. LODGE. When were the ages fixed at 65 and 75?

Mr. CARMACK. Yes—

The former rules of the office fixing the minimum and maximum at 65 years and 75 years, respectively, are hereby modified as above.

I think the Senator from Florida has that date. I have it not.

Mr. ALDRICH. Who was President when it was done?

Mr. LODGE. Yes; who was President when that was done?

Mr. CARMACK. I do not know. I have not the date here.

Mr. FORAKER. I observe that a resolution was passed calling on the Department or the President, one or the other, for full information in regard to this order, and I was waiting until it came in. I should like to inquire, as the Senator evidently has been investigating this matter, whether that resolution has yet been answered?

Mr. CARMACK. I do not know. I have an official copy of the order.

Mr. FORAKER. We all have the order. It was published in the papers.

Mr. CARMACK. This is an official copy of the order. I waited to get an official copy before making any remarks upon it. But there are other things embraced in the resolution of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN].

Mr. OVERMAN. I will say to the Senator from Ohio that there has been no answer, although it is ten days since the resolution was passed.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will ask the Senator for information, whether it is not a fact that from and since the time of Cleveland's Administration it has been a rule in the Bureau of Pensions that when a man has reached the age of 65 years it was presumed that he was incapable of performing more than half of a man's labor, and that if he were 75 years of age he was presumed to be unable to perform manual labor? Is not that a fact, and is it not true that it has been simply a matter of presumption only? Is it not true that when Judge Lochren was Commissioner of Pensions he inaugurated this rule, and that the rule has been found to work reasonably well?

Mr. ALDRICH. Who was President at that time?

Mr. McCUMBER. Judge Lochren was Commissioner under Mr. Cleveland.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. Cleveland then was President?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes, sir.

Mr. CARMACK. I said before that I do not know when it originated, and I do not care when it originated. I said before that this order differed from the precedent that had been established before only in being a more outrageous and flagrant violation of the law. I do not care when such an order was made. It was a bad precedent, and if there is any bad precedent made anywhere or ever has been made since the foundation of this Government the present President of the United States will be certain to find it and act upon it, especially if it is a precedent in the direction of Executive aggression upon legislative power.

I called attention to the fact, the important fact, that in this particular case a bill was pending and is now pending in the Congress of the United States to accomplish the very thing that is sought to be accomplished by this order, and it being evident, as my friend knows, that none of those bills could pass at this session of Congress, the Secretary of the Interior, acting, no doubt, under the direction of the President of the United States, proceeds to pass the law which the Congress had refused to pass.

Mr. McCUMBER. I want to ask the Senator another question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. CARMACK. I do.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator states that the effect of these rules will be practically to make a law of this bill which was introduced.

Mr. CARMACK. What is that?

Mr. McCUMBER. That the effect of these rules will be the same as though the bill the Senator has read were enacted into law. Then, if that be true, how does it happen that similar rules have never operated in that way?

Mr. CARMACK. You never had any such rules.

Mr. McCUMBER. We have had exactly the same rules, with the exception that 65 years was the age of the minimum presumption and 75 the maximum. The rules, so far as their evidential character was concerned, was exactly the same. They differ in no respect, as I understand, and yet the Department has never held that when a man——

Mr. CARMACK. I did not yield for a lengthy argument.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to explain this. The Department has never held, under their rules, that when a man has reached the age of 65 he should draw the minimum pension of $6 a month, but that it was only prima facie evidence.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee declines to yield further.

Mr. CARMACK. It is an evidential fact if the contrary does not appear. How is the contrary going to appear?

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CARMACK. I must be allowed a little while in my own behalf.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee declines to yield.

Mr. ALDRICH. I want to ask a very simple question.

Mr. CARMACK. Very well.

Mr. ALDRICH. Is the Senator now willing to admit——

Mr. CARMACK. That it commenced under Mr. Cleveland?

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes.

Mr. CARMACK. Yes; perhaps it did. It commenced under Mr. Cleveland; but I do not think that helps a particle. I admit that it was under Mr. Cleveland's Administration that the law was first violated in this particular—and it was exceedingly unfortunate, in that it gave the present occupant of the White House an opportunity, upon which he has eagerly seized, to go still further and make it still worse.

I admit it was first done under Mr. Cleveland's Administration, but that shows the evil of making a breach in the law. It shows the evil of making an order that violates the law. The first order, taken by itself—the order giving a pension at 75 years—independent of the question that it was not authorized by law, was a fairly reasonable order; but this order goes to an extreme, and if you can assume that a man is disabled when he is 62 years old, you can presume that he is disabled when he is 40, or 50, or 55, or 60 years old. It makes a service pension, and I emphasize with respect to this matter the statement that this order was made as a substitute for legislation which they could not get from Congress. That is the important point, the vital point, in this whole business.

This bill was introduced in the House of Representatives on the 1st day of December, 1903. It has been pending in Congress until the 28th day of March, with no report from any committee. Every member of the Committee on Pensions knows there will be no report, that there will be no serious effort to pass the bill; and the fact is that the Secretary of the Interior just sent and got a copy of that bill and copied the language of it and made it an Executive order.

I saw published the other day in a newspaper an article by one Private Dalzell, one of the greatest pension heroes in the country, applauding this order and saying, "Hereafter we will not need any pension legislation from the Congress of the United States. Let these bills die. We will never need them any more. We will never have to bother ourselves again by appealing to a stingy Congress to get what we want. The President of the United States has opened for us the doors of the Treasury by breaking down the laws of the land. He has invited us to help ourselves. We do not need to appeal to the lawmakers to get laws. The Executive of the Government can make for us all the law we want." That is the meaning of this order. It is and was intended to be a substitute for legislation which had been sought and could not be had.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I wish to answer in very brief manner the Senator from Tennessee. What the Senator asks is that this particular resolution be referred to a different committee from that to which it would naturally go, and that it be sent to the Judiciary Committee, and his reason for asking that it be sent to that committee is that there are great legal and constitutional questions involved. And yet, if I am to take the argument of the Senator, it would seem that there is no question in his mind about any great legal or constitutional question being involved. It is a very simple proposition, and one that any layman can easily see through.

Mr. CARMACK. But, if the Senator will permit me——

Mr. McCUMBER. With pleasure.

Mr. CARMACK. I find my position promptly controverted by a distinguished lawyer upon the Committee on Pensions. So, while there is no question about it—there is none in my mind, and there is none in his—we think about it in different ways, and so long as there is a doubt upon the question, it being a legal question, I should like to have it decided by a committee of lawyers. The chairman of the Committee on Pensions is himself a very able lawyer, and I know that, but, as he knows, a majority of our committee are not lawyers.

Mr. McCUMBER. And, according to the argument of the Senator, it should be referred to a committee of doctors and not to a committee of lawyers. Whether 62 years of age is an age as to which a legal presumption may be drawn whether a person is capable of performing a full day's work or a full amount of manual labor in a day is a question practically for the physician rather than the lawyer, and that is really the only question there is in this whole matter.

I presume it is safe to say that presumptions make up the great portion of all of our lives and what we do. When a person is 80 years of age, as every man knows—and he knows it as a presumption from facts within his knowledge—he is incapable of performing the same service that he could perform when he was 24 years of age. Courts take judicial notice of that fact. Everybody takes judicial notice of that fact. The Senator himself is forced to take judicial notice of it if he is acting as a judge.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. McCUMBER. With pleasure.

Mr. CARMACK. Is it not also true that when a man is 60 years of age he is not as strong and vigorous as he was at 24?

Mr. McCUMBER. It is a presumption of law that he is not so vigorous as he was at the age of 24, but it is a presumption only, which may be rebutted by proper and competent evidence.

Now, the Senator assumes that the Pension Bureau will, under this provision of law, which simply changes the age from 65 to 62 years, adopt entirely different methods of investigation than what they have had heretofore. What right has the Senator to assume that they would disobey the law any more under this rule than they have disobeyed it in the last ten or fifteen years? Why will he assume that they will disobey that law which he has read, and which reads "each and every infirmity shall be duly considered?"

Now let us take this portion of the law in connection with the ruling itself and see if the rule works any hardship. Let me call the Senator's attention to it:

In the adjudication of pension claims under said act of June 27, 1890, as amended, it shall be taken and considered as an evidential fact—

Evidential only—

if the contrary does not appear, and if all other legal requirements are properly met, that when a claimant has passed the age of 62 years he is disabled one-half in ability to perform manual labor.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. McCUMBER. I will yield in just a moment. Take that in connection with the law itself, which requires them not only to take into consideration the fact of age, but also each and every infirmity in determining whether a person is capable of performing manual labor.

Mr. CARMACK. The Senator is mistaken.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am not at all mistaken.

Mr. CARMACK. Instead of taking into consideration the infirmity, it says that the age itself is an infirmity. It is a substitute for proof of infirmity.

Whereas old age is an infirmity.

The age itself becomes an infirmity under this order, and you do not have to consider any other infirmity.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator can not read it into this order——

Mr. CARMACK. It is in there.

Mr. McCUMBER. That it is to be taken as conclusive evidence? If it was, his position of course would be sound. But age is simply to be taken as prima facie evidence. In other words, after he has shown that he is 65 years of age, that itself may throw upon the Department the burden of proof to show that, notwithstanding the fact he is 65 years of age, he is able to perform that degree of manual labor; and after taking into consideration that which the law compels them to consider—each and every infirmity—in connection with this prima facie rule of evidence, they may then determine whether or not he is capable of performing manual labor.

It has not in the past operated in any sense as a hard and fast rule, and which would grant every ex-soldier a pension. If that were true, then the rules which have been in existence for the last ten or twelve years would have placed upon the pension roll at $6 every ex-soldier 65 years of age. The Senator knows that that is not true. It would have placed upon the pension roll at $12 every man who had reached the age of 75 years. The Senator knows that that is not true; and he knows that we have before our committee hundreds of bills in favor of persons who have reached an age above 65 or above 75, where they could not get the required amount under the rules, because the Department has held that, notwithstanding this presumption, other evidence has shown that the soldier or the claimant was able to perform manual service.

We had before us but the other day, as perhaps the Senator will remember, a case where the gentleman was over 68 years of age, as I remember. He sought to obtain a pension under the act of June 27, 1890. The Department refused to give him over $6, they claiming that, notwithstanding the fact of his age, from other evidence it was proven that he was performing manual service at the time and earning a good salary. These are cases that are before us all the time, and I can certainly see no great danger in changing the rule from 65 to 62.

The Senator quoted the bill which was introduced in the House, which he says was copied by the Department in making this rule. It is a vast difference whether you grant a person of 65 years of age a pension of $6 or whether you say that his age shall be simply prima facie evidence. I think he is entitled to that amount.

I think the Senator will find that instead of the Bureau of Pensions getting their inspiration and their information from this bill which was introduced into Congress, the bill was taken from their rules, with a slight change. That is all. It seems to me, when you take into consideration the fact that the very act under which the pension of 1890 is granted requires the Department to consider every infirmity and every other condition going to show whether or not the claimant is capable of performing manual service, and when we assume, as we have a right to assume, that the officers of the Government will not disobey the plain dictates of that law, that that, taken into consideration in connection with this prima facie rule, is an all-sufficient safeguard against any raid upon the Treasury or any attempt upon the part of the Department to make laws for themselves.

They have a right to make rules, and this Bureau, above any other bureau in the Government, is capable of determining that question. Why? Simply because since 1862 the Bureau have had constantly before them from five to eight hundred thousand cases, and they are able therefore to determine from the evidence that is constantly pouring in upon them what age of a man's life is such as disables him from performing complete manual labor or even partial service. They have reduced it to a science.

Why was this changed? Was it because of this bill? No, Mr. President. Congress has intimated in the act which gave pensions to the soldiers of the war with Mexico that 62 years of age should be considered as a proper age where it could be safely said a man was unable to perform manual labor, at least in full. The Bureau cite that provision of the law. They took the sentiment of Congress, which expressed its own opinion into law, and adopted that as the rule. They have been a little above this before.

They simply reduce it to an opinion that had been expressed into a law by the Congress of the United States. It seems to me that they have not greatly disobeyed the law of the country, nor have they attempted in any way to make any other or new law.

Mr. CARMACK. Has the Senator from North Dakota concluded?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. CARMACK. Has the Senator a copy of the Lochren order?

Mr. McCUMBER. I have it here.

Mr. CARMACK. I should like to see it.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator from Minnesota has it now.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, the Senator from North Dakota said that if I were correct in my construction of the order which has been read, under the previous order fixing the age at 65 and 75, every man of that age would be on the pension roll. In the first place, I have not the slightest doubt in the world that that order has so operated as to place thousands of men on the pension roll who if they had been required to prove their claims would not have been able to do so. My recollection is that that order differs considerably from this, and the whole wording of this order shows that the intent and purpose is to accomplish what was intended to be accomplished by this bill.

Whereas old age is an infirmity, the average nature and extent of which the experience of the Pension Bureau has established with reasonable certainty.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator deny that?

Mr. CARMACK. I do.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator mean to say that old age is not an infirmity?

Mr. CARMACK. I do.

Mr. SPOONER. I am glad to hear it.

Mr. ALDRICH. Although you would want some better evidence?

Mr. CARMACK. I do not know any man who bears his 62 years with more ease and honor than the Senator from Wisconsin, and I offer the honorable Senator as an exhibit to prove that 62 years of age does not constitute infirmity.

Mr. SPOONER. I can testify to the fact that I can not do the manual labor now that I could do ten or fifteen years ago.

Mr. CARMACK. I do not believe the Senator ever could do any manual labor.

Mr. SPOONER. I have done a great deal.

Mr. CARMACK. I can not believe it.

Mr. SPOONER. What?

Mr. CARMACK. I can not believe it.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator does not doubt my word?

Mr. CARMACK. I am compelled to doubt that the Senator could ever have been classed as a manual laborer.

What I was saying is that age may cause infirmity, just as a gunshot wound or an accident of any kind may cause an infirmity, but age itself is not an infirmity. Whether it produces infirmities at any particular time of life depends upon the native vigor of a man's constitution. It must be decided with reference to each particular man.

Mr. SPOONER. I will ask the Senator upon what theory it is that officers of our Army are retired compulsorily at 64?

Mr. ALDRICH. And of the Navy at 62?

Mr. CARMACK. You can make a presumption of law by act of Congress whenever you want to. Of course the law in that case has made a presumption that when a man reaches the age of 64 he does not have the same physical vigor that he formerly had.

Mr. SPOONER. The law has simply taken note of a fact which all men know. That is all.

Mr. CARMACK. That is true at 63 years of age, it is true at 62 years of age, it is true at 61 years of age; but when you come to make laws about it, the law has to fix some particular time, and there is no particular lapse of time which constitutes in every particular case a disability that would entitle a man to a pension.

Mr. SPOONER. It seems to me, if the Senator will permit me a moment, that the trouble with his argument is that it does not distinguish between a law and a rule of evidence justifiably adopted in the administration of the law.

Mr. CARMACK. Yes, I am trying to distinguish between them. I say that this law lays down the rule of evidence when it says you can establish it by proof, by due proof, and by considering each and every infirmity and by rating the aggregate of those infirmities. That is the way you have to do it. The law says how it shall be proven and how it shall be established, and you can not obey that law by a presumption that dispenses with the taking of evidence and making the proof.

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. CARMACK. I was trying by the language of the "whereases" to this order to show its purpose, and I should like to complete that.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is just the point on which I was about to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. CARMACK. Very well.

Mr. McCUMBER. I want to ask the Senator what difference it makes whether or not it regards old age as an infirmity? Is not the spirit of the law such that it is intended to take care of every man who is unable to perform manual labor, and therefore——

Mr. CARMACK. Upon making proof of that fact.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; but whether it is by reason of old age or any other infirmity.

Mr. CARMACK. Of course, but let the fact be proved. He must prove the fact; the law says so expressly. He must make due proof, and the burden of proof is upon him, and it must be proven by showing each and every infirmity that afflicts him, and the aggregate of those infirmities must be rated. The burden of proof is put upon him in the law, and you violate the law when you shift the burden of proof from the claimant to the Government.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. CARMACK. In a moment, if the Senator pleases.

Whereas old age is an infirmity, the average nature and extent of which the experience of the Pension Bureau has established with reasonable certainty; and

Whereas by act of Congress in 1887, when thirty-nine years had elapsed after the Mexican war, all soldiers of said war who were over 62 years of age were placed on the pension roll—

Citing the law passed by Congress—

Whereas thirty-nine years will have elapsed on April 13, 1904, since the civil war, and there are many survivors over 62 years of age.

The very purpose of this order, as shown in the "whereases" which precede it, is to put every man who is 62 years of age on the pension roll, because every man in the Army in the war with Mexico, after thirty-nine years had elapsed and who was 62 years of age, was placed on the pension roll. What is the object in citing past legislation if it is not to accomplish the purpose with respect to the veterans of the Union Army that was accomplished by law with reference to the veterans of the Mexican war?

And, whereas old age is an infirmity—

Why, Mr. President, age is considered in itself an infirmity, whether any other infirmity is proven at all or not. It is presumed to be an infirmity—if the contrary does not appear.

The Government itself by a preponderance of proof must establish the fact that the man is sound, that he has no infirmity, when the law expressly requires that the claimant himself shall prove the fact of his infirmity to such an extent as to entitle him to a pension.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I have been waiting before investigating this question until we have a response to the resolution which the Senate some days ago adopted calling for information in regard to the same. The Senator has therefore precipitated a discussion that I confess at the outset I am not fully prepared to engage in satisfactorily. And yet during the few minutes this debate has been in progress I have looked over this order, which I saw but once before, and that was when I read it in the newspapers at the time it was promulgated; and I have been also during these few minutes not only looking at the order, but looking up the statutes, or rather the statute that the order has special reference to—the statute of June 27, 1890.

Now, putting the order, with the practice as I understand it has been heretofore, and the law together, I do not see anything unusual about it. I do not see anything extraordinary about it. I do not see anything in it to condemn or to criticise. I see nothing that is not commendable. I see nothing that I can not heartily and in good conscience thoroughly approve and support.

This is an order issued by the Secretary of the Interior, or rather with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, for the order is issued by the Commissioner of Pensions. The question is whether or not the Commissioner of Pensions had a right to issue such an order, and then, if so, whether or not, being within his authority, if it should so appear, it is a proper order for him to have issued, looking to the execution of the law that he was charged with the execution of.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to suggest to him that it does not seem to me it is a question of the propriety of the order; that is to say, the question is not presented whether, having the authority, he ought to have made this order, but it is simply, Did he have the authority to make the order?

Mr. ALDRICH. I understood the Senator from Tennessee to take a different position. I may have misunderstood him, but I understood him to take the position that as a matter of policy no such order should have been issued.

Mr. CARMACK. I did not do anything of the kind. I said nothing about a matter of policy.

Mr. TELLER. I was interrupting the Senator from Ohio. I will wait, however.

Mr. FORAKER. I am obliged to the Senator from Colorado for interrupting me and making his suggestion. I have no purpose except only to get at the right of this matter.

It is an order, therefore, issued by the Commissioner of Pensions, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. So far as anything on the face of things is concerned there is nothing showing that the President—and about that a good deal has been said—had anything to do with it. However, from what I know of the President and his familiarity with all that is done in connection with his Administration and by his Cabinet officers, I have no doubt but that if he knew about it he thoroughly approved it, as I hope he may have done.

But let us look now at the statute first, for that is the beginning of this whole matter. In the second section of the act of June 27, 1890, it is provided as follows:

SEC. 2. That all persons who served ninety days or more in the military or naval service of the United States during the late war of the rebellion and who have been honorably discharged therefrom, and who are now or who may hereafter be suffering from a mental or physical disability of a permanent character, not the result of their own vicious habits, which incapacitates them from the performance of manual labor in such a degree as to render them unable to earn a support, shall, upon making due proof of the fact according to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may provide, be placed upon the list of invalid pensioners of the United States—

Now, note this language—

upon making due proof of the fact according to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may provide.

Mr. CARMACK. Will the Senator from Ohio yield to me for a moment?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. CARMACK. I wish to suggest to the Senator that the right to make rules and regulations can not dispense with the necessity of making due proof of the fact.

Mr. FORAKER. I was about to say that the Senator has anticipated what I was going to say, but he has not, because he has said something other than what was in my mind. He interrupted me just where I was going to say the kernel of this whole thing is. The applicant is to make proof of his infirmity or his disability, it is true, and he is to make "due proof" of it, but how? How is he to make due proof? He is to make due proof of his inability, his incapacity, to use the language of the statute, "according to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may provide."

Therefore, Mr. President, we start out with the proposition as a basis of all, as coming first and as controlling, that the Secretary of the Interior has been given by this statute authority to provide rules and regulations governing the production of proof by the claimant for a pension.

Mr. CARMACK. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. CARMACK. The law also provides that in ascertaining such infirmity each and every infirmity shall be duly considered.

Mr. FORAKER. That is true.

Mr. CARMACK. He can not dispense with that. He must consider each and every infirmity.

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly; and therefore it is that the Secretary of the Interior can not in an observance of the law dispense with a consideration of the infirmity of old age. That lies at the basis of it all.

Now, if the Senator will allow me to pursue for a minute what I had in my mind, he will see the view I take of it. It is that every man within the definition of this statute shall be entitled to a pension when he makes due proof of his incapacity in accordance with the rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior. Therefore it was competent for the Secretary of the Interior, if there had been nothing else in this statute, to prescribe in what mode proof should be made, to define how this, that, or the other incapacity or disability should be proven to the satisfaction of the Pension Bureau.

He has, in the execution of that authority so given him, prescribed a rule or regulation by the issuing of this order for proof as to an acknowledged infirmity or incapacity, namely, old age. What does he say in his order? The Secretary of the Interior says:

Whereas the act of June 27, 1890, as amended, provides that a claimant shall "be entitled to receive a pension not exceeding $12 per month and not less than $6 per month, proportioned to the degree of inability to earn a support, and in determining such inability each and every infirmity shall be duly considered, and the aggregate of the disabilities shown to be rated."

Now, stopping there a minute—and I stop there not only because it is proper to do so, having in mind what I desire to say, but because it is especially proper to do so in view of the interruption of the Senator from Tennessee, calling my attention to the fact that the law requires the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of Pensions to take into consideration each and every inability or incapacity on which the applicant for a pension may rely for the pension he is claiming to get——

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. FORAKER. I ask the Senator to wait just a moment.

It is the duty of the Commissioner of Pensions to do that, and it is the duty of the Commissioner of Pensions to prescribe rules and regulations with reference to the rating to be made as to the disability, which may be on this, that, or any other physical account that you may see fit to name.

Now, is it true or not that old age is an inability or an incapacity? The authority for taking that view was stated in this order. Let me read the second paragraph:

And whereas old age is an infirmity, the average nature and extent of which the experience of the Pension Bureau has established with reasonable certainty.

If it be true that old age is an infirmity—and who will dispute it?—who but the Senator from Tennessee?——

Mr. OVERMAN. Will the Senator from Ohio yield to me for a moment?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. Old age is an infirmity now. Was it not an infirmity in 1891?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. This law was passed in 1890. I understand the Senator to say that this was a proper order and that it should have been made. Does not the Senator think it a very remarkable fact that the Department should wait fourteen years before making this order, especially since there were two service-pension bills before the Senate Committee on Pensions and also one in the other House before the Committee on Invalid Pensions?

Mr. FORAKER. I do not understand that they did wait. I do not know what the exact fact is, and therefore I am somewhat loath to make any statement about it; but I understand that shortly after this law went into effect, while Mr. Cleveland was President, his Commissioner of Pensions, Judge Lochren, who everybody knows was a very able man, however we might differ with him about politics, and not a very popular man with pensioners, either, as the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] has just suggested, but a man of ability, a man who knew what he was doing——

Mr. ALDRICH. Now a judge of a United States court.

Mr. FORAKER. Exactly. He is now a judge of a United States court.

Mr. BAILEY. He was overruled by the Supreme Court.

Mr. FORAKER. It is not the first time that a judge of a lower court has been overruled by the Supreme Court. But, Mr. President, my understanding is that Judge Lochren within a year, or two years perhaps it was—I will have the order presently; I have sent for it—issued an order similar to this in character, prescribing that when they came to consider the disability or incapacity of an applicant for a pension under this statute they should take into consideration his age, and there should be attached to that fact, whether his age was 62 or 65 or 75, according as the order may show when we get it, there should be a certain rating made; in other words, that the disability of old age, which the statute required him to take into consideration, should have its rating and he should prescribe how, when the applicant came to make due proof, he should set forth his different incapacities and establish them all to the satisfaction of the Pension Bureau.

But let me recur to what I was about to say. Is it true or not, as recited in this order, that old age has been shown by the experience of the Pension Bureau to carry with it a disability, and of a character well known to them—established, in the language of this order, to a reasonable certainty?

Mr. OVERMAN. Do I understand the Senator to say that Judge Lochren fixed the age at 65?

Mr. FORAKER. I do not know at what age he fixed it. I say I am loath to speak of that because I have not seen the order. I have sent for it. I suppose all this should have been sent to us before now.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Twelve dollars at 75.

Mr. FORAKER. Twelve dollars at 75.

Mr. GALLINGER. Six dollars at 65.

Mr. FORAKER. Six dollars at 65.

Mr. MALLORY. I do not know that Judge Lochren issued that order, but there was such an order issued, and it has been in force for a number of years.

Mr. FORAKER. I understand so, and I understand also that it has never before been criticised; that is to say, it has never before been criticised that the Pension Bureau should, in considering due proof and in establishing rules and regulations for the production of the same, consider old age, but, on the contrary, they have always taken age into consideration and a rating has been given on account of it.

Now, I want to read the balance of this order to show——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio will suspend for one moment while the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 1508) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection thereon of a public building to be used for a Department of State, a Department of Justice, and a Department of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest that the unfinished business be laid aside temporarily in order that this matter may be disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the pending resolution.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President——

Mr. ALDRICH. If it will be in order now, I ask that the Senator from Ohio be permitted to finish his remarks.

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly. I was about to ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Ohio may have the opportunity to conclude his remarks. I understand that the resolution goes over at 2 o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Ohio will proceed.

Mr. FORAKER. I am very much obliged to the Senators for giving me permission to proceed.

Mr. CARMACK. Other Senators may want to speak.

Mr. FORAKER. I was saying, when I was interrupted in order that the unfinished business might be laid before the Senate, that old age has always been regarded as carrying with it a disability or an infirmity or an incapacity, whatever you may see fit to call it. I call it an incapacity, because that is the language employed in the statute and by the Pension Bureau. First, however, that is evidenced, as the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] suggested a while ago, by many acts of Congress, but particularly by that one providing for the retirement of army officers at the age of 64—a compulsory retirement at that age. Why? A man is not necessarily an unfit man to continue in the Army after 64 years of age—I mean physically unfit. Many men are hale, strong, and vigorous, and capable of rendering efficient service as officers and soldiers long after the age of 64, but the rule is according to human experience that when a man reaches the age of 64 he has been so far affected physically by his age that it is time for him to retire from the duties of a commissioned officer in the Army.

A great many other instances might be suggested, but it is shown on the face of this order that age affects the physical condition of a man, so that it should be taken into consideration as prima facie an evidence of partial incapacity. It is shown on the face of this order that Judge Lochren made a similar order proceeding upon that very theory in 1893, which is the date, I am told, when that order was issued. I say that, however, without having the order before me.

Mr. MALLORY. Will the Senator from Ohio permit me?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. MALLORY. I have endeavored to obtain a copy of the order which the Senator says was made by Judge Lochren, but I have not succeeded in getting it. I sent this morning to get it. But I understand from authority which I believe to be good that that order fixed or limited the total disability at 75 years, and the minimum disability, or one-half disability, entitling one to $6, at 65. The point I wish to inquire about is, Why is it and how is it, that having been established as the rule, that that rule should be arbitrarily changed so as to make 70 the limit of total disability and 62 the minimum limit?

Mr. FORAKER. I am going to speak of that in a moment. I want to say that whenever that order was made by Judge Lochren he fixed a minimum age when disability on account of age should be taken into consideration, and that a minimum rating should then be given for it; and he fixed a maximum. In doing that he was sustained not only by our law in regard to the retirement of commissioned officers, but he was also sustained in that by the declaration of Congress with respect to pensioners of the Mexican war, for the Congress of the United States has fixed 62 by the act referred to as the age when the minimum should be allowed on account of age to the pensioners of the Mexican war. Therefore there was not anything out of the ordinary in the action of Judge Lochren in that respect. I do not know what his order is. I was about to speak of it from the knowledge that had been given to me. I will, however, confine myself to this order, and then I will be safe.

I am told that this order follows in that respect the order of Judge Lochren. In this order it is not provided that when a man reaches the age of 62 years he shall have $6 a month pension, or that he shall at the age of 65 have $8, or that at 70 years of age he shall have the full pension of $12. That is not the provision of the order. The provision of the order is simply that when it is shown that the applicant has reached the age of 62 years that shall be an evidential fact. Now, what is meant by an evidential fact? It simply means that that fact shall be taken into consideration. If it be shown that that man, although he has reached 62 years of age, is not dependent, and that he has no disabilities or is not dependent, he is not entitled to a pension because of his 62 years of age, but it shifts the burden of proof; that is all.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. I do not know exactly what this order means. Does the Senator understand that under it a man reaching the age of 62 is put upon the pension roll without any proof of any other disability?

Mr. FORAKER. No; I understand that when a man is an applicant for a pension undert he act of June 27, 1890, known as the "dependent pension law," he must of course make due proof. That is what the statute requires.

Mr. ALDRICH. Of dependency.

Mr. FORAKER. Of dependency; and then, if all the other conditions of the statute entitling him to a pension are established, the fact that he has reached the age of 62 shall be an evidential fact to be taken into consideration, and if he were to stop there and no proof be offered on the other side, all other conditions having been established, he would be entitled to a rating at $6.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to say to the Senator that I understand under that act he has to prove his poverty, to begin with.

Mr. FORAKER. Yes.

Mr. TELLER. And then, in addition to that, he has to prove inability to secure a living by manual labor.

Mr. FORAKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. TELLER. Now, if this order only means that you shall take into consideration with that fact the fact that he is 62 years of age, that has been the law ever since I have known anything about pensions.

Mr. FORAKER. I think it has always been the law.

Mr. TELLER. It has always been the law that when you considered the disabilities you might consider with other disabilities his age.

Mr. FORAKER. Yes.

Mr. TELLER. I do not know that up to Judge Lochren's order there was ever any positive statement of what the disability should be; but if he was 62 years old, at any time since I have known anything about it, that would be considered in addition to his other disabilities, because the age itself might increase his disabilities, when, in the case a young man, his disabilities would be, I think, less considered.

Mr. FORAKER. I am sure the Senator from Colorado is right in saying that that has always been the practice; that is to say, they would take into consideration age, and they would assume that age carried with it disabilities.

Now, the real question, it seems to me, left here for us to consider is the one asked by the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY] when he interrupted me a moment ago, and that is, why should the minimum age carrying the minimum allowance of pension be reduced from 65 years, where Judge Lochren put it, to 62 years? Now, I do not know. I can only speculate about that. I have not been taken into anybody's confidence in regard to it.

I only assume, Mr. President, for reasons that were stated at the time when that order was promulgated and published in the papers—the reasons I read in the newspapers—that the Commissioner of Pensions, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, and with the approval, I hope, of the President of the United States, concluded that a man ought to have—and that the experience of the Pension Bureau showed it—the minimum of $6, all other conditions precedent having been first established, when he reached the age of 62 years. That was the age fixed for the veterans of the Mexican war, and it is the age fixed when a man may be retired by order of the President from a position as an officer in the Army.

It does not seem to me anything extraordinary that the administration of the Pension Bureau, looking to what is fair, what is just, and what is equitable, in view of the spirit and purpose of our pension laws, should give the benefit of the minimum allowance of $6 a month to the soldier who reaches the age of 62 years. It was stated——

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President——

Mr. FORAKER. Just a moment. It was stated, as I remember—I am quoting only from recollection—that there will be a great saving to the Department, and not a very great increase in the aggregate of expenditures on account of pensions.

Mr. CARMACK. How will there be a saving?

Mr. FORAKER. It was stated that there would be a saving. I do not know upon what authority the statement was made, but I saw in the papers that there would be a saving in the administration of the pension laws of no less than $300,000 on account of this order.

Mr. CARMACK. That is a very important question, Mr. President. In what way will that saving be made?

Mr. FORAKER. What does the Senator say?

Mr. CARMACK. I say it is a very important question as to how the saving will be made.

Mr. FORAKER. It does away to some extent with the necessity for agents to gather testimony and investigate cases.

Mr. CARMACK. Exactly. That is the very point I was making. It dispenses with the taking of testimony to prove a fact required by law to be proven.

Mr. FORAKER. No; the Senator insists that we are dispensing with the requirement of the law as to the necessity of testimony to prove certain facts. We are not doing that at all. Every condition that the law prescribes as necessary to entitle a man to a pension under this act must be shown to exist in his favor—every one—after this order, as well as before.

Mr. CARMACK. Why was it issued, then?

Mr. FORAKER. This order is made in accordance with the statute, which says that the Commissioner shall prescribe rules and regulat ons governing the making of proof. The only thing it does is to say, when this age that is mentioned shall be shown in the soldier's favor, it shall be prima facie evidence that he is entitled to a pension at a certain rate.

Mr. MALLORY. As the Senator is discussing that point, I should like to ask him for information if the recent order does not provide that the order itself shall not be retroactive?

Mr. FORAKER. Yes; I believe so.

Mr. MALLORY. Would not that work an injustice to men who, say, two years ago, were 62 years of age, and had made application for a pension?

Mr. FORAKER. As the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] suggests, I will say in answer to the Senator from Florida that these other cases have been adjudicated. The pensioners in those cases made application in accordance with the law which then existed, and in accordance with the rules and regulations as to the making of proofs then in existence; and now it is no injustice, as I understand it, because those soldiers were unable before the order was issued to prove what this order says you do not need to offer any proof upon.

Mr. MALLORY. I am speaking of the case of a man who was 62 years of age and made application, and because of his not showing any permanent disability was turned down. Now, this order fixes the minimum one-half disability at 62 years of age; and I have no doubt that that would be so construed. Would not that man have been entitled, if the order had been issued two years ago, to his pension?

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator's suggestion amounts to an argument that this order ought to have been made sooner than it was made, and I quite agree with him.

Mr. MALLORY. I do not contend that at all, but I wish to call the Senator's attention to the fact that injustice is apparently being done to a certain portion of those applicants who were turned down because they were simply 62 years of age and no more.

Mr. FORAKER. The man who was turned down before this order was made for the reason suggested by the Senator was unfortunate, of course, in not having the benefit of this order, and only Congress, I imagine, can correct that trouble. If the Senator will bear with me, that man is not without hope. The way is open. He can make his application again, and he can now have the benefit of his age, which he could not have before.

Mr. MALLORY. If the Senator will permit me, the only hope he has is that the Department can not be prevented from giving a pension, in my judgment, because we have a statute which gives him the right to come in now and get a pension and to date back to the time when he made his application.

Mr. FORAKER. Undoubtedly the man who has been denied the benefit of this order heretofore because there was then no such order can now, if he becomes an applicant, get the benefit of it. And to what extent does he get it? He gets the benefit of it to the extent that he has a prima facie case in his favor whenever he shows that his age is within the prescribed limit, and if he should apply now, being 65 years old and showing that fact, he would be entitled to $8, the conditions essential to his being granted a pension having been established, provided nobody controverted the fact that his age had carried with it incapacity.

Now, I have before me, kindly furnished by the Senator from Wisconsin, what I understand is a copy of the Lochren order, and I will read it in order that all may get the benefit of having it in the RECORD.

Mr. TELLER. What is the date?

Mr. FORAKER. I will read it all.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
BUREAU OF PENSIONS,
Washington, D. C., March 29, 1894.

To the board of revision:

By order of the Commissioner, the rate now received under the act of June 27, 1890, will be continued by the board of revision in cases wherein it appears that the pensioner has reached the age of 65 years.

J. R. VAN MATER,
Acting Chief Board of Revision.

Indorsement.

MARCH 29, 1894.

Respectfully referred to Doctor Featherstonhaugh, medical referee. The inclosed instructions were given to the board of revision to-day. If the medical division will return any cases referred by us where the pensioner is 65 years of age, they will be acted on here.

J. R. VAN MATER,
Acting Chief Board of Revision.

I get that from the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER]. I do not know where he got it. It seems to be a copy, but I understand there was a formal order issued by Judge Lochren as Commissioner of Pensions. Whether there was or not I shall know about definitely pretty soon, as I have sent to ascertain the fact.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator from Ohio will permit me——

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was not in the Chamber during the early stage of this debate, and I observe with a good deal of surprise the opposition that has developed in certain quarters to this order. It is a fact that in the administration of the Pension Bureau a good deal of elasticity has always been allowed in the matter of granting pensions under the act of June 27, 1890. I want to cite one illustration of what I have suggested. The Senator will observe, if he looks at the act, that widows were allowed pensions at the rate of $8 per month if they had no income outside of manual labor, but a very distinguished Democratic Commissioner of Pensions, General Black, thought that that was too restrictive, because it would in almost every case deny pensions to widows. So he issued an order, which became operative, and I think never was criticised, that a widow might have an income outside of manual labor to the amount of $250 per annum. Subsequent to that——

Mr. COCKRELL. Was it not $200?

Mr. GALLINGER. Two hundred and fifty dollars, according to General Black's order.

Mr. COCKRELL. I thought it was first $200; that it was afterwards changed to $250, and subsequently reduced to $100.

Mr. GALLINGER. It was $250, I think.

Mr. NELSON. It was $100 at one time.

Mr. GALLINGER. When I get through my statement, the Senator will observe that I was about to make that remark.

Subsequent to that time a Republican Commissioner of Pensions, Mr. Evans, reduced the amount to $100 per annum; but in neither case was there law for that order. It never was criticised, so far as I know. The Grand Army of the Republic took up the matter, contending that $100 per annum was too small an amount. They came to Congress and asked that we should enact a statute fixing the amount at $250, which we did; and now that amount is allowed by law.

But what I wanted to say was that in the administration of this law, which is somewhat peculiar, the Commissioner of Pensions has always felt that he had some latitude in determining the details. He has done certain things which, perhaps, might be criticised under strict law, but which, as a matter of fact, have always been allowed to go unchallenged.

In the present instance it is a fact that the principle has been recognized and has gone along unchallenged. It has simply been changed by the present Commissioner so far as ages are concerned, and it seems to me that any attack that is made upon his action in that respect will not be successful.

Mr. FORAKER. I think not.

But I was coming to a more complete answer to the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY], who made a very pertinent inquiry in that respect as to why the age should be reduced, and I was trying to give some reasons why the Commissioner of Pensions might have done so. So I want to call attention to the act of Congress itself in respect to the Mexican veterans, where the age at which they should have the benefit of the pension law was fixed at 62 years. I have that statute before me. It was enacted January 29, 1887, and is entitled "An act granting pensions to the soldiers and sailors of the Mexican war, and for other purposes." In a proviso following that I find this language:

Provided, That every such officer, enlisted man, or widow who is or may become 62 years of age, or who is or may become subject to any disability or dependency equivalent to some cause prescribed or recognized by the pension laws of the United States as a sufficient reason for the allowance of a pension, shall be entitled to the benefits of this act.

Now, I call attention to the fact that that law enacted by Congress was wholly different from this order of the Commissioner of Pensions in this, that it was sufficient under that law for the soldier to show that he had reached the age of 62 years to entitle him absolutely to his pension, while under the order made by the Commissioner of Pensions the fact that he is 62 years of age is merely an "evidential fact." That is the same as making that fact sufficient to create a prima facie case. I may be going too far in giving it that effect, but certainly it is no more.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me a moment——

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. Upon what conceivable theory could Congress have fixed 62 years as the age, except upon the theory that a person who has served in the Army and arrived at that age would need a pension because of the disability of age?

Mr. FORAKER. It is arbitrary, of course, but it is based, as I tried to show a moment ago, on human experience, and this order of the Commissioner of Pensions is not only based upon human experience, as the act of Congress was, but the Commissioner of Pensions recites that it is based on the experience of the Pension Bureau, which is certainly wide enough and broad enough and extended enough to justify them in fixing a rating for a particular age.

Mr. SPOONER. While the act of Congress made the presumption of disability arising from age conclusive, under the order it is only evidential.

Mr. FORAKER. It is only evidential. The pensioner will have the benefit of that fact, and he shall be rated in accordance with it as prescribed by the Commissioner, provided everything else is proven in his favor, and not otherwise.

Therefore I repeat, as I said in commencing, that I do not see anything extraordinary in this order. On the contrary, I think it a wise and a proper order to be made, and I rejoice that it was made. I think the Secretary of the Interior, the Commissioner of Pensions, the President, and all who had to do therewith are entitled to credit instead of to criticism.

I ask that the order which has given rise to this debate may be inserted in the RECORD in connection with my remarks, so that we may have the benefit of it when we want to refer to it again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request? The Chair hears none, and that order is made.

The order referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF PENSIONS,
March 15, 1904.

Order No. ——.

Whereas the act of June 27, 1890, as amended provides that a claimant shall "be entitled to receive a pension not exceeding $12 per month and not less than $6 per month proportioned to the degree of inability to earn a support, and in determining such inability each and every infirmity shall be duly considered and the aggregate of the disabilities shown to be rated;" and

Whereas old age is an infirmity the average nature and extent of which the experience of the Pension Bureau has established with reasonable certainty; and

Whereas by act of Congress in 1887, when thirty-nine years had elapsed after the Mexican war, all soldiers of said war who were over 62 years of age were placed on the pension roll; and

Whereas thirty-nine years will have elapsed on April 13, 1904, since the civil war, and there are many survivors over 62 years of age:

Now, therefore,

Ordered, (1) In the adjudication of pension claims under said act of June 27, 1890, as amended, it shall be taken and considered as an evidential fact, if the contrary does not appear, and if all other legal requirements are properly met, that when a claimant has passed the age of 62 years he is disabled one-half in ability to perform manual labor and is entitled to be rated at $6 per month; after 65 years, at $8 per month; after 68 years, at $10 per month, and after 70 years, at $12 per month.

(2) Allowance at higher rate, not exceeding $12 per month, will continue to be made as heretofore, where disabilities other than age show a condition of inability to perform manual labor.

(3) This order shall take effect April 13, 1904, and shall not be deemed retroactive. The former rules of the office fixing the minimum and maximum at 65 years and 75 years, respectively, are hereby modified as above.

E. F. WARE, Commissioner of Pensions.

Approved.

E. A. HITCHCOCK, Secretary.

Mr. ALLISON. I now ask, Mr. President——

Mr. CARMACK. Before the Senator from Iowa proceeds, I merely want to ask that this matter go over without losing its place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator desires the resolution to lie on the table subject to call?

Mr. CARMACK. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order is made.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the unfinished business may be further temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside in order that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12833) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 68, line 20, before the word "thousand," to insert "and fifteen;" so as to make the clause read:

For continuing erection of a workhouse for males, $50,000; and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized to enter into contract for the whole work at a cost not to exceed $115,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 69, line 3, before the word "thousand," to insert "and twenty-five;" so as to make the clause read:

Toward the erection of a municipal almshouse, including water supply, heating, ventilating, and lighting apparatus, $50,000; and the total cost of said almshouse, including water supply, heating, ventilating, and lighting apparatus, under a contract or contracts, which are hereby authorized therefor, shall not exceed $125,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 69, after line 3, to insert:

For purchase and installation of laundry machinery, $3,750.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 70, line 19, to increase the appropriation for the salary of the superintendent of the Reform School for Girls from $1,000 to $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 70, line 22, to increase the appropriation for salaries of five teachers of industries from $420 each to $480.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 71, line 1, to increase the appropriation for the Reform School for Girls from $7,905 to $8,405.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. At the end of the appropriations for the Reform School, on page 71, line 9, I move to strike out the total, "$17,905," and insert "$18,405."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Medical charities," on page 71, after line 20, to insert:

For rent of hospital buildings and grounds, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 72, line 3, to increase the total appropriation for the maintenance of the Freedmen's Hospital and Asylum from $50,000 to $54,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 72, after line 7, to insert:

For minor repairs to the Columbia Hospital for Women and Lying-in Asylum, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 72, line 12, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twelve" and insert "fifteen;" so as to make the clause read:

For the care and treatment of indigent patients, under a contract to be made with the Children's Hospital by the Board of Charities, not to exceed $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 72, after line 17, to insert:

For the construction of the east wing of the National Homeopathic Hospital, under the direction of the Commissioners of the District, $25,000; and the total cost of said east wing, under a contract which is hereby authorized therefor, shall not exceed $50,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to modify the amendment by striking out "east" and inserting "south" in line 18 and line 20 of the amendment; so as to read in each case "the south wing."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 73, line 6, to increase the appropriation for maintenance of the Washington Home for Incurables from $2,000 to $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Child-caring institutions," on page 73, line 14, to increase the appropriation for the expenses of the Board of Children's Guardians from $10,000 to $11,700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 73, line 21, before the word "dollars," to insert "two hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

For board and care of all children committed to the guardianship of said Board by the courts of the District, and for the temporary care of children pending investigation or while being transferred from place to place, with authority to pay not more than $1,200 to institutions adjudged to be under sectarian control and not more than $300 for burial of children dying while under charge of the Board, $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 74, line 2, to increase the appropriation for the maintenance of the Board of Children's Guardians from $62,000 to $63,700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 74, after line 2, to insert:

The Board of Children's Guardians is hereby directed to contract for the care and maintenance of sixty wards of the Board at the Hart Farm School at the rate of $200 per annum each, and for this purpose the sum of $12,000 is hereby appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 74, after line 7, to insert:

To enable the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to procure a plan or plans for a plain, substantial building or buildings for an industrial home school for colored children, to cost not to exceed $100,000 and to be located on the ground purchased for a municipal almshouse under the provisions of the District of Columbia appropriation act approved March 1, 1901, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Temporary homes," on page 75, line 12, to increase the appropriation for the maintenance of municipal lodging house and wood and stone yard, including rent, from $4,000 to $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 75, after line 23, to insert:

For the Columbia Polytechnic Institute for the Blind, to be used for the instruction and employment of the indigent blind who are actual residents of the District of Columbia, and for the purchase and repair of machinery and tools, $2,500, to be expended under the direction of the Commissioners of the District.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 77, line 6, after the word "officer," to insert:

and shall perform their duties under the direction of the health officer in accordance with rules formulated by him and approved by the Commissioners.

So as to make the clause read:

Relief of the poor: For relief of the poor, including pay of physicians to the poor, who shall be appointed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia on the recommendation of the health officer, and shall perform their duties under the direction of the health officer in accordance with rules formulated by him and approved by the Commissioners, $13,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Militia of the District of Columbia," on page 77, line 14, after the words "commanding general," to insert:

who is hereby authorized and empowered to make necessary contracts and leases.

So as to make the clause read:

For the following, to be expended under the authority of the commanding general, who is hereby authorized and empowered to make necessary contracts and leases, and to be accounted for in like manner as the appropriations disbursed for pay of troops, namely, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 78, line 2, to increase the appropriation for cleaning and repairing uniforms, arms and equipments, and contingent expenses from $750 to $1,250.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I wish to offer an amendment, to come in on page 81, at the end of line 11.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the unanimous-consent agreement that is not in order. When the committee amendments are disposed of, the bill will still be open to amendment.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Very well.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, on Saturday the Committee of the Whole passed over several amendments beginning on page 60. I ask that they may be now considered.

Mr. STEWART. Those amendments relate to the health department?

Mr. ALLISON. They are under the health department. All the paragraphs were passed over beginning on page 60 down to and including line 22 on page 62.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment on page 60, line 4, increasing the number of sanitary and food inspectors from six to thirteen.

Mr. STEWART. Of course the amendments of the committee have preference, but I should like to present an amendment right here, if the Senator from Iowa will allow me.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator will allow the committee amendments to be first considered.

Mr. STEWART. Then that disposes of the whole question.

Mr. ALLISON. Well, Mr. President, I have had an opportunity of looking at the amendment of the Senator from Nevada, and if he offers it I shall be obliged to make a point of order upon it that it is general legislation.

Mr. STEWART. Suppose I offer it as an amendment to your amendment. Will you make the point of order then? Will you allow a vote to be taken upon it?

Mr. ALLISON. I will consider that later, but I think not. Will the Senator allow me to offer the amendments which I intend to propose to the health department provisions and let the amendment now under consideration be passed over for the time being? I have some other amendments which I should like to offer.

Mr. STEWART. In regard to the health department?

Mr. ALLISON. The amendment now under consideration is the amendment of the committee, on page 60, line 4, increasing the number of sanitary and food inspectors from six to thirteen. I ask that that amendment may be passed over for the moment, until we have considered some other amendments which the committee would like to offer.

Mr. STEWART. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment on page 60, line 4, will be passed over for the present.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 60, line 7, I move to strike out "one thousand eight hundred" and insert "two thousand."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 60, line 7, after the word "chemist," it is proposed to strike out "one thousand eight hundred" and insert "two thousand;" so as to read:

Sanitary and food inspector, who shall also inspect dairy products and shall be a practical chemist, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 60, line 20, after the word "dollars," it is proposed to strike out—seven sanitary and food inspectors, two of whom shall be veterinary surgeons, to assist in the enforcement of the milk and pure-food laws, and the regulations relating thereto, at $900 each.

And insert in lieu thereof the following:

Four sanitary and food inspectors, who shall be veterinary surgeons, at $1,200 each, and three sanitary and food inspectors at $900 each, to assist in the enforcement of the milk and pure-food laws, and the regulations relating thereto.

Mr. SPOONER obtained the floor.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President——

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator want me to yield to him?

Mr. STEWART. Yes; before that amendment is acted upon.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator will pardon me for just a moment, I want to say that I have been looking somewhat into this matter of meat and food inspection, and I find that there are from 800 to a thousand places in the city where meat, oysters, and other foods are disposed of. There are but three inspectors to do the work of inspecting those places. It is absolutely impossible—and it needs no argument to establish the fact—that three inspectors should be able to do that work, and do it faithfully and systematically. I am informed that two additional inspectors are very much needed for that purpose. Has the Senator from Iowa any objection to providing for them?

Mr. ALLISON. I shall not object to the amendment suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin, but the adoption of his amendment would require the amendment of the committee to be amended on page 60, line 4, by inserting "fifteen" instead of "thirteen."

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I want to be heard.

Mr. SPOONER. Has the Senator any objection to my amendment?

Mr. STEWART. No.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator's amendment would be a substitute for this, anyhow. Let this amendment be perfected before he offers his amendment. It will not take the place of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nevada propose to offer a substitute for this amendment?

Mr. SPOONER. Let us first perfect this amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is why the Chair asked the Senator from Nevada if he proposed a substitute.

Mr. STEWART. I propose to cover the ground there with an amendment that will make it coherent and have some significance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] which has been read. Does the Senator from Wisconsin propose to amend that amendment?

Mr. SPOONER. No.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in after the word "dollars," in line 24, on page 60.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 60, at the end of line 24, after the word "dollars," it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That no officer or employee of the health department shall, during his continuance in office, serve in his private capacity for fee, gift, or reward any person licensed to keep or maintain a dairy or dairy farm in said District, or to bring or to send milk into said District, or any person who has applied or is about to apply for such license, or any manufacturer or dealer in foods, drugs, disinfectants, or similar materials.

Mr. STEWART. Whose amendment is that? Is that yours?

Mr. ALLISON. I offered the amendment.

Mr. STEWART. I object to it as being general legislation, and raise the point of order on it.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand it is a limitation on this appropriation, but if the Senator objects to it, and it is general legislation, I will modify it by saying that "no part of this appropriation shall be used by any"——

Mr. STEWART. I will modify mine in the same way.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not think it is general legislation as it stands. I think it is a limitation requiring these people to perform work for the Government only.

Mr. STEWART. I say this, that if the Senator gave notice he was going to object to mine as general legislation, his is equally so. I do not think it ought to be objected to on that ground. Something ought to go into this bill that will be effective this year and mitigate the now glaring evils.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. STEWART. That is good.

Mr. ALLISON. That is very good.

Mr. STEWART. Then he will overrule the point of order on my amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. I do not want to have it so that I can not amend the provision.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there any further committee amendments?

Mr. ALLISON. Now I propose that we shall return to line 4, as I understand the Senator from Wisconsin wishes to move an amendment.

Mr. SPOONER. I move, in line 4, page 60, to strike out "thirteen" and to insert in lieu thereof "fifteen;" so as to read, "fifteen sanitary and food inspectors, at $1,200 each."

Mr. McCOMAS. Will the Senator allow an amendment to the amendment to make it "sixteen?"

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from Maryland will not insist upon amending it any further.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. I offer an amendment which will mitigate a great many of the evils under which we now labor. I propose to leave the health officer where he is and give him eight sanitary inspectors, to do with as he pleases.

I propose to give the useless deputy health officer some duties. It also does away with some officials who, I observe, have no duties that they understand. I send the amendment to the desk and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada will be stated.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to have the attention of the chairman of the committee to the amendment. I do not think he has studied this amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 60, line 5, after the word "dollars," it is proposed to strike out all down to and including the words "twenty dollars," in line 19, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

Eight sanitary inspectors, at a salary of $1,000 each; deputy health officer, who shall be well versed in meats, game, poultry, and marine products, $2,000 per annum; five inspectors of meats, game, poultry, and marine products, $1,000 each per annum, who shall be under the immediate control of the deputy health officer, who may suspend any of them at pleasure and report the same to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia; one milk inspector, who shall be familiar with the milk business and have a knowledge of chemistry relating to dairy products, whose duty it shall be to prevent the sale in the District of Columbia of any milk or cream which is not pure and free from any foreign substance used as a preservative, and that the bottles and other vessels in which milk is sold shall be filled only at licensed dairies or dairy farms, and that no cream or milk is retailed in the District of Columbia except from such dairy or dairy farms; six veterinary surgeons, at $1,200 each per annum, who shall be under the control of the milk inspector, and whose duty it shall be to inspect all dairy farms and other places where milk or cream is produced for sale in the District of Columbia; eight dairy inspectors, under the control of the milk inspector, at $1,000 each per annum, whose duty it shall be to inspect all places in the District of Columbia from which milk or cream is sold, and also to inspect all milk and cream brought into the District of Columbia for sale; and the milk inspector shall have power to suspend any inspector under his control and report the same to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia; one practical chemist in the health department, at an annual salary of $2,000; seven clerks, at $1,000 each.

Mr. STEWART. The amendment does not increase the number of officers, but it utilizes those that are there. The deputy health officer has no assigned duties by law, and I doubt whether he is very useful. He is more ornamental than useful, the way he is situated there. Then we place under the health officer eight inspectors for the general work. Then there are five for meat, and the deputy health officer has to be familiar with that business. He ought to go into the field and attend to this business, and not mix this thing up and send a man here and a man there without any order. Then there is a milk inspector, whom they have now, but he attends to various things. Let him be a man who is familiar with the milk business and give it his attention and have control of the inspectors. Then it provides for six inspectors of milk. Several bills that have been prepared in the health office have adopted the same number; they are to inspect the places from which the milk is produced. They are to be veterinary surgeons. Some have proposed four or five, but I think six will find themselves busy all the time, because there are several hundred of these places. Then there are eight dairy inspectors in the District. They are to see that no milk is sold except from licensed dairies and licensed dairy farms. They can attend to that.

Now, in this District there are about 2,000 places where milk is sold and of which there is no inspection. I examined the health officer in regard to that. He said there were from three to five hundred. He did not know how many, but a good many hundred. He corrected himself afterwards and said he had investigated it and that there were over 2,000 places that were not dairies and did not come under the inspection under the law. This amendment requires the bottles to be filled in like dairies.

The amendment is condensed in a few words, so as to reach pretty much everything there is in the milk bill. It gives for meat inspectors five men. It gives fourteen to attend to the milk. It gives eight men to the health officer to attend to other matters, but meat and milk and fish, etc., are the most important things to be looked after. This gives an organization. I should like to have the bill read as amended by the committee. I want to make some comments on that, to show that it is inadequate to reach the difficulty. I have no pride of authorship about the matter, but I have worked on this subject a good while, and I want to see some progress made toward decent inspection, which we have not now. Will the Secretary read the bill as amended, commencing with the "health department?"

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The health department, on page 60?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As amended?

Mr. STEWART. As amended by the committe. Then I want him to read it as I propose to amend it, so that the Senate can see the difference.

The Secretary read as follows:

HEALTH DEPARTMENT.

For health officer, $3,500; chief inspector and deputy health officer, $1,800; fifteen sanitary and food inspectors, at $1,200 each; sanitary and food inspector, who shall also inspect dairy products and shall be a practical chemist, $2,000; sanitary and food inspector, who shall be a veterinary surgeon and act as inspector of live stock and dairy farms, $1,200; inspector of marine products, $1,200; chief clerk and deputy health officer, $2,200; clerk, $1,400; four clerks, two of whom may act as sanitary and food inspectors, at $1,200 each; two clerks, at $1,000 each; clerk, $900; messenger and janitor, $600; pound master, $1,500; laborers, at not exceeding $40 per month, $1,920.

Mr. STEWART. The Secretary has now read far enough. Now read the amendment I have offered.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the whole provision had better be read.

Mr. STEWART. I do not care about taking it down any farther.

Mr. ALLISON. We have already amended it below that point.

Mr. STEWART. Well, read that, then.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the remainder of the paragraph.

The Secretary read as follows:

Ambulance driver, $540; four sanitary and food inspectors, who shall be veterinary surgeons, at $1,200 each, and three sanitary and food inspectors, at $900 each, to assist in the enforcement of the milk and pure-food laws and the regulations relating thereto; in all, $46,960: Provided, That no officer or employee of the health department shall, during his continuance in office, serve in his private capacity, for fee, gift, or reward, any person licensed to keep or maintain a dairy or dairy farm in said District or to bring or send milk into said District or any person who has applied or is about to apply for such license or any manufacturer or dealer in foods, drugs, disinfectants, or similar materials.

Mr. STEWART. Now I should like to ask the Secretary to read the paragraph as it would be if amended, commencing at page 60 with the health department.

The Secretary read as follows:

For health officer, $3,500; chief inspector and deputy health officer, $1,800——

Mr. STEWART. Now read that as I propose it shall be amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary has not quite reached the point in the reading where the amendment is to be inserted.

Mr. STEWART. Oh, yes; he has.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He will reach it in one second, if the Senator will wait.

Mr. STEWART. My amendment comes in immediately after the health officer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As the Senator offered the amendment——

Mr. STEWART. I want to amend it by inserting in line 2, after the word "dollars," the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator now offers his amendment at this point?

Mr. STEWART. Yes; in line 2, after the word "dollars." I was mistaken. I did not have the bill before me.

Mr. ALLISON. Where does the Senator have his amendment come in?

Mr. STEWART. In line 2, after the word "dollars."

The Secretary read as follows:

For health officer, $3,500; eight sanitary inspectors, at a salary of $1,000 each; deputy health officer, who shall be well versed in meats, game, poultry, and marine products, $2,000 per annum; five inspectors of meats, game, poultry, and marine products, $1,000 each per annum, who shall be under the immediate control of the deputy health officer, who may suspend any of them at pleasure and report the same to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia; one milk inspector, who shall be familiar with the milk business and have a knowledge of chemistry relating to dairy products, whose duty it shall be to prevent the sale in the District of Columbia of any milk or cream which is not pure and free from any foreign substance used as a preservative, and that the bottles and other vessels in which milk is sold shall be filled only at licensed dairies or dairy farms and that no cream or milk is retailed in the District of Columbia except from such dairy or dairy farms; six veterinary surgeons, at $1,300 each per annum, who shall be under the control of the milk inspector, and whose duty it shall be to inspect all dairy farms and other places where milk or cream is produced for sale in the District of Columbia; eight dairy inspectors, under the control of the milk inspector, at $1,000 each per annum, whose duty it shall be to inspect all places in the District of Columbia from which milk or cream is sold and also to inspect all milk and cream brought into the District of Columbia for sale, and the milk inspector shall have power to suspend any inspector under his control and report the same to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia; one practical chemist in the health department, at an annual salary of $2,000; seven clerks, at $1,000 each.
